A GIRL WITH GREEN CHEEKS WILL ATTRACT ATTENTION—BUT SHE WON'T HAVE MANY SUITORS!

TO "attract" and to "be attractive" are two very different things. A really great poster artist always has that difference in mind. He knows that a poster which shows a woman with green cheeks and purple lips, and an eye located where a nose is usually placed, will always attract attention. He also knows how easy it is to make a design of that sort. Anybody can do it! It only requires bad drawing, and worse color.

But, he also knows how utterly futile such a design really is. Not one person in a thousand will buy a ticket to see the deformed and crippled actors depicted. And even the exceptions will prefer a circus side show, where they can see genuine freaks!

The bizarre poster never has and never will sell tickets. It attracts, without being attractive. It is the easiest kind of poster to make, but it absolutely lacks all advertising value.

To make a poster that attractively depicts real people, in a situation that arouses an elemental human emotion, is to produce a poster that is bound to be a box-office success! If "all the world loves a lover" it is doubly fond of a pair of lovers, and whenever they are properly, convincingly, artistically depicted on a poster, the entire public will gladly pay its money to see such parts enacted!

To produce posters that make an elemental emotional appeal, and that make such an appeal in a convincing manner, is no easy matter. It requires the services of an entire organization of advertising experts, poster artists and poster printers. Back of such a design must lie a tremendous knowledge. A knowledge of mob psychology, a knowledge of human anatomy, a knowledge of artistic and natural coloring.

There is only one organization in the world that has this essential poster knowledge, and that organization is the glow with happiness !

It Beats!

When "23½ Hours' Leave" came out exhibitors said, "It can't be beaten!"

But "What's Your Husband Doing?" beat it!

Now comes "Mary's Ankle," with the same amazing stars, another zippy, snappy story, with subtitles that are a riot,

And a title that's a box-office winner anywhere!

"Mary's Ankle" beats them both, and it will beat any light comedy you ever showed.

LIFE'S WASTERS, ALL OF THEM

BEAUTIFUL moths clustering in the flame of a rich man's favor, while he plays fast and loose with the only one worth while—the absent girl who is ignorant of his perfidy.

That's the theme on which HAROLD MacGRATH has built a story that carries your audience spellbound around the world — into the dark corners, even, where civilization has scarcely dared venture. Vivid, colorful scenes run through this picture as thread through a loom.

"THE LUCK OF THE IRISH"

An ALLAN DWAN Production

THE determination of a strong man to protect the girl he loves from the wiles of a scoundrel. So he stalked them both across the world. When he brought his man to bay in picturesque Singapore, a fight ensues that for savage intensity has had few equals.

Does the right triumph?

Well, you know the Irish — and you know their luck.

Hold these facts in mind: "The Luck of the Irish" has punch and thrill and humor and sparkle.

And all of these qualities give the new Dwan special a definite box-office pull, that will make it a smashing hit with live exhibitors.

WHAT MORE COULD YOU ASK?

"THE Luck of the Irish" will get the money; the Los Angeles showing proved this for a solid week! It beats laughing gas for fun. It's a love story — starts with the love theme and sticks like a lover to it. The action is tense—plots, intrigue and enough barefisted fighting to keep your patrons gripping the arms of their chairs. It's a whale of a story that leaps into action as from the pages of a book and seizes and holds attention.

"Dangerous Hours"

BY C. GARDNER SULLIVAN

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

They will Clamor to See It in Your Theatre

JUST as crowds are clamoring to see "Dangerous Hours" at the Broadway Theatre, New York, where it opened this week for an indefinite run, they will clamor to see it when you show it in your theatre.

Because it is vivid—spectacular—timely. Because it is a notable picturization of the present crisis. Because it is based on a subject that lies close to the heart of every American.

"Dangerous Hours" is not propaganda. It is a powerfully thrilling spectacle, wonderfully acted and produced on a tremendous scale.

You will find this layout in the press book. It is the four column newspaper advertisement.

Advertise this production as it deserves.

Open Letters to American Producers. III.

On Publicity and Prestige

To lay the foundation of its position as the leading British organization of Film Distributors, "The Great Filmway" decided to choose Publicity as its base.

Publicity they recognized was the dynamic power necessary to generate that force which spells success.

The result is that today, to the British Exhibitor, the F.B.O. token on a Feature is the seal of success.

Publicity begets prestige—and prestige begets the one reward that matters—big prices and reputation.

Publicity with F.B.O. has become a greater force than ever. The American Producer who entrusts his Productions to "The Great Filmway" ensures for his output the highest prestige and the utmost limit of publicity. He is building on the rock!

We "put the goods over!" A long list of successes stands to our credit on the roll-call of Distribution organizations.

We have only space to quote one example—out of a score or more. The Feature cited was, for nearly a year, the classical example of "how to get the goods over."

Here are the bare details of the Publicity effected:

Private Views were given on TWO CONSECUTIVE DAYS at TWO LEADING WEST-END PICTURE THEATRES, to audiences numbering amongst them 4,000 of the leading Politicians, Publicists and Exhibitors.

At the various Private Views the audience numbered amongst them:

Thirty-One Ambassadors.
Sixteen Agents-General.
Thirty Peers of the Realm.
Eighty Members of The House of Commons.
200 Members of the Aristocracy.
200 Leading Clergymen.
Six Bishops.
The Lord Mayors, Mayors, Lord Provosts, and the principal City Officers of the leading Cities in the United Kingdom.

Forceful F.B.O. Publicity helped us to create for this Film a new standard for takings at the leading West-End Picture House, where it broke all previous records, exceeding "The Battle of The Somme" week record by $2,000.

What we did for that especial Film we have achieved for other TWO SUPER-FEATURES.

Those Publicity Campaigns achieved for us an unparalleled reputation for exploiting Film Features.

That Publicity force is at your disposal. It MEANS PRESTIGE TO YOU—the biggest asset of a business.

Don't cogitate! Translate your thought to action. Get in touch with us today!

Write or cable us and we will provide you with some solid satisfying facts about "The Great Filmway."

Our financial standing is such that we are prepared to pay cash on sight for any production we handle.

WE WELCOME COMPARISON

There's one sure fire method of knowing what goods are the best—that method is by comparison. Therefore we urge you to see all other news weeklies, then go to your nearest Universal exchange and see the BIG three—HEARST NEWS, INTERNATIONAL NEWS and UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS.

With half an eye you will see the smart superiority of the BIG THREE. You'll instantly see the bigger scoops, the more fascinating news pictures, the better variety, the bigger ideas in every detail. ...AND WHY NOT, please? With the mightiest news gathering organization in the world covering every section of the globe, it stands to reason that the BIG THREE should be bigger and better and ARE bigger and better.

Sidestep advertising statements. Let your own eyes be the judge. Make the test TODAY. It's a hundred to one you'll sign up for the BIG THREE after making comparisons.

A Wonderful Entertainment and a Wonderful Drawing Card

Mary Pickford in
"POLLYANNA"
United Artists Corp.

DIRECTOR .... Paul Powell

AUTHORS..........Eleanor Porter and Catherine Chisholm Cushing.

SCENARIO BY .... Frances Marion

CAMERAMAN .... Charles Rosher

AS A WHOLE........Wonderful drawing card and sure to please more than any picture Mary has had in at least a year.

STORY....They admit it's not a story; just a "rainbow" and it surely is pretty.

DIRECTION......Allows star plenty of chances to work in her kid comedy and pathos; material handled cleverly and appreciatively.

PHOTOGRAPHY .... Excellent

CAMERAWORK......Particularly remarkable in the rain sequence.

STAR......Appears as a youngster throughout; will add to her list of admirers if such a thing is possible.

INTERIORS .... Highly appropriate

CHARACTER OF STORY........Pollyanna brings light into various peoples' lives by playing her "glad" game.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,500 feet

They admit in a foreword that "Pollyanna" isn't the usual picture story and term it a "rainbow," and there's not a person in the world that won't stop and rave over a rainbow. Certainly this picture, based on the book and the play of the same title, is going to capture the heart and soul of every audience that sees it. "Pollyanna" is going to "get" them, be sure of that, and it won't be at all surprising if it makes the best record that ever a Pickford picture made.

The picture alternates between laughs and crys. It is one of those that "makes dimples to catch the tears." It starts with a tear when Pollyanna is shown trying to play her glad game over her father's death and before that tear has trickled past the nose the dimple is made to catch it by the wonderfully funny rain-storm sequence showing Pollyanna leaving the train at the little New England village and being greeted by her aunt's maid.

Thus it runs throughout, with Pollyanna and her glad game warming the heart of her hardened old aunt and everyone else in the village until at last they all come to a realization of what she means to them when she is run over by an automobile. The specialist says she will never walk again but the village doctor, her aunt's old sweetheart, cures her and so ends his own love affair happily and sends Pollyanna into the waiting arms of Jimmie Bean, her juvenile admirer.

It is the wonderful bits of kid comedy introduced by the star and Howard Ralston who plays Jimmie and the very unusual subtitles that are responsible for the laughs. And there is one moment of sweeping drama in the picture when Pollyanna walks again. That's great.

Besides young Ralston the supporting cast includes Katherine Griffith as the aunt, Herbert Prior as the village doctor, William Courtleigh, Helen Jerome Eddy, George Berrell and J. Wharton James.

Star and Play Combination Should Break All Pickford Records

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Of course Mary Pickford is a tremendous drawing card but unless the guess is all wrong "Pollyanna" is going to even outdraw all her previous hits because it has another box office angle besides the star, and that is the vast popularity of the play and the book on which the picture is based. As a result you can consider the box office value of this picture practically double that of the Pickford pictures of the past.

And the popularity of the "Pollyanna" play and book is no empty press agent talk. It's fact. To drive it home make mention of the author's names in your advertising and state that it is the "glad play." If they've forgotten the name of "Pollyanna," which is hardly probable, this "glad play" line will recall it all to them.

After you have so advertised the picture all you need do is take out extra insurance on your theater—it may be damaged in the rush for seats. Dust off your S. R. O. sign, reinforce your box office and let 'em come. Records are sure to be broken with Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna."

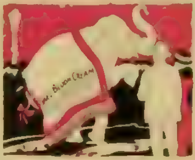
They were also broke. That is, until Floss concocted a face cream she hoped would make things rosier.

Floss advertised it with an elephant. The beast chose an awkward moment to fall in a faint.



And she was pinched. All of which made wonderful publicity for Angel Bloom Cream. Presto--prosperity!

"It takes a mighty good screen actress to make me cry," a lot of exhibitors will say. Granted, but see Marguerite De La Motte in "The Sagebrusher."

"Roy Stewart's fine in big outdoor pictures, but I can't picture him being romantic." Some will say that. Well, see him in "The Sagebrusher."

And as for Noah Beery: This fine actor just gets your heart so soft and sentimental in "The Sagebrusher" that you find it hard to keep from swallowing your Adam's apple.

Audiences Always Like This Kind of Picture

An heir to a fortune advertises for "a temporary wife" in order to inherit his father's money.

A scheming woman spreads ruin that causes death and unhappiness.

The lovely "bride-to-be" who answers the advertisement is the discharged nurse who, without knowing it, has the fortune in her own hands.

Here is the basis of a good melodrama and a tense, interesting love story—well told and well cast.

Critics may differ about this type of a story, but the public always approves.

Every member of this cast has been starred, co-starred or featured in many screen successes. The picture affords excellent exploitation opportunities.

From the notable stage success by

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

Directed by GEORGE IRVING

Leah Baird productions have, under Hodkinson distribution, constantly stepped upward into bigger and bigger first run theatres.

"As A Man Thinks," "The Volcano," "The Capitol," all three by Augustus Thomas; "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" by Louis Joseph Vance are screen dramas that make a star attain higher levels and greater popularity.

"The Capitol," now playing the first runs of the large cities, has topped all previous booking records of the Leah Baird productions.

She thought him a burglar—and he was destined to play the most important role in her life.

"You had some affair at Reno?" suggested the colonel, and watched her with the evil eye of a vulture.

She recoiled in fear, for this rich clubman was known to be a man without scruples.

"Where's the fire?" demanded the little cripple, answering her bell—and she knew that she was safe.

She leaned forward breathless, for he lay where he fell, this man whom she had denied love.

"I am through with society," he said—and she knew it was the turning point.

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

"So you are the woman," she said, "for whose indiscretions the world has pointed the finger of scorn at me."

"You are making good my boy!" Her heart sang with joy at the words, for she knew she had won.

She struggled desperately in his grasp, fighting, and hoping some one would come.

The colonel suddenly released her and she turned to see the man she loved in the hall.

She trembled with fear, then her heart leaped with joy, glorying in the strength of her lover.

Came the day when they two were alone—in the garden by the sea.

THE CONFESSION

By HAL REID, starring HENRY WALTHALL and all-star cast

What the papers say:

San Francisco Examiner:

We used to think the stage drama powerful, thrilling and artistic; but the screen version makes the original play seem like a prologue.

"Confession" came yesterday to the Rialto, and it need not surprise anybody if it stays there the rest of the winter. It is a great, strong story, intensely dramatic and of broad human appeal.

San Francisco Chronicle:

"Confession" is thrilling entertainment. It gains control of the emotions and enthralls the viewer with the magnitude of the unseen forces which direct the actions of its characters.

A beautiful love story, convincingly human characters such as Dumont, the guilty man, Michael Dugan and Patsy, the latter pair providing a great deal of comic relief, are elements which make "Confession" an appealing screen drama.

The latest news is from the

in San Francisco, where net profits for one week's showing after deducting war tax, were

$10,500

On the strength of this, "The Confession" was booked for two more weeks!

A Vitagraph—Larry Semon Comedy

Written and Directed by

LARRY SEMON

The village loafer gets a molasses massage.

Here's the cat that SHIMMIES!

A Chaos of Comedy—A Havoc of Hilarity!

The famous old bull in the china shop becomes as tame as a poodle dog on parade and that beloved king of mischief makers, Peck's Bad Boy seems like a curly haired mother's darling when compared to the chaos of comedy and the havoc of hilarity that Larry causes in his good old-fashioned, unsuspecting country store that forms the setting this time for another of his roaring rampages. Here is a comedy that will give you hiccups with your ha-ha's. One laugh walks right on the heels of the other. A bit of fly-paper makes a cat do the shimmy; soot makes black men out of white, flour makes white men out of black; the cheese walks off the counter and goes out for an airing; a mouse fills up on some sort of "hootch" and chases the cat out of the scene and General Uproar takes command of the situation.

That Percentage Thing

ONE of the live topics of discussion among exhibitors and distributors is that of percentage. It is a subject on which opinions are as far apart as the poles. Take at random any average exhibitor and any average exchangeman and ask an opinion of percentage booking and you may take it for granted you are going to get two versions as to the equity of percentage booking — one will condemn it and the other will praise it.

Two southern exhibitors, partners, expressed views widely at variance with those of the executive head of a large distributing company. The two showmen declared the whole scheme as it was worked out was one-sided. They compared the methods employed by picture men with those used by managers of stage shows—the latter taking a chance on losing as well as winning, whereas the exchanges, they said, insisted first on being assured against loss. "Why should an exhibitor who out of nothing has built up a great and thriving business suffer himself to be converted into the janitor of his own establishment?" inquired one of the partners.

"If the exchanges want to book on percentages let them eliminate the guarantee," he went on. "Let us play the game straight—both parties stand to win or lose on an even footing. As it goes down our way the exchangeman has 'got his' or at least a good part of his normal rental before the exhibitor begins to count any money. The stage folks play the game differently. Recently in one of our houses a traveling company played a week's stand on a seventy-thirty basis. The figure was right, as it cost $6,200 to maintain that company for seven days. We both won as it turned out, but also we both stood to lose."

It was the other side of the shield held up by the executive referred to. Percentage is the only system, he declared, by which makers of big pictures can hope to get back the money they have invested in production. He cited the case of a subject on which $250,000 was expended for the negative. That sum, he said, was looked upon by the exhibitor as representing the whole cost. The theatre owner, said the executive, overlooked the important item of exploitation, which in the case of a quarter-million-dollar production might involve an additional expense of $100,000.

The executive readily conceded that the larger the theatre—i. e., the one having the larger overhead—the smaller must be the percentage demanded by the exchangeman. He related incidents connected with the showings of two remarkably successful pictures. In the case of the first it was put on the screens of three big houses in one city, day and date—all three houses being under one control. The three theatres played to average business. The second subject was handled differently. It was put into one house and played for three weeks at an increased admission price. Where the average intake had been $5,000 weekly the returns under the new arrangement totaled $17,000, $12,000 and $9,000.

The same executive cited another case where a prominent exhibitor had become a convert to the percentage plan. Last summer the showman, who owns several houses in one large city, was so heavily extended financially that he did not expect to be clear of mortgages for three years. As an experiment he consented to take one house the top receipts of which were a little over $4,000 weekly, increase the admission price and play on a percentage the larger subjects of the company. As a result the receipts now average $12,000, of which a third go to the distributor. The exhibitor, it was declared, today has money in the bank and no outstanding mortgages.

A fair plan for the employment of percentage, as this executive sees the situation, is for the allotment to the theatre of a sum equivalent to its overhead and a nominal profit; then set aside for the exchange an amount that will represent part of the expenses, but not enough to yield a real profit, and then for the two parties to split fifty-fifty. As an illustration the distributor instanced one case where an exhibitor declined to pay $3,000 for a week's run of a production. The showman accepted a proposition that $3,000 was to be set aside for him to cover overhead and a small profit, the exchange was to take $1,000 and all over the $4,000 was to be divided evenly. The result was that the exchange received a sum largely in excess of the original rental.

The writer talked with William H. Swanson and Harry T. Nolan, partners in an exchange and in theatres. "Percentage?" said Mr. Nolan. "Yes, we have been playing percentages for a year. What's the matter with the percentage idea?"

"Why do you ask me about percentages?" asked "Bill" Swanson. "You've been around a long time. If you are strong on recollections you will remember that in or about 1910 I made the statement that the time must come when the producer would be permitted to share in the profits of the theatre—and also, don't forget, in the losses."

"You mean, if in the losses, more care is bound to be taken in production?"

"Exactly."

Jake Wells said from his knowledge of the percentage plan he saw no objection to it, although admitting that so far as concerned the houses in which he was most interested the matter of booking was in hands other than his own. "If any one has a picture he wants to try out and is willing to pay half the expense of advertising, furnish paper, etc., and it is a case of fifty-fifty it seems a pretty safe bet. In a recent case of two big pictures I wish they had been booked on the percentage idea. I might have made some money instead of losing a couple of hundred dollars."

The proprietor of a suburban house, the only place of amusement in his community, was strongly opposed to a percentage plan. "I am willing to pay the rental and assume the profits or losses," he said. "I do not believe in letting any one else manage my house. If we accede to the percentage plan we are at the mercy of the distributor. If we hold out against it he will have to rent us his films. I have advised every exhibitor I know to refuse to book on percentage. I declined to run one big subject because I was convinced my patrons would not like it. I was told I was crazy, but I am the best judge of what my regular patrons want."

A salesman expressed sympathy with exhibitors who refuse to book on the percentage plan, saying in his opinion it means turning over a house to the distributor and giving away its whole business.

A feature manager declared his belief that it is only a question of time before all the associated organizations would come to the percentage basis.

In Baltimore a fortnight ago the Exhibitors' League voted to refuse to open their houses on the percentage plan. Twenty out of thirty-four showmen by formal vote declared for a bond of $100 to be posted by each as an evidence of intention to abide by the resolution. Bitter things were said by some of the speakers, all indicating a strong feeling against percentage booking or anything savoring of it.

A committee of the New York state league, at a meeting this week, declared against percentage bookings and in favor of a uniform contract.

One of the chief objections to the plan seems to be that as a result of its working out the distributor derives intimate knowledge of the business done by an exhibitor.

One of the chief arguments in its favor seems to be that advanced by the distributing executive quoted previously — that by means of it producers will be enabled more securely to finance expensive pictures.

That Percentage Thing is a big problem, one of the big ones of the industry. Men of influence and means say it has got to come. Others and numerous others, not without influence and means, declare it shall not come. And there you are.

G. P. Harleman, Long Stanch in World Service, Dies

GUSTAVE P. HARLEMAN, west coast business manager of Moving Picture World, died Tuesday afternoon, February 3, at the Presbyterian Hospital, New York City, after an illness lasting since January 22. He was taken ill of influenza at the time when the epidemic was affecting many New York people and bronchial pneumonia developed. The end came suddenly when he was thought to be on the road to recovery, and was a great shock to his business associates and to the hundreds of people in the industry who knew him and liked him. He was 38 years old. Funeral arangements await the arrival of his brother in New York City.

Mr. Harleman left Los Angeles a few weeks ago to gratify a desire of long standing to visit New York City again, renew old acquaintances and make new friendships. He was taken ill and removed from his apartments to the hospital a week prior to his death.

Few people in the industry knew Mr. Harleman better than did James S. McQuade, Chicago representative of Moving Picture World, and it is fitting that Mr. McQuade, one of the older members of this journal's staff, should relate the characteristics which made the man beloved by all with whom he came in contact.

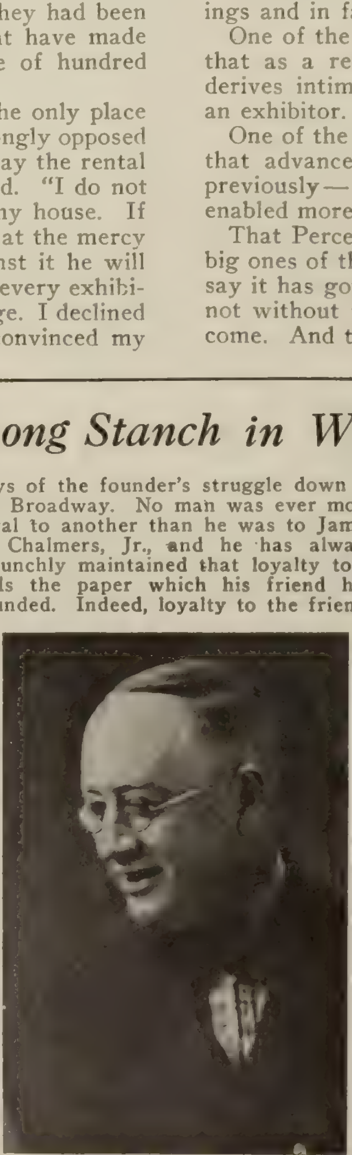
Mr. Harleman has been connected with Moving Picture World since the days of the founder's struggle down at 363 Broadway. No man was ever more loyal to another than he was to James P. Chalmers, Jr., and he has always staunchly maintained that loyalty towards the paper which his friend had founded. Indeed, loyalty to the friends whom he had chosen among the many people whom he knew was the keynote of Mr. Harleman's character.



G. P. Harleman

Whose death on February 3 took from Moving Picture World's staff one of its oldest and stanchest members.

In the early days the founder usually took Mr. Harleman along with him when he was about to solicit a knotty subject for advertising, as he had great confidence in his ability as a business getter and in his method of interesting the person interviewed.

Went to Chicago in 1910.

The writer first met Mr. Harleman in 1910, when he came on to Chicago as business representative of the World, with headquarters in the old Journal building on West Washington street. We were opponents then, as I was on Film Index at the time, and we took a delight in scooping each other in the advertising line. It was always a question of meeting with swords drawn in those days and we did not really know each other until 1911, when the Film Index was absorbed by the Moving Picture World and I was added to the editorial staff.

In 1915, owing to serious throat affections due to the severity of Chicago winters, Mr. Harleman was transferred to Los Angeles, where he filled the position of business manager up to the time of his death.

As I knew him, Mr. Harleman was a man of wide culture and attainments. He wrote and spoke fluently French, German and English, in addition to his mother tongue, the Swedish. He was a musician of no mean parts and I have often been delighted by his talented rendition of selections on the piano.

Mr. Harleman came from a distinguished Swedish family. His father is a colonel in the Swedish army and he himself was a second lieutenant in what we would call the national guard before leaving the mother country for this.

He was a duly naturalized citizen at the time of his death and was at the disposal of the army authorities in Los Angeles during the war just closed. An affection of the eyes, however, militated against active service.

Mr. Harleman's untimely death comes to me with such grievous shock that I am unequal for the moment to the task of doing his memory full justice. I can only say in the silence that enwraps his spirit, farewell.

Appreciation from Mr. Giebler.

A. H. Giebler, Mr. Harleman's associate in the Los Angeles office of Moving Picture World, has telegraphed as follows:

I am greatly shocked and grieved at the news of Mr. Harleman's death. "Von" was well liked by members of the picture colony on the Coast. He had a large circle of friends among the players. The possession of a wide knowledge gained through travel, a cultured mind and a ready wit, combined with a quiet dignity of bearing, made him a delightful companion and gained him the name of a good fellow from all with whom he came in contact.

"Von" could play the piano like a master. He had read many books and what he did not know about birds and fish is not worth knowing. In spite of his acquaintances "Von" led rather a quiet life. He liked to read, and just before he left here for the East he was deeply interested in the comparative study of languages. His greatest hobbies were goldfish and birds, and he wrote article of a scientific character on fish and bird love that appeared in magazines in Europe and America.

Minneapolis Men Favor Federal Tax Reduction

Minneapolis, February 5.

ACCORDING to an announcement by the Exhibitors' Protective League at its monthly meeting in Minneapolis yesterday, it has gone on record as favoring the reduction of federal taxes. The present taxes on films were said to be exorbitant and the directors were instructed to work in every way possible for a reduction, according to resolutions adopted.

H. L. Mitchell, executive secretary, and several directors went to Fardo, N. D., immediately after the meeting to assist in perfecting the state organization on February 4 and 5, to combat Sunday closing and censorship legislation.

The "flu" epidemic is decreasing materially in the city, Dr. F. E. Harrington, health commissioner, announced to-day. Virtually all restrictions on motion picture theatres have been removed. The fumigation of theatres is the only precaution being taken now.

Oklahoma Showmen Declare Against Films Depicting Ex-Convict Careers

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

PLEDGING themselves to a voluntary censorship against so-called "Bandit films" in which are depicted the careers or alleged careers of ex-convicts and outlaws, but opposing any legislation by congress on this subject for fear it will seriously affect the freedom of the screen, the annual convention of the Theatre Managers and Owners' Association of Oklahoma adjourned February 4, following a two-day session.

The resolution approves the sentiment of the State Bar Associations in going on record against "bandit pictures." It follows: "Resolved that the Theatre Owners and Managers' Association of the State of Oklahoma, in convention assembled, does hereby declare itself unalterably opposed to the production or exhibition of any motion pictures made by persons discharged from penitentiaries or prisons and depicting therewith their careers of crime."

Halt Congressional Action.

A long telegram was sent to Senator T. P. More and Congressman Harrell, who have introduced a bill on subject in the House and Senate at the request of the State Bar Association, asking that they withdraw the pending legislation and pledging the motion picture exhibitors of the state to carry out the remedial measure proposed in the bills. Attention was called by the theatre men to the fact that two years ago they went on record against "immoral films of all kinds" and since that time malicious screen productions have not been shown in the state.

The fact that they kept faith on the question of immoral films is pointed to as an indication that they will likewise ban the bandit pictures.

"The law proposed by Senator Gore and Congressman Harreld," said Ralph Talbot, president of the association, in discussing the action of the body, "would establish a dangerous precedent with reference to the freedom of the screen as it might prevent the showing of even the purest typ of pictures. It would also bar from the state productions such as are made by William S. Hart and other actors who essay western roles. The exhibitors of the state will enforce the resolution adopted by us today to the letter and anyone who fails to do so will be dealt with by our association."

Officers Elected.

Ralph Talbot, of Tulsa, was re-elected president of the association. Other officers are: Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City, vice president; A. B. Momand, Shawnee, secretary; H. W. McCall, Oklahoma City, treasurer. About three hundred theatre men attended the convention. This was the largest attendance in the history of the organization. Various film distributing companies had displays covering the entire sixth floor of the Leehuckins Hotel. It was announced that the Fox Film Corporation, the Vitagraph Company and Select Pictures Corporation would soon establish branch offices in Oklahoma City. Practically all the other large companies now have offices here and as soon as the three named have opened offices in the city, Kansas City and Dallas will be entirely eliminated as distributing centers for Oklahoma.

Stillwell to Build Big House in Spokane

A THEATRE of 2,500 seating capacity and to cost more than $700,000, will be erected in the heart of Spokane's (Wash.) district by the Stillwell Theatres Corporation. The finances, plans and all larger details are completed, and the theatre will be ready for occupancy early in the fall of this year.

It will be a combination picture house and "legitimate" theatre, the plans calling for complete stage equipment to accomodate the largest traveling road attractions.

The project will be financed entirely by local capital and will be controlled by C. E. Stillwell, who now operates the Casino and Class A theatres in Spokane, and who has been one of the most successful theatre managers in Spokane for more than ten years.

Quebec Censors Will Pass on Films for Quebec City

THE civic authorities of Quebec City, Quebec, decided to establish their own censorship bureau for the examination of all releases to be presented in local picture theatres. This decision was reached several months ago and it was intended that the civic censors would pass upon pictures after they had been approved by the Board of Moving Picture Censors for the whole province.

Power for the establishment of the civic bureau of censors was sought from the provincial legislature now in session at Quebec. The result has been that the private bills committee of the Legislature has decided against the proposal and the clause of the Quebec Bill which would give the city the privilege of establishing a local censorship has been struck out. This means that the city fathers of Quebec City will have to be satisfied with the present Provincial censorship of moving pictures.

It has been intimated that the Quebec legislature will consider a proposal for the censorship of all moving picture advertising, including newspaper displays, lobby displays and posters, for the whole province. This is similar to the step recently taken in the province of Ontario, where the Government, by an order-in-council, has established a distinct board of censors for the examination of picture advertising. All posters for pictures are already censored by the Quebec Board, but it is intimated that all other advertising details will also have to be passed upon, providing the legislature reaches a decision in the matter.

Maryland Lawmakers May Regulate Theatre Prices

THE regulating of charges for admission to theatres and the prohibiting of smoking in theatres and moving picture theatres are included in two bills which have been brought before the Maryland legislature, now in session.

The regulating of admission charges is included in a bill which was introduced in the House on Friday morning, January 30, by Delegate George D. Iverson, Jr., of Baltimore. This bill plans to create a commission which will be invested with almost unlimited powers of control over commodities and foodstuffs and wages of various persons. This commission would be known as the Public Service Welfare and Industrial Commission and would be composed of nine members. It is aimed to overcome the high cost of living.

The provisions in the bill which would affect moving picture theatres are as follows: Regulating charge of admission and general supervision of hotels, theatres, garages and other public places; regulating and determining the wages and earnings of employes earning less than $39 a week; regulating and determining the number of hours of labor that may be required of employes.

The bill to prohibit smoking in theatres and moving picture theatres was introduced in the House on Monday night, January 26, by Delegate Harper and was referred to the Public Buildings Committee. It is understood that this bill has been killed. Several managers said they thought it would be a good thing and would not fight it.

Blank Denies Merging of Interests with Abe Frankle

A. H. BLANK, of Des Moines, upon his return from New York denied that he had merged his Des Moines interests with those of Abe Frankle. He did not deny that the deal was under consideration.

Blank is reported as having had an offer from Goldwyn for a part interest in his Des Moines holdings. According to the story, Goldwyn would build a new house in Des Moines to be operated by Blank in connection with his other houses. Goldwyn would also secure booking rights at the twenty Blank theatres in Iowa, Nebraska, and Missouri. Men in close touch with the Des Moines film man said that he had received the offer but had made no decision. Blank returned to New York for further conferences.

Des Moines is sure to get a new theatre this year if either the Blank-Frankle or Blank-Goldwyn deal goes through. Frankle has secured a ninety-nine year lease on the downtown corner now occupied by the Royal and Majestic theatres, and had planned an $800,000 office and theatre building. This house will be built at once with Blank as a partner if the merger is completed.

A Goldwyn-Blank house will also be the result if the other plan goes through.

Blank now has three houses in Des Moines, including the new $500,000 Des Moines. Frankle has three houses also.

Flames Ruin Interior of Pittsburgh Theatre

FIRE starting in the rear of the old Park Theatre, 4609-11-13 Butler street, Pittsburgh, Thursday night. January 29, destroyed the entire interior of the structure, causing damage estimated at $35,000. The fire started in the rear of the theatre, and when the firemen arrived they found the flames shooting out of the building and endangering adjoining property.

The theatre, which is owned by J. P. McConnell, was scheduled to open Thursday, February 5, under the management of the Brighton Amusement Company. The building had just been remodeled. A number of fires had been left burning in the rear of the building to dry the paint and newly plastered walls. One of these stoves is thought to have become overheated.

Mr. McConnell stated that his damage was about $10,000, which is partly covered by insurance. He said that the Brighton Amusement Company had spent over $45,000 in remodeling the building and estimated their damage at $25,000.

Merle E. Smith, Kleine General Manager, Dies

The death of Mr. Smith will be a severe blow to Mr. Kleine. The two men were the closest of friends, and Mr. Kleine had confided to his intimates his intention to lean more and more heavily on the younger man in coming years.

Milwaukee Club Elects J. S. Sothers President

AT a meeting of the F. I. L. M. Association of Milwaukee, held at the City Club, Friday, January 30, J. S. Sothers, Vitagraph, was elected president to succeed William Aschman, resigned, and George Levine, local Universal manager, was made vice-president.

The association has a 100 per cent. membership among the local exchanges, the following being the members: J. S. Sothers, Vitagraph; William Aschman, Pathe; Ray Smith, Ray Smith Company; George Levine, Universal; F. Therwachter, United-Triangle; Frank Hensler, Hallmark; Harold Fitzgerald, First National; Bert Hadfield, Wisconsin Film Company; Jack Camp, Metro; Walter A. Baier, Walter A. Baier Film Company; J. Klar, Robertson-Cole; Roy Langford, Wisconsin Theatre Supply Company, and I. F. Rink; Super Attractions Film Company.

Close co-operation with the Chicago and Minneapolis clubs has resulted in a very efficient organization in Milwaukee. The Milwaukee club meets at the City Club every Friday in the month at a midday luncheon.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Request Representation

THAT the motion picture group of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce is being looked upon as an important factor in the affairs of the motion picture industry in the territory is evident from the recent application of the Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania for representation on the "group's" adjustment committee.

The application, the outcome of a meeting called specifically for discussing the formation of the exchange managers' association, was filed with Harry M. White, chairman, by John S. Evans, who was delegated to represent the exhibitors' interests. Mr. Evans explained that the appointment of two members of his association to the adjustment committee would result in the exhibitors giving their heartiest endorsement to the new organization and would eliminate any suspicion in their minds of unfairness on the part of the exchangemen.

In discussing the application, Mr. White declared he was certain the exhibitors would be granted their request at the next meeting inasmuch as it will bring the exhibitors into a closer bond of relationship, the end towards which the exchangemen have been striving.

Would Ask Passport from Stock Company Members

EACH member of a company desiring to leave the United States for the purpose of making a picture in a foreign country would be compelled to procure a passport under the terms of a bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Porter, chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. Mr. Porter wants to compel all persons desiring to go abroad to pay toward the support of our consular service.

There is a great deal of opposition to the bill. It is declared that it would give the Government too much power to regulate the travel of American citizens, carrying over into times of peace the war powers of the Government, which is highly undesirable and would permit the carrying out of grievances by those in charge or the use of influence to prevent the issuance of a passport.

The bill also provides for increasing the charge for a passport from $1 to $10, and the charge for the vise of a passport by an American consular agent abroad from $1 to $4. This may be adopted, as the desire is to make the consular service self-supporting as far as possible.

Seek Ways to Prosecute Writers of Bad Checks

THE executive committee of the Washington Exchange Managers Association has been directed to make a compilation of the laws of the various states in the territory having to do with fraudulent checks. While the number of checks received by the managers that come back unhonored by the banks is small, the association intends stopping the practice altogether.

At a recent meeting of the association it developed that one exhibitor in a nearby state had favored nearly every member present with checks in payment for service, which were not backed by the necessary funds.

In all probability a number of prosecutions will be brought in each state. This will probably prove sufficient, for in Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina there are laws that are quite drastic and the managers will take advantage of them. The managers are not particularly anxious to undertake any court action and will not unless the cases involve a continuous practice or are particularly aggravating and constitute an unfair practice on the part of the exhibitor.

Jamestown Clergy Wants a Censorship Committee

THE Ministerial Alliance of Jamestown, N. Y., has requested Mayor Samuel Carson to appoint a committee to censor all moving picture and vaudeville shows. Not only will the duty of this committee be to prevent "questionable moving pictures and vaudeville acts from appearing in this city," but the committee would also "prevent billboard and newspaper advertising of a questionable character."

The Alliance asks that the mayor appoint the censorship committee from the different organizations engaged in the moral betterment of the city, which, in the opinion of the theatre men, means that the churchmen insist that they are the people who should absolutely control not only their bookings but also their publicity. The Alliance goes on record as approving state censorship and has directed the secretary to communicate this information to the local representatives in the state senate and assembly.

The Alliance charges that the law regarding children under 16 years of age attending theatres unaccompanied is being flagrantly violated. It will ask the mayor to prosecute theatre men who admit such children when not accompanied by parent or guardian.

Screen Theatre to Replace Famous Tabor Opera House

THE Tabor Grand Opera House, Denver, thirty-nine years ago the largest and finest theatre outside of New York City, will be razed to make way for a $1,000,000 moving picture theatre to be jointly operated by the Goldwyn Film Corporation and the Bishop-Cass Investment Company, of Denver.

Just how soon the work of razing the old playhouse will start is uncertain, for L. B. VicRoy, present manager, declares that his lease does not expire until September, 1921, and that he intends booking vaudeville performances until the expiration of the lease. It is believed, however, that the investment company will make VicRoy a satisfactory proposal in a few weeks.

The new playhouse will be christened the Colorado, and will be managed by Alvah G. Talbot, present manager of the America. It will be built to seat 3,000 persons, with a lower floor seating capacity of 1,600. One large balcony will accommodate 1,400. A pipe organ to cost $50,000 will be installed. The theatre will be built along the lines of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, and the California Theatre, of San Francisco.

"Hello there, Sol, old boy, I haven't seen you since the Goddess of Liberty wore short dresses. Who are you with now?"

"I'm with Patchless Features, Benny. Where have you been keeping yourself?"

"I'm selling stock for Hokum Theatres, Inc."

"How do you find business?"

"Go out and look for it."

"Where did you come from?"

"Spruce Center."

"Do anything with Old Man Squeezem?"

"Sold him the entire program. Regular prices, too."

"I understand he won't pay over $7.50 a day."

"It is true that he chokes a penny until the Indian does a war dance, but he loosens up once in a while."

"Perhaps. Say, did you hear about Hank Higgins?"

"What's the scandal?"

"He has left the Eggplant Co.; left them flat on the lot."

"Who is he going with?"

"He is taking the Neglect office.

"Some birds have all the luck. Two years ago he was a boilermaker."

"I knew him when he was selling shoestrings."

"Your proposition ought to be good. You've got some real stuff."

No, what is it?"

"If Whiskey Can't Kill You Wood Alcohol?"

"How is it?"

"Photography fine. Settings immense, but the story must have been taken from Sears & Roebuck's catalogue."

"Where are you going to-morrow?"

"I'm sticking right here in town. I am over my expectancy now and I've come to the conclusion that if you're too good you get canned, if you're rotten the same route, so my policy is to be mediocre."

"That might be all right, but I give my firm the best that is in me. Been with them a year and have been working on a 4 per cent. basis."

"What have they done for you?"

"Nothing yet, but I got a letter from the sales manager and he said if I'd stick it out another year he would fix me up with a district job in Greenland."

"What did they give you for Christmas?"

"Their good will and the United States to make a living in. What did you get?"

"Hell for not getting more business."

"The boss wished me a Happy New Year."

"Didn't cost him anything, did it?"

"Oh, well, it's a cold-blooded proposition all the way through. I'm thinking about going in business for myself."

"What's the graft?"

"I've got a chance to buy the bicycling privileges on 'All Speed and No Control' for Southern Ohio."

"I ought to knock off a century a week. Say have you seen Sam Sapp lately?"

"Do you mean that coke-hound with the Sciatica Co.?"

"That's him. I saw him last week and he said he was through calling on exhibitors. He claims that there is such a demand for his junk that when he hits a town, all he will have to do is to call up his prospective and tell him to rush over to the hotel and bring his check-book."

"A couple of more shots and he won't be mailing contracts to the office. He'll just bale them and send them by express."

"Been down in West Virginia lately?"

"No, I've graduated from the sticks and the American plan hotels. The boss told me to grab off the real money and let the petty cash alone."

"There is some nice business in the tanks."

"Yes I know, but why should I advertise Blue Jay Corn Plasters when shoes are fifteen bones a pair?"

"Say, it is fierce the way your dough goes for things nowadays, ain't it? Everything has gone up except my salary. If I don't get a boost soon I'll have to sign up with the poor-farm."

"What does your firm pay?"

"Fifty berries and all you can steal."

"How about the swindle sheet?"

"If it runs over forty-five bucks I don't dare send it in."

"I turned in one for seventy-five last week."

"How do you get away with it?"

"Oh I screen about five times a week and charge up six bits a reel. Most of our stuff is in eight reels. Get the idea?"

"I got you. I slipped in one for forty-seven last week and they wanted to know if I'd been to Japan. Why they're so short their corns give them the headache.

"Do you still fight the leaping dominoes?"

"I'm off of them for life."

"How come?"

"I got hooked so bad about four weeks ago that it will take me the rest of my life to get out."

"They always was poison to me."

"Say, do you know where I can get some liquor?"

"No I don't. I bought a quart last week for fifteen bucks. It was the last he had."

"Good stuff?"

"No. Barrel goods. It was a near relative to T. N. T. Put a drop on a mouse's nose and it would spit in a cat's face."

"Well I've got to call up the office and find out if they have mailed my check. If I don't remind them every week they forget that I'm on the pay-roll."

New York Exhibitors Rap Percentage, High Salaries and Production Costs

MEMBERS of the legislative and executive committees of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, meeting in Albany on February 3, took a wallop at percentage bookings and declared that the unreasonable demands in the way of salaries by stars would serve to put a large percentage of the motion picture houses out of business. The committee's meeting was attended by about twenty-five exhibitors from various parts of New York State.

A resolution was passed unanimously demanding a uniform contract and abolishing the deposit system. The committee went on record against the attempt of certain producers to force percentage bookings on motion picture theatre owners, which were characterized as an indirect method of gaining ownership of theatres and of depriving present owners of all initiative and independence. Several of those present expressed themselves in strong language against percentage booking and against the agitation now being carried on, it was claimed, in some trade publications in favor of such.

Stars Owe Power to Popularity.

C. L. O'Reilly emphasized the fact that the exhibitors in their opposition to percentage bookings were animated solely by their regard for the rights of the public, which he claimed were identical with the best interests of the motion picture industry.

The public, Mr. O'Reilly said, looked with much favor upon the motion picture theatre, because of the popular prices which are charged in the way of admission.

"Once these prices are definitely abandoned and replaced with a scale of prices which is prohibitive to the average family, the process of depopularizing the screen theatre will set in," said Mr. O'Reilly. "The stars should remember that they owe their drawing power entirely to popular favor, which is the biggest asset they have to sell. Exhibitors cannot raise their prices to such heights as the percentage booking system would force upon them, and continue in business. It must be borne in mind that as the public has made the stars it may also unmake them by withholding its patronage, a thing which it is not unlikely to do if the grasping and unreasonable attitude of the stars becomes more widely known to the public."

Telegrams were sent to Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, defining the stand of the committee on the percentage booking system as above outlined. Each of the telegrams contained a vigorous protest against the proposed percentage booking providing for a guaranteed rental plus a percentage.

Charges Waste of Time and Film.

J. A. Quinn, of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Society, appeared before the committee and outlined plans for better and fewer pictures and also for reducing waste under present methods of production. He mentioned one picture which he said had been thoroughly liked by the public and which had cost around $15,000. He appealed for the support of exhibitors for his organization. It was decided to appoint a committee to confer with him as to the best methods of co-operation toward bringing about the production of good and yet moderately priced features.

Among those present were Sidney Cohen, New York; Jules Michaels, Harold Franklin, Buffalo; J. A. Quinn, S. I. Berman, Samuel Sheer, J. J. Whitman, New York; George Roberts, Fred Elliott, Albany; Morris Silverman, Schenectady; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; W. H. Linton, Utica; Irving Salyeards, Rochester; Emmett Cornell, Syracuse; Henry Manus, Brooklyn, and J. Schwartzwalder, Auburn.

Hiller Handling "The Topical Editor."

L. L. Hiller has secured selling rights to the new half reel feature "The Topical Editor" produced by the Topical Humor Film Company and edited by Charles Leonard Fletcher.

"Within a short time we shall announce the details under which worldwide distribution of 'The Topical Editor' will be assured," says Mr. Hiller. "I am more than enthusiastic about this new short subject as it is the best and most original of its kind that I have ever seen."

Several prominent state right buyers have made offers for territories for independent booking.

Canada Finds Present British Films Lack Qualities of American Product

People Praise Supposed English Creations Made in California and Jersey—Weary of Horse-Racing, Long Sub-Titles, Perforated Villains, Photographic Camouflage, Grim Love, 'n Etc.

By Louis Hall.

CONSIDERABLE discussion is now being heard in Canada regarding British moving picture productions, and, therefore, a frank word or two about British film characteristics by one who has studied some of the English features that have been imported to Canada during the past year will be timely.

There is no doubt but that considerable sentiment is to be found in British North America in favor of British pictures, but it is more than possible that some of those who are talking most about British film attractions know least about them. The fact is that comparatively few British pictures, with the exception of topical weeklies, have been seen in the larger theatres of the Dominion for a number of years, and those who are demanding British film dramas are, in many cases, not in a position to know exactly how the British feature compares with creations from American studios.

American Films Fooled.

There are those who speak with pride regarding pictures that they believe originated in the British Isles, but the truth is that the films were made in New Jersey, California or Florida. In these instances, a well-known British story had been used as the basis for a scenario and the details had been carried out so neatly that the "fans" believed that the feature had been produced in England.

The real demand for British productions arose late in 1918, when it seemed almost as if the Dominion had been flooded with American war productions—that smelled of propaganda to the keen Canadian or ex-Englisher. The sub-titles of some of the productions were changed before the features were released in Canada, but the war veterans of Canada saw at first glance that the so-called Canadian heroes on the screen were garbed in regulation United States field uniforms. It was camouflaged—pardon the word.

McGarry Began Crusade.

T. W. McGarry, then provincial treasurer for Ontario, led in the demand for real British pictures and his crusade brought him much attention. He jerked up the exchange managers and exhibitors of Toronto with the ultimatum that they would have to bring out something possessing British sentiment or the Ontario censors would be instructed to become reckless. The crowd fell in behind Mr. McGarry and lots of letters were written to the newspapers.

Steps were taken by several Canadian exchanges to import British productions from England, but when the shipments did arrive it was found—well, the British features did not live up to expectations. The people were given what they wanted, however, and eventually word came from across the Atlantic that the British producers were not able to turn out just the quality of pictures that they would have liked because everybody had been very busy with the war and the film business had been somewhat neglected. But if the Canadians would wait, some very fine stuff would be sent over.

War Pictures Made Hits.

In the meantime, and perhaps a little before the big agitation, two or three British features did make a big hit in Canada. "The Battle of the Somme" broke records in many theatres because it broke at a time when the people expected to see some pictures of real fighting stuff. The Somme feature also had some views of British tanks and these glimpses were very valuable. Flashes of Canadian troops were also enjoyed. Another big hit was "The Better 'Ole," and this feature was also a success in the United States.

Since the war quite a number of British pictures have been brought to Canada, but fully three-quarters of these features have been built around a horse-race at Epsom Downs. Not only is this a little monotonous, but it has rubbed the Canadian the wrong way, for the simple reason that the Canadian has not enjoyed a bit of horse-racing for years. In time, maybe these clinking pictures of American origin will also become distasteful to the thousands who were acustomed to their share of the merry fluids.

Verbose, Tiresome Sub-titles.

Getting down to details about British film kinds, it is quite in order to single out one of the latest British productions to be seen in Canadian theatres. To begin with, the title of this picture starts with the word "the." A glance at a list of British productions shows that many of the titles start with "the," Is this a fault? The writer will say it is.

Perhaps one-third of this particular feature was made up of sub-titles, all of which consisted of from forty-five to fifty words, generally speaking, and all of which carried the same border effect. There was no attempt at art work in the sub-titles. The writer found that numerous titles of the same style and appearance, with lengthy statements, finally became annoying. The writer was also surprised to note that the backgrounds in many of the scenes, particularly interior views, were very indistinct, although the people in the foreground were properly focused.

Unintentional Camouflage.

Another point was that the background furnishings in several instances gave a bewildering effect—in a manner similar to camouflage in warfare. In one scene, for example, the star was not noticed for some time because her dress did not contrast with the rear wall of the room. Faked cave scenery was crudely done and one was inclined to ask whether there was any intention on the part of the producer to deceive the audience into thinking that the rocks were real or not.

There was supposed to be a blaze and, instead of burning up some perfectly good "props," as the Yankee director would have done, the flames were only penciled on the film. The result was that the intended fireworks resembled a quantity of ribbons fluttering in the breeze.

Making Grim Love.

The writer has always been ready to admit that the British stage star knows how to act and that the British actor is particular about his character portrayals, but when you see a man making fearful grimaces at the heroine and even shaking his fists in her face, can you, in your wildest flights of imagination, bring yourself to believe that the same man is making love to her? Well, he was—in this picture. For three reels we thought he was trying to be the villain, but it dawned upon us about 350 feet from the final close-up that he was the future husband of the star.

The audience actually laughed when this player peered over the garden wall just before claiming the fair one and made a grimace that was supposed to show the love-light in his eyes.

Perforating Their Victims.

There was a battle scene in this production and it was disappointing in view of the fact that all Britishers have learned how a young film war should be staged. The fans used to talk about the manner in which the cowboys filled each other full of holes before a man dropped and how the hero faces dozens of machine gun bullets without receiving more than a scratch across the temple. The writer felt that little or no attempt had been made to work up a dramatic tenseness in this situation.

Another matter that the writer would like to call a fault—there is really no intention to be cruel—was that the several principals were invariably grouped in front of the camera as if they were posing for a family photograph. Scarcely once did the audience gain a side view of the players, and Kitty Gordon would not have been able to give a tiny view of her renowned back if she had been working under the man who directed this particular feature.

Fletcherizing Words.

It was apparent on several occasions that the players were shouting into each others' faces like a couple of disrespect-

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

IN the issue of Moving Picture World dated February 12, 1910, there appeared for the first time in a moving picture trade paper—and, possibly for the first time in any publication, the picture of a man who was then running a cinema in Forest City, Pa. S. L. Rothapfel, destined to become known to fame as "Roxey," looked about the same then as he does now.

The intervening ten years have marked amazing progress in pictures, and in this opinion "Roxey" has done more for pictures than pictures can ever do for him. To him, more than any other individual of his time, is due credit for the improved methods and mediums for showing pictures and the consequent improvement in pictures themselves to keep pace with the progress of the picture showman.

"Roxey" was here to gather ideas on exhibition from delegates to the Film Service Association's convention held at the Imperial Hotel. You remember those assemblages? The principal idea was to eat, gossip and libate—and it's fair to presume that "Roxey" gave more in ideas than he was able to receive.

Meet Rothapfel, of Forest City!

Some interesting data accompanied "Roxey's" picture. It was said of him that Forest City and surroundings gave him a drawing population of 7,000 and into his theatre, from this field, he daily averaged 1,000 paid admissions.

Rothapfel came to the convention as the guest of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light and Film Company—J. B. Clark and Richard A. Rowland. Moving Picture World might take a little credit for "discovering" Rothapfel, as it was this paper that first "pictured" the man who has since been photographed more in trade papers than most presidents of film corporations.

Discussing Weighty Matters.

The Executive Committee reported nine subjects to be discussed, the topics including "Independent Competition," "The N. I. Film," "Length of Reels," "Waterproof Films" and "Express Rates." These weighty matters went along to the extent of a couple-a pages.

But the most interesting matter discussed was the banquet. It was a considerable feed—and there were tradepaper "lunch hounds" in those days as well as ten years later.

Frank Winch and Joe Brandt ate and drank for the Billboard; Frank Woods partook of the Dramatic Mirror's share; James L. Hoff and Dore Hoffman supplied thirst and appetite for Film Index; Ellis Cohen did likewise for Morning Telegraph, and a healthy lot, hungered and thirsted on behalf of Moving Picture World, to wit: Thomas Bedding, F. R. P. S. (Tom always wore his medals and titles!), Archie MacArthur, Jr., and H. F. Hoffman.

The Official Line-Up Was:

A. J. Gilligham, president; "Bill" Steiner, vice-president; Herbert L. Miles, secretary; Robert Lieber, treasurer; P. L. Waters, Richard A. Rowland, and Frank J. Howard, executive committee. This equipment applied to the F. S. A., rather than to the banquet. Speeches there were, of course, for who ever heard of a film banquet without speeches!

How Many Titles Can You Suggest for This Picture?

We'd enter the contest, but modesty forbids. We can say, though, that this is a view from the Fox five-reel Sunshine Special, directed by Hampton Del Ruth and as yet unnamed. "Write quick!"

Mr. Gilligham was toastmaster, and among those introduced to fame via this imperishable print were J. Stuart Blackton, Mrs. Herbert Miles (an advance whisper of female campaign speeches!), Herbert L. Miles, Robert Leiber, J. P. Chalmers, William T. Rock, James L. Hoff and your old friend "Bill" Swanson.

Swanson made a record that day by participating in both camps of the two factions then fighting for control in filmdom. By some strange prearrangement the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance held elsewhere in the Imperial Hotel, day and date, an opposition session. Mr. Swanson participated in both sessions.

The Executive Committee of the Alliance named John J. Murdock, I. C. Oes, A. Kessel, J. W. Morgan and "Bill" Swanson. And Swanson was the secretary. Not so much of importance happened at the N. I. M. P. Alliance. It is reported in cold type that Swanson made the hit of the banquet after they had dragged him in from the "opposition" meeting to jazz things up with his merry quip and jest.

Inserting a Note of Fashion.

"Herbert Miles displayed another new suit of clothes," said Moving Picture World. "He is certainly the Beau Brummel of the film renters."

Exhibitions in conjunction with the two conventions were made by Pathe, Powers Cameragraph No. 6, the Mirror Screen, Fireproof Film Cabinets, the Soundograph, Waterproofing Films and the Edengraph.

The Independent session was marked by the resignation of John J. Murdock as president. They gave him a loving cup and it is recorded that "Mr. Murdock made a very touching reply to the kind words of the presentation speech and was evidently very much affected."

Patents Company Versus Laemmle.

Judge Hand, over protest of Laemmle's attorneys, postponed the trial of the Patents Company's injunction suit against the Independent Moving Picture Company—the famous "Imp" manufacturers. "A large number of independent manufacturers were present and gave Mr. Laemmle their warmest greetings and assurance of their moral support."

Moving Picture World carried a letter captioned "Gratitude from the Heart of Carl Laemmle." It seems that the Montreal Laemmle exchange burned out to the tune of $7,000 loss, leaving the "Imp" scrapper homeless in Canada with a lot of customers on his hands.

"No sooner had it become known," wrote Mr Laemmle to his old friend, Moving Picture World, "that my office was destroyed than the Kleine Optical Company and Kinetograph Company immediately offered the full use of their Montreal offices until I could get things in shape again."

"Come on in, Laemmle, and make yourself at home," they said.

"That's what I call broad-minded, fair, square and 'white'," said Laemmle.

News, outside of the two conventions, was scarce. We'll dig further into things next week.

Constance Talmadge, Sister Natalie and Maria the Haughty Understudy

By Edward Weitzel

THIS has been a hard winter for moving picture stars. I was told it first by Dorothy Dalton; then Corinne Griffith repeated the same important information, and last week, over at the Norma Talmadge studio, sister Constance added her testimony to the subject. The word "hard" applies solely to the weather. Not that these three leading lights of the screen haven't plenty of warm clothing to shield them from the cold. The trouble is—or was, before the snow came—that a scenario might call for a number of exterior scenes in which the heroine tumbles out of a canoe into a lake or is caught in a downpour of rain and summer be two or three months to the rear when the time came to shoot those particular scenes. Moving pictures are made the year around, you know. Well, last fall the weather got right sharp about the time Constance Talmadge was told by Director Sydney Franklin that they were going to Bear Lake for the exterior scenes in "Two Weeks," and Miss Constance gave an involuntary shiver.

Why Constance Shivered Many Times.

While the severe looking party in evening clothes who is supposed to be her father in "The Love Expert" walked with much dignity down the hotel corridor and into his own room where his playful daughter has bestowed the trusting old maid, and repeated the action until it was safely recorded on the faithful film, the star of the picture told me why she gave that one shiver and why she shivered many times more while those exterior scenes were being taken—shivered so rapidly that nothing but an ultra-rapid camera could have caught the shivers.

"If you saw 'Two Weeks' at the Strand last week you remember that 'Lillums,' the lady from the chorus, goes for a midnight bath in the lake."

I remembered the scene, and said so.

"There is a close-up," continued Miss Talmadge, "of 'Lillums' standing in the water with just her head and shoulders showing above a large rock. She is supposed to be startled but not so frightened that her teeth are chattering and her knees knocking together. But that is what really happened. The scenario called for a balmy summer night but last October was a bad month for them so I stood behind that rock and registered what I felt—half frozen and ready to cry from the cold."

"It didn't show in the picture."

"That part was carefully left out. Mr. Franklin coaxed and jollied and begged me until I managed to control my real feelings long enough to register the proper expression, but it's hardly more than a flash. 'Please,' he kept saying to me; 'it's a warm night and you're not cold, only startled.'"

"What did you say?"

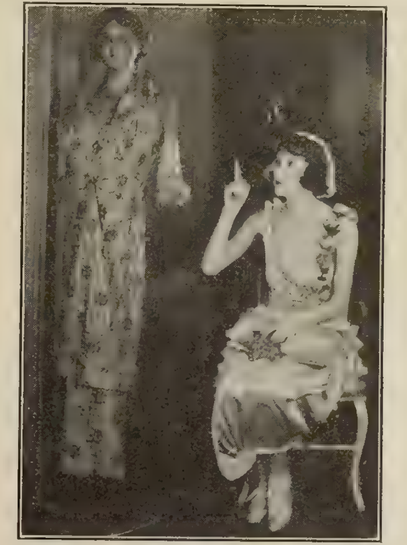
"Nothing—I was so cold I couldn't talk."

"Perhaps your thoughts covered the situation?"

"I know they did! I thought things I should never dare to say. But the worst was to come. I had to dress behind some strips of canvas made into a three-sided dressing room without a roof, and I nearly perished all over again. We're going to Palm Beach for the exteriors in 'The Love Expert,' thank goodness!"

An Accident to the Understudy.

The set in use was a double one, showing a hotel corridor and one of the rooms opening from it. While the corridor scene was being made I glanced into the adjoining room and saw what I took to be an actress in the Talmadge company standing behind a large armchair. Her back was to me, the bright lights on the next set dazzling my eyes so that I could not see her very distinctly. Several property men were busy in the room, and I was startled a moment later, by hearing a cry of "Look out!" I glanced into the set just in time to see one of the men back into the lady and knock her down.



"Maria, You've Been Shimmying!"
Says Constance Talmadge to her understudy, an important member of the star's support.

In an instant they all turned and looked at the prostrate figure on the floor.

"Well, why don't you pick her up?" demanded the chap who had given the cry of warning.

"Ah! pick her up yourself! I'm too busy!" was the surly reply of the fellow who had knocked the lady down.

Astonished at such brutality I turned to Miss Talmadge. She also had seen the accident but made no effort to interfere.

"Shall I—?" I began.

"Pick her up?" replied Miss Talmadge, "if you want to . . . it's only my understudy."

By this time one of the men, more humane than his fellows, had stooped down and assisted the lady to her feet.

I Am Introduced to Maria.

"Understudy," I repeated; "I didn't know that movie actresses ever had understudies."

"Oh, yes! I find her very useful."

"In what way?"

"Natalie will introduce you if you want to interview her. Mr. Emerson is ready for my next scene. Natalie, take Mr. Weitzel over and introduce him to Maria," and sister Constance bestowed that famous one-eyed smile upon me and joined her director down the corridor.

Miss Natalie Talmadge, who was standing near, led the way into the adjoining room and I was duly presented to the understudy. Not being an adept at painting pen portraits of beautiful women I must refer the reader to the picture on this page for an adequate idea of the lady's personal charms. Miss Constance was gracious enough to have herself photographed with her understudy, but this should not make it at all difficult to identify Maria.

Finding that the dummy was not inclined to talk about herself, I applied to Miss Natalie for information as to Maria's duties. The youngest of the Talmadge girls is a demure little woman, but she enjoyed her share in her sister's joke.

"Maria was Sydney Franklin's suggestion. He said that she would keep quiet while the lights were being adjusted, and Constance won't . . . she hates to stand still," was Miss Natalie's explanation.

"So Maria really earns her salary?"

"Yes, indeed! She saves Constance a great deal of fatigue, and gives her more time to answer telephone calls."

"Does your sister have many?"

"About a dozen a day—but they're mostly from the same person. Excuse me: there's the phone ringing now. I must answer it for her," and, smiling meaningly, the demure Miss Natalie hurried off to the star dressing room, which, at the Norma Talmadge studio, consists of a four room apartment complete in every detail and most tastefully furnished. But that apartment is another story.

Lehrman Praises Rothacker Prints of "Twilight Baby"

THE print service of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, so many times accorded praise in the past, has once again received a straight-forward tribute from a producer, this time from Henry Lehrman. Mr. Lehrman, whose first comedy production for First National, "A Twilight Baby," was recently put before the public, wired Watterson R. Rothacker as follows:

"American print forwarded to this office is of real Rothacker standard and I am certainly glad that the exhibitors throughout the country will know that each print received of 'Twilight Baby' will be a real print because it was made by Rothacker. Carry on the high standard and accept my personal thanks for care shown. Personal regards.

"HENRY LEHRMAN."

THE first direct results of W. W. Hodkinson's recent announcement that he would provide the way for powerful individual directors of pictures to become producers in their own right came to a head last week with the further announcement of Irvin Willat Productions, of which the Hodkinson Corporation is to be the distributor.

Contracts have been signed with Irvin Willat, one of the ablest technicians and directors in the industry, to have his organization make a limited number of exceptional pictures annually from powerful novels by big authors. An indication of the rapidity with which the Hodkinson-Willat negotiations progressed will be found in the news that the first of these productions will be under way in early March for springtime release.

In his direction of many of the bigger pictures for the Thomas H. Ince organization, Irvin Willat has established standards of his own of recognized power. The whole background of his training in the industry has been sound and progressive, and he possesses a technical mastery of production and a knowlege of the camera that few other men have despite years of association with picture-making.

A Well-Rounded Career.

For a year the Hodkinson organization has been modeled on efficient lines, and the result has been the entry into the production field of producers capable of maintaining such standards as J. Parker Read, Jr., set in his "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," big productions starring Louise Glaum; "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher," powerful productions representing the fine intelligence and literary capacity of Benjamin B. Hampton.

Irvin Willat first of all was and still is a skilled superintendent of photography. He was with the original Imp as an actor, and was factory superintendent for the New York Motion Picture Company, besides having been a manufacturer of cameras. He was the first cameraman with the Keystone organization, and later with Reliance, All-Star, Metro-Dyreda, besides being in charge of all photography for Ince-Triangle.

As a director, Mr. Willat has made such large successes as "The Guilty Man," "The Grim Game," "Behind the Door," "False Faces," "The Law of the North," "The Midnight Patrol," "Rustling a Bride" and "Below the Surface."

Announcement of the first Willat production for Hodkinson distribution will be made shortly.

Realart Exchange Now in Permanent Quarters

THE New York branch office of Realart Pictures Corporation has moved from the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, to the fifth floor of the Leavitt Building, 130 West Forty-sixth street. Realart's shipping department also moved from the Winfield Building, 469 Fifth avenue, to the Leavitt Building.

With these changes, all departments of Realart, except two or three of the branch offices, are now in permanent quarters. The home offices are within a stone's throw of Grand Central Terminal ,and the New York branch office, under the direction of Lester W. Adler, is in the center of the film exchange district.

The moving of the shipping department, of which Norman Kohn has general supervision, was done to provide space for the expansion of other rapidly growing departments of the home office organization. Realart now has the entire fourth floor of the Winfield Building and the entire fifth floor of the Leavitt Building.

The latter space, made available through being vacated by the Fox Film Corporation, which moved last week into its new building in Tenth avenue, is being fitted up appropriately, and when alterations are completed will be provided with a commodious reception room, projection accessory, film examination and shipping rooms, a series of executive offices running along the Forty-sixth street front, and quarters for the shipping department of the home office. The floor space to be utilized by the New York exchange will be considerably larger than that provided for it in the Godfrey Building. The latter floor space has been taken over by the First National's New York exchange and is being elaborately fitted up.

Select Plans to Open Oklahoma City Branch

THE rapid increase of business of the Select organization in the West, together with its unsuual growth, brought forth an announcement from Select's general manager and vice-president, Sam E. Morris, which stated it is more than likely that a Select branch office will be opened in Oklahoma City soon.

He has sent General Representative V. P. Whitaker and C. C. Ezell, manager of the Select Dallas branch, to Oklahoma City to study the possible advantage to be gained by the addition of another exchange to the present Select system.

In the event that a new branch is established in Oklahoma City, Mr. Morris announces that it will be under the general supervision of Manager C. C. Ezell of the Dallas branch. The number of new theatres in the territory served by the Select Dallas branch, and the increasing amount of business from the older accounts, makes necessary the opening of another office somewhere in that territory.

Marion Davies Back from Florida.

Marion Davies and her company have returned from Miami and Palm Beach, Fla., where they went to film exteriors for "The Restless Sex," her next Cosmopolitan Production for Paramount Artcraft, after "April Folly," which is released March 21.

He was eager to carry out some important business transactions, which he necessarily had to forego. He says business in the Mountain States has been poor since November, heavy snow falls and cold weather being a great handicap. Many of the motion picture houses were closed this past month. He and Mr. Nolan will remain in New York until February 9.

Nationwide Publicity Drive Launched to Prevent Closing Due to Influenza

TO prevent hysteria and to forestall thoughtless attempt by municipal authorities to close picture theatres on account of the influenza outbreak, the National Association of the Motion Picture industry, through a special committee apointed by President Wiliam A. Brady, has launched a nationwide publicity campaign designed to acquaint the general public and city officials with the importance of keeping theatres open while the influenza is prevalent. The campaign is similar, though of greater scope, to the one which the asociation conducted so succesfully last year.

The committee in charge of the work consists of John C. Flinn of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, chairman; John M. Quinn of Vitagraph, Inc., and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association.

Weeklies Carry Warning.

In its campaign to keep the theatres open the National Association committee is using every possible means of publicity. All of this week the news weeklies are carrying a warning from Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York City, regarding precautions to be taken in guarding against the influenza.

In addition to this screen campaign, the committee early this week sent broadcast throughout the country a series of letters and documents showing the wisdom of keeping theatres open.

This material consists of a letter to the National Association from Dr. Copeland, in which the health commissioner commended the motion picture industry for its assistance during the epidemic of last year, and declared regarding the 1918 epidemic that "in view of our experience in New York City, where the death rate from influenza was the lowest of any large city on the coast, we are convinced that our decision to keep the theatres open is wisely made."

"My principal purpose in keeping open the theatres in New York City," Dr. Copeland wrote, "was to prevent the spread of panic and hysteria, and thus to protect the public from a condition of mind which would predispose it to physical ills."

35,000 Letters Sent Out.

It is this hysteria which Dr. Copeland fears that the committee seeks to prevent. It has sent letters to 15,000 exhibitors, to the editors and advertising managers of every daily newspaper in the country, to all exchange managers, and to the mayors, health board officials, school officials, chambers of commerce and librarians in every city of 20,000 population or over. With these letters have gone reprints of Dr. Copeland's letter to the association, reprints of an article published by Dr. Copeland in the New York Times in 1918, showing how New York combated the plague, and a chart and table prepared by United States Government officials showing graphically how New York, where theatres during the 1918 epidemic were allowed to remain open, had the lowest death rate of all the big cities of the country.

Five hundred copies of Dr. Copeland's letter and his article in the New York Times were sent to each of the distributing companies, to be sent by them to their exchange managers for distribution throughout their districts.

In all, 35,000 letters have been sent out, accompanied by the material showing Dr. Copeland's stand on influenza. Exhibitors were requested to use their influence with local authorities to keep theatres open, the Copeland statements being placed in their hands so that they could go to their health boards armed with evidence that the largest city in the world did not find it necessary during the severest epidemic in recent years to close theatres. The exhibtors also were urged to co-operate in every way with their local authorities in combating the influenza.

"Luck of the Irish" to Be Released This Month

"THE LUCK OF THE IRISH," an Allan Dwan production, will be available to exhibitors in February. Realart Pictures Corporation, which will distribute the picture, does not fix release dates, but the probability is, according to General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland, that prints will be obtainable in all of the branch offices early in February.

The title of this picture is stated in Realart publicity to be based on the fact that the hero is an Irishman who has the proverbial "luck of the Irish" in a love affair. Much of this "luck" is explained to be due to the hero's energetic use of his good right arm, the story being of a battle of wits and fists for the love of a New York school teacher. The contenders accompany the girl on a trip around the world and the scenes are laid in Venice, Cairo, Calcutta, Hong Kong and other foreign cities.

The author of the story is Harold McGrath and the theme is said to be typical of his novels. Mr. McGrath has established a reputation with the public for writing stories abounding in adventure, excitement and thrills. In the case of "The Luck of the Irish" he has provided material for color and spectacular drama in which Mr. Dwan is said to delight.

"The production is to be released as a proved box office success," according to a Realart statement. "It had a prerelease showing of one week at Sid Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles and established itself as a great drawing card. It is possible, as a further demonstration of the box office value of the production, that it will be given a showing in New York prior to its release."

"The Forged Bride" Has Mary MacLaren as Star

A CAREFUL combination of star, strong cast, clever story and splendid direction feature the Universal production, "The Forged Bride," which is announced for release on March 8, and in which Mary MacLaren plays the stellar role.

"The Forged Bride" is from the story "The Sins of the Father" from the pen of J. G. Hawks, who has supplied William S. Hart with many of his scenarios, and deals with an unusually striking problem of life. In it Mary MacLaren takes the part of a convict's daughter.

All the tense situations and the warm love of the forger father for his child are dramatically brought out under the direction of Douglas Gerrand.

Dagmar Godowsky, the daughter of a world famous pianist, plays the part of the jealous rival. Another artist is Thomas Jefferson, son of the well-known dramatic star of other day Joseph Jefferson. Harold Miller, Barney Sherry and Frances Raymond complete the cast.

F. I. L. M. Club Mails Slide.

The New York City F. I. L. M. Club at its last meeting voted to mail a circular letter to all exhibitors in the district reproducing Dr. Royal S. Copeland's message regarding the influenza epidemic. With this letter, each theatre was sent a slide containing the health commissioner's message.

President Chadwick appointed the following executive committee: Messrs. Rosensweig, Zierler, Klein, Schmertz, Rosenblueh, Eckman, Burnstein, Connors, Raynor, Adler, Salinger and Siegel. A special committee for looking after the interests of New Jersey exchanges was appointed, as follows: Messrs. Brodskie, of Metro; F. Gersten, of F. Gersten, Inc., and S. Abeles, of Pathe, Newark.

G. Balsdon wrote that a F. I. L. M. Club has been organized in Albany.

Donald Campbell Increases Capital and Export Field

DONALD CAMPBELL is expanding his export business. His energy in many years of film exporting has built his organization up to a point where expansion is essential. Within a few days he will be settled in new and greatly enlarged quarters in the Leavitt Building, 130 West Forty-sixth street—and he will have more capital to work with than he has ever had.

From this new address he will first export the new William N. Selig serial, "Vanishing Trails," in which Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson will be starred. The first three episodes of the new work are now on their way from the Selig studios in Los Angeles and foreign buyers will soon be given a "look" at the new thirty-reel fifteen episode presentation.

The World's His Field.

The world's rights, outside of North America, are Mr. Campbell's for "Vanishing Trails," and he believes that foreign exhibitors are going to profit largely on the new issue. Franklyn Farnum became a screen favorite as a star of Bluebird Photoplays, and Mary Anderson has won favor in various Metro productions. In producing the serial Mr. Selig backed his leading players with an efficient supporting company.

Just now Mr. Campbell is exploiting "Lightning Bryce" among South American exhibitors and is sending the same serial to India, a territory where he is favorably known through his exploitation of "The Mystery of 13," "The Hawk's Trail" and many other American serials. Having acquired new financial resources, Mr. Campbell is going in for exportation of films on a greatly increased scale, and will have the rights to other successful productions, especially in a serial way, as they come along from the producers.

Tyrad Sells Territories.

The rights on the Johnny Dooley Comedies for the states of Alabama, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana, have been sold by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., to the South Eastern Pictures Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia. The Tyrad organization also disposed of the state rights on "Your Wife and Mine," to the Sun Films, Inc., of Los Angeles and Seattle for distribution in the Far West territory.

Attitude of Mayors' Conference Toward Censorship Is a Mystery

AS a sub-committee which will draft a general report to be presented not later than February 24 to the mid-winter conference of mayors of New York State on the question of further state censorship of motion pictures, Mayor Palmer Canfield of Kingston, the Rev. Chas. O. Jurkins of Glens Falls, and Walter W. Nicholson, commissioner of public safety of Syracuse, were named at a meeting in Albany on February 2. The meeting was attended by R. Alexander Hamilton of Rochester, Walter Hayes of Buffalo, Mrs. N. B. Spalding of Schenectady, Miss Mary G. Peck of New York, the Rev. Judkins and Dr. Everett B. Martin of New York.

Arthur Friend, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was present at the meeting, representing Gabriel Hess, who sailed for Europe a few days ago. Royal K. Fuller, of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, represented Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph, who was absent because of a recent death in his family. Rex Beach, the author, as well as Mrs. Howard Ganz, were absent because of illness.

Future Attitude Unknown.

There was a short meeting of one of the sub-committees at 11 o'clock in the morning in the office of W. P. Capes, secretary of the State Conference of Mayors. The general meeting was held at the city hall in the afternoon and newspaper men were excluded. The meeting consumed three hours. Each of the four committees named at the recent New York meeting reported. These reports ran all the way from six to fifty typewritten pages.

Just what attitude the committee, undoubtedly the most powerful ever named in the state along censorship lines, will take is unknown. In fact, Secretary Capes said at the conclusion of the meeting that he himself did not know what the committee would report on February 24. There is a strong feeling, however, among legislators that the committee will report that there is an urgent need of further censorship in the state and will press the legislature for action.

Civic League Inactive.

The last few days have witnessed no activity on the part of the New York State Civic League, of which the Rev. O. R. Miller is the mouthpiece. Mr. Miller was in New York on February 2 and there was no statement forthcoming at his office as to his intentions of immediately introducing a bill to repeal the present Sunday motion picture law. This bill has already been drafted at the request of the league, but so far as can be learned, no senator or assemblyman has been found who stands willing not only to introduce the bill, but to stand behind it in the strenuous days that are bound to come.

At Mr. Miller's office today one of his associates, George H. West, stated that in his opinion the strongest thing that the State Conference of Mayors could do would be to introduce a censorship bill. Mr. West admitted that he had not been to a motion picture show in the last six months, but in the same breath he declared that he had never seen one yet but that could not be morally improved by the use of censorship powers.

Fox Reports Large International Demand for Clemenceau's "Strongest"

THE demand for William Fox's production of "The Strongest," the one and only drama from the pen of Georges Clemenceau, "Tiger of France," is world-wide. From all parts of the world—from Japan, China, South America, Egypt, Australia, India, even from the late "Central Empires" of Europe—have come requests for early bookings on this story of international interest.

William Fox's representative for what until recently were the Central Empires is located in Berlin. He reports by cable that the demand for Georges Clemenceau's solution of the world problem, the Frenchman's answer to the question, "Does the soul of woman rule the world?," has surpassed anything that he has known in his long experience in the selling of motion pictures in foreign fields.

Big British Demand.

France, naturally, is awaiting with keen anticipation, the release of the story from the pen of her most eminent citizen. Great Britain wants it. Frederick Mordaunt Hall, managing director of Fox Films for Great Britain, reports from London that British exhibitors are clamoring for the right to secure the production, which will be offered to the American public this month, according to an announcement by Mr. Fox.

Australia has raised a cry for "The Strongest." H. E. Ross Soden reports from Sydney that no sooner had the announcement been made that William Fox had secured the screen version of Clemenceau's story than the exhibitors in Australia and New Zealand began writing and wiring to the Fox office asking the earliest possible date on which they could advertise the fact that they would show the production.

South America, according to reports from the leading centres of Rio de Janeiro and Santiago, have heavy advance orders for "The Strongest."

Cables for Print.

A Japanese exhibitor who thought he did not get sufficiently quick action from the Japanese office of Fox Film Corporation wired direct to New York asking that a print titled in Japanese be rushed to him in Yokohoma.

R. A. Thorne, one of the largest exhibitors in Alaska, has set a record price in that territory for the Clemenceau production, agreeing to pay for the picture for three weeks, and in addition the rate of $2 a pound for shipping it from Seattle—so that he can show it one night in Fairbanks, Alaska. He is willing to pay for the twenty days of travel required to make the round trip, so that he can have the honor of being the first man in the Northern territory to show the picture.

There probably never has been a better exploited picture than "The Strongest." Its advertising has been printed in thirty-two languages.

Cast Is Internationally Known.

In selecting a cast of internationally known artists, William Fox added greatly to the value of the Clemenceau story. Harrison Hunter, for fifteen years a figure on the British stage; Renee Adoree, the idol of Paris and South Africa; Carlo Liten, "Belgium's Sir Henry Irving," a great favorite in Germany and Austria especially; Georgette Gauthier de Trigny, the star of the first motion picture ever made in South America and the first made in Mexico; C. A. de Lima, well-known in Madrid and the Spanish colonies; Jean Gauthier de Trigny, who starred in French productions in Turkey and the Far East; Florence Malone, whose work in Australia and New Zealand has given her a host of followers in the Pacific Islands, and the rest of the cast have all a particular appeal in their respective roles.

The Fox organization is sending "The Strongest" to every corner of the earth. It will travel by mule-back, by auto and by steamboat; it will go by train, and it will be carried across mountain passes by Chinese coolies; it will penetrate even the realm of Soviet Russia.

Goldwyn Secures Rights to Big Broadway Success

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Great Lover," by Leo Dietrichstein and Fred and Fanny Hatton. This is the fourth important play which Goldwyn has purchased from Cohan & Harris within the last few weeks. Recent announcement was made of the purchase of "Officer 666," "Stop, Thief" and "A Tailor Made Man." They are all scheduled for early production.

"The Great Lover" has all the essentials of an excellent photodrama, possessing an exquisite romantic interest, together with tremendous pictorial possibilities. The play served Dietrichstein as a starring vehicle in New York and on the road.

It was produced in New York City at the Longacre Theatre on November 10, 1915, and ran for a full season before going on the road. In the original cast, Virginia Fox Brooks played the leading feminine role and Beverly Sitgreaves appeared as one of the supporting characters. Others in the cast were Alfred Kappeler, Malcolm Sassett, William Ricciardi and George Romaine.

New Brunswick Manager Shows How to Handle Single Column Blacks

HANDLING reverse cuts in a single column space is one of the most difficult layout stunts the film advertiser has to tackle. G. F. Givan, of the Lyric, Sussex, N. B., sends in a single sevens which is just as prominent on the page as Mr. Soriero's display, and infinitely more legible, since he cunningly contrives to get the reverse effect and an all-type lettering. This is even better than the top and bottom reverse and combines the best points of both. It is a very simple solution of the problem and is to be commended to all advertisers who want to get the striking effect of the reverse cut without the sacrifice of legibility. The compositor contributes somewhat to the effect, for he has made a skilled use of type faces, but the layout is almost fool proof and hard to improve. If you use a single column space you cannot do better than follow Mr. Givan.

PUTTING the "Everywoman" cast into the windows of a furniture store was one of the schemes adopted by the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City, to get over that production. The twenty-four sheet gave a number of figures for the cut-outs and these were mounted separately and set into the window, set as a parlor, each with a card giving the player and part. It made a good display for the theatre and gave life to the showing of the parlor suite.

The same or similar models were also placed in the stage setting the previous week. The set was one provided with a number of alcoves to break the space down to the screen and a figure was placed in each of these with three extra ones for a central group before the screen.

Each twenty-four sheet gave several figures which could be used separately or for a group. Another unusual feature was a three eighths, changed every day for a week, each giving the opinion of some well known clergyman, every denomination being represented. The displays were atrociously bad with their three reverse strips and heavy bold all capitals, but they got the idea over perhaps better than more attractive advertisements would have done. Their very hideousness may have helped in this instance. The opinions were obtained at a special showing for the clergy and others who might be interested in this morality. George E. Carpenter planned the stunts.

HANGING a cyclorama for the lobby was one of the chief selling attractors for the run of "In Old Kentucky" at the Randolph, in Chicago. The cyke covered the three sides of the lobby, but was cut away for the entrances and exits. The opposite side shows the old mansion with four cutout figures and a picket fence holding in the display. It is all very effective and really classes as a display and not merely as something put into the lobby to help along. The landscape backing is carried up over the doors and is split in the centre by the huge horse shoe shown. Large paintings are set against the fences on either side and the box office is in the centre of a horse-shoe of greens twelve feet tall. The horseshow has been widely used for this attraction and the Randolph makes it a sort of trademark. This display is unique and one of the best planned we have shown in a long time.

CHARLES R. ROEDIGER, who does the advertising for the four Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Tacoma, sends in a six seventeens from the front page of a Sunday amusement section for the Victoria which makes very intelligent use of the second color in two color newspaper work. Mr. McCormick, who uses two colors and black in his displays for the Indianapolis Circle, has been getting out really artistic work for some time, but Mr. Roediger is the only other advertiser who has sent in two color stuff in which the second color is worked in.

play the name and title are in red, as is the wheel, while the draperies of the figure at the wheel and the hair of the harpies in the background, barely suggested, are also touched up with the color. The effect is far richer than anything to be obtained from the usual use of color. Worked right into the black, the effect of the second color is increased many times. Not much copy is written, but every line counts. The combination makes an unusually good display.

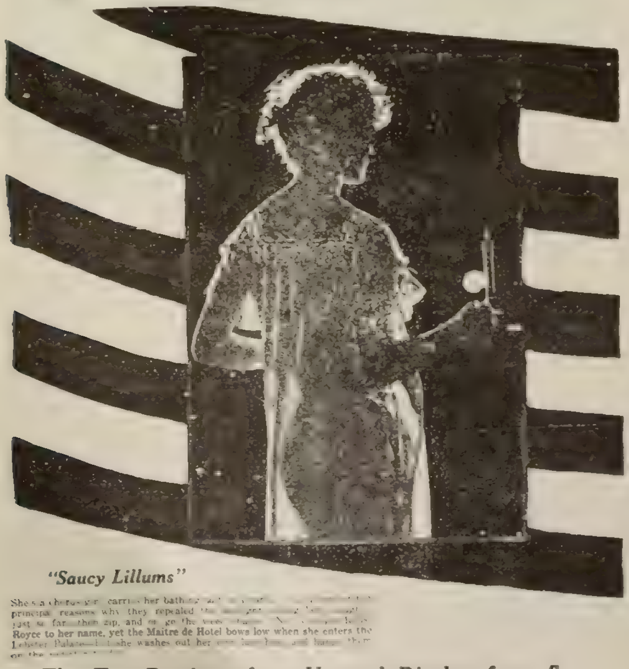
Got Some Telling Advertisements for Constance Talmadge's Play

PERHAPS there is some connection between the announcement that S. Barret McCormick has an art director for the Circle Theatre, and this advertisement, but we think not. At any rate he did some unusually pretty work for Constance Talmadge in "Two Weeks." The most startling display is a four column space about fifteen deep, of which this is the heading. It is not a mudded cut, but a light effect daringly done, yet quite in keeping with the play.



"Saucy Lillums"
Royce to her name, yet the Maitre de Hotel bows low when she enters the

The Top Portion of an Unusual Display from S. Barret McCormick.

It probably made more talk than the most intricate drawn design would have created. The backing of broad bands of black is as much a part of the design as the cut itself, for a more elaborate frame would have detracted from the cut. Even with a less sensational subject this band effect can be used with good results. More conventional are a pair of threes, one eleven and other thirteen inches deep. That on the left was used for the colored display with a change of copy. We like this better than the heavier design, not alone because of the white space, but because the type gets a better chance. The display is almost four times as strong in point of size and more than that in actual display, though both of these will work to good effect. Sometimes we think it would be a relief if Mr. McCormick would hand out just one advertisement we could tear to pieces, but he does not seem to do that sort of work.

Double Page Display for "Everywoman" Carries No Advertisement for Theatre

SINGLE and double deck hook-up pages are growing so common they have ceased to be novel. It was about time that some new element was injected and H. Wayne Pierson, exploitation man at the Atlanta Famous Players-Lasky exchange contributes this feature. He sends in a double page display with twelve spaces, each carrying a cut of one of the characters in "Everywoman." Hidden in each advertisement is a superfluous word and these twelve, when picked out and properly arranged, form a line advertising the film. Prizes are given, in the form of tickets, ostensibly by the newspaper.

The unusual feature of the display is that the theatre is not represented in these twelve spaces which are wholly given over to the outside advertisers, ranging from banks to butchers. Each display hooks up with the display title and some also hook up with the character decorating its own panel. The rules of the contest mention that the play is appearing at the Rialto, but this is the only mention of the house in this double space.

How Bell, of Washington, Achieved the "Impossible"

NELSON B. BELL, of the Crandall houses. Washington, D. C., wanted to use in his Sunday advertising a tear-stained face of Alice Lake in "Should a Woman Tell." He had seen it in the trade papers and he figured that this would work better as an attractor than anything else he could find, but when he was told he could not get a newspaper still of the pose, instead of damning the press department and the exchange and a few others, he persuaded the exchange to have the trade paper cut shipped. It was 120 screen and impossible, as it stood, for newspaper use, but Mr. Bell know this before he asked for the cut. He did not suppose he could pick out each alternate stipple and cut it down to a 60 screen, but he rushed it over to his engraver and had a proof pulled on hard paper with the best black cut ink.

When this had dried, the artist made required retouching and it was sent through for a newspaper screen cut. The face "patterned" slightly, but as luck would have it this gave a design suggestive of a print on linen paper, which actually improved the appearance of the cut. Cuts are said to "pattern" when the stipples of a half tone do not coincide with the lines on the screen used in making a half tone from a half tone cut. Generally the effect is a waved line which spoils the appearance utterly, but Mr. Bell knew that it could be done and the result turned out even better than he anticipated.

For "Should a Woman Tell" he teased his patrons starting with the title alone and ringing the changes on the "Tell" angle, breaking into the full title, house and star on Friday. It cleaned up for a new star and the week was as big as an established box office winner. That's the big idea with a newcomer. Make her known if you would get the money the first time out.

Another Full Page for Early Serial Chapters

RALPH B. KRETZER is another who believes that a full page is not too much for the launching of a serial, for he took that space to get "The Invisible Hand" launched at the Colonial, Springfield, Ohio. Although the space is rather full of type, this is hardly a fault, for there is much to be said and the big lines at the top lead the reader down to the more ample descriptive matter below. The first five episodes are treated in brief. One interesting angle is that the wind-up of the last Vitagraph serial is made the other half of the bill which shows the first part of this one. In other words, the serial lovers who come to see how "Smashing Barriers" ends go away full of the successor story. That, even more than the full page, will serve to get interest, for it draws from the very best class of possible patrons. The idea is worth noting. It is easier to overlap than to stop one week and make a new start the next. Mr. Kretzer has the right idea.

Ruff "Rolls His Own" for Comedy Production

THIS dog display is about the last we shall have from Ralph R. Ruffner until someone snaps him up and puts him back on a job. Ruff had a picture of the comedian, so he was able to build up a display on this, but says that the exchange could furnish nothing. With comedies taking an important place on current bills and often sharing with the five reel feature, it seems strange that no company gets out proper stills for the use of first run houses, but no company as yet has come forward with complete stills for these two reel subjects is going to make a cleanup.

In the past so little attention has been paid the comedies that this has not seemed worth while, but now that the managers are giving more and more prominence to the humorous features there is a chance for someone to get and hold the inside track. It does not matter how many cuts are put out. Many exhibitors want stills from which they can make their own layouts and nothing else will do. Ruff happened to have what he needed, but others are less fortunate. With managers willing to advertise, they should be given every encouragement.

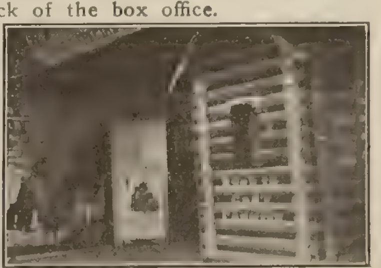
Try a Log Cabin Box Office

HERE is a handy log cabin box office for any western picture. It was designed by E. N. Collins, of the Liberty, Electra, Texas, for "Back to God's Country" but it can be used for any western pictures or can be made into a trade mark for all your western pictures if you build it in sections that can be taken down and put up. This is painted canvas, but if there is a saw mill in your town get the slabs sawn from the outside of the logs, with the bark still on. This classes as waste lumber and is very cheap. Frame it so that pins fits in sockets. The two side pieces fit in sockets permanently attached to the wall at the back of the box office.



A Log Cabin Box Office Designed by E. N. Collins

Sockets in the front end engage pins on the back of the front section, and the roof, if you wish one, goes on in two sections. Large screw eyes and right-angled screw hooks can form the sockets and pins. The whole thing can be assembled in ten minutes and taken down in less time. This is an old studio stunt which will work as well for lobbies.

Tapping the Live Wires of Showmanship

Played Sister Stars at Kunsky Sister Theatres

JOHN H. KUNSKY has something new. We have had the single star playing two or more houses with combination advertisements, but the Detroit man gives his patrons sister stars at sister houses. The stars, of course, are Norma and Constance Talmadge and Howard O. Pierce did some exceptionally tasteful work in the preparation of his advertisements. Nothing is perfect, but it would be difficult to improve much on these twin displays, though type for the smaller lines would have given added legibility. This work is not hard to read and the layout is a fine study in effective simplicity. The space is not overcrowded; too much is not said, yet the picture is fully sold.

The spaces used for the opening day were four sevens and a cross page eights, the latter being the better of the two simply because there was more space in which to work. For its space the smaller display tells much more, since it carries the other features, as well.

In each case the full value of the size went to each house, which is the valuable feature of dual advertising. Each house pays for only half the space yet virtually gets double value. Mr. Pierce does good work, but this is about the best he has sent in. It is worth studying. And did it ever occur to you that even if you have only one house you might form an alliance with the opposition? Think that over. If you make money why worry because the other man is helped if he also helps you?

How Press Book Art Work Looks in Full Layouts

HERE is another example of how the United Artists press book art works out in full page form. The layout was designed by Will D. Harris, of the Grand, Columbus, Ohio, who knows that he does not have to use all of a full page for six point type. There were two displays sent in, but the other will not reproduce on account of the colors. Both were based upon the press book art sketches, slightly retouched.

In the one shown, for example, the hat is shaded in, the shadow on the nose is lightened, the eyes are shaded and the lower lip is filled in and the curls are lightened slightly, but it is still the press book cut and it would have looked almost as well without these changes. The copy for this is very well done. Not much selling talk is needed for Miss Pickford. More than this would detract from the page without helping sales in the least.

Open Display Effective in This Salina Space

EFFECTIVE use of open display is made in this four twelves from the Strand, Salina, Kansas. The selling talk is largely in the box in the centre; not so much selling talk, for little is needed with Fairbanks, but rather the argument of the story. The four breaks in the inner rule allude to the superstitions which form the foundation of the story. The rest trusts to the cut. The handling of the house signature is unusual, but it is sightly and it gets the idea over. More is not needed and would be too much. The one point rule is rather light, but it is precisely this lightness which gives the effect. A three point rule would spoil this layout. This forms an excellent model.

Clean Up Stunts for "On With the Dance"

"On With the Dance" Used Special Ten Page Newspaper Section to Hook-up

ABOUT four years ago a southwestern exhibitor startled his brother managers by taking a full page advertisement for "Shoes" in which he used only a few inches of space himself, hooking up local merchants with allusions to the play. This idea was used by many others and lately single page hook-ups have become almost too common to notice and the double page has become the standard. Now comes Charles Cross, of the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, with the special section hook-up for "On With the Dance," and the double deck has had to go to the rear.

Mr. Cross did so well with the "Everywoman" campaign, recently described in these pages, that he was given first chance at Mae Murray in "On With the Dance." This was the first production anywhere and he was given every possible assistance from the Cincinnati office of the Famous Players-Lasky including the services of Manager Harris P. Wolfberg and Oscar A. Doob.

For a starter he made cut-outs of the figures on the 24-Sheet, which were placed on either side of the lobby arch, as shown in the cut. These figures were mounted on beaver board. From the hand of the dominant figure on the left, a whip was run to the couple on the right. This lash was wired and connected to the flashing sign above so that tiny bulbs outlined the lash as it seemed to flicker across the space and curl around the man and woman. This strong attractor was supplemented by as many stills and one and three sheets as could be gotten into the lobby.

Built Up with Paper.

Five hundred one sheets were posted around town, with threes and 24-sheets in proportion, and a special snipe was prepared in black on yellow, with a striking nude figure in silhouette and merely the title of the film. Hundreds of these were pasted wherever pasting space was available. They were 9 by 42 inches and could not be overlooked.

Cut-outs were supplied to all stores willing to display them and with such striking figures it was possible to work into places where cut-outs ordinarily would not be permitted. A local phonograph company went this one better with a chorus girl from a local burlesque show who danced to the music of the instrument at regular intervals through the day. She was masked and wore a costume in imitation of Miss Murray as the masked dancer.

And the Section.

The full section devoted to a single picture seems to have originated in Jacksonville; at least it was first reported from there. The Columbia used a full section for "Everywoman," but in repeating this stunt the cost was partly laid off to local concerns, and at the same time this use of hook-up advertising actually gave added value to the display.

These hook-ups were ingenious. A taxicab company took a page to show the star entering one of their cabs and below reproduced a telegram from the star telling that she always used the same company in New York. A dentist took another page with a little letter purporting to come from the star giving emphasis to the importance of proper care of the teeth. The phonograph company came in with a page and a local restaurant hooked up its dancing service with the title as shown. A shoe store, a jeweler, an auto agency and others also came in on the display, and to get it all in the newspaper reduced its usual volume of advertising 25 per cent. on account of the white paper shortage. All of the text in the section had a direct bearing upon the play and the front page; a combination of line and half tone, and the house display on the back page were done in black, green and orange, a vivid combination.

All Worked for Business.

By the time the attraction opened the town was all wrought up. Heavy emphasis had been given the fact that this was the first presentation of the film anywhere in the world and a strong appeal to local pride was a feature of all announcements. It did not make the picture any better, but the public felt a pride in the fact that it was seeing it before New York did. More than this, the vivid lithographs and the audacious snipes had worked up a strong interest wholly apart from the fact that it was a premier, and the police could not have kept the crowds from the doors.

It was a box office clean-up that beat even the record of "Everywoman," which had been handled along the same lines, and the ten-page special had much to do with the result, though no one thing can the pointed out as the especial business maker.

But the doom of the double decker has been sealed. Mr. Cross, in poker parlance, has seen the two and raised it eight. Hereafter it will take twelves or better to beat the record.

Steve Farrar Banquets Staff on Anniversary

OBSERVING his usual custom, Steve Farrar, of Eldorado and Harrisburg, Ill., gave a banquet to his staff at the Orpheum, Harrisburg, on the occasion of the anniversary of the house. A real eats was followed by a program of home talent. It is a pleasant custom and serves to keep up the morale of his employes. Just to show it can be done, Steve broke into the local humor column the other day by remarking that while the rest of the country went dry January 17, Bearcat would not go dry until the 21st, his playing date. He doesn't overlook a bet anywhere. Steve has added an eight page program lately, but he gives too much of his space to the outside advertisers. We would not sell our own front page, if we had a house, no matter how hard anyone begged.

Try a Mystery Girl and Make Business

SOMEHOW the newspapers never get tired of falling for the veiled lady. Even New York has been stood upon its head more than once by a masked person, more or less young, who put up at some famous hotel and forgot to ask the clerk not to telephone a hot tip to the daily papers, and it works even better in the smaller towns.

The latest wonder worker was employed in getting "Pinto" over for the Grand, Columbus, Ohio, where Pinto had its premiere. Ohio is getting so that it will no longer look upon mere first run pictures. They must be "first time in the world" or the blase theatregoer stays home and looks at the cartoon strips in the evening paper. Ohio is getting spoiled. Pick up any recent issue of any trade paper and you'll find some Ohio town wallowing in the delights of putting it all over the Broadway pre-run houses, and of course Mabel Normand's latest had to be shown in Ohio or the film would be out of luck, so Columbus was selected as one of the few towns within the state limits not yet favored with a "first time ever" picture.

Hist! She Comes!

So it happened that a beautiful lady (all mystery ladies are beautiful, even if they do wear masks) unloaded herself out of a taxicab in front of one of the palatial palaces traveling men call hotels—and some other things—and asked for a small room and a large bath. The clerk, who seemed to be well trained, reached for a key with one hand and a telephone with the other. Before the masked marvel had succeeded in erasing the marks of travel behind double locked doors there was a reporter from every paper in town down in the lobby and a sob sister right next the elevator.

Will D. Harris, of the Grand, was running alternate twos and fours about "Pinto" in all of the papers, but the well trained reporters were too polite to suspect anything. They just trailed the masked lady and ran up cab bills. And they were bills to give the cashier heart failure, too, for the Lady would dash out of the hotel, into the nearest taxi, rush up the street and back again, with all of the reporters in full cry at the hind wheels of her hack.

She Knew How, Too.

Apparently the Masked Lady was some little "swindle sheet" builder herself, for she went to all the prominent restaurants and cabarets, took in the dry goods stores and did about everything she could think of except stay in her room. And Mary's lamb had nothing on those eager reporters when it came to the "sure to go" stuff. They were there—all of them.

She was having the time of her young life with costly viands and the nearest she could come to rare vintages in these dry and desolate days, and every morning she read in the papers of all she had done the day before. She was as loquacious as an oyster when it came to the who are you stuff, but she didn't seem to mind the reporters in the least and she did her best to provide them with a new story every day. And she was an excellent provider, as the files of the Columbus papers will attest.

Along toward the close of the fourth day, when the news had begun to sag a bit, she gave audience to her volunteer escort, removed her mask and informed them with a witching smile that she was in Columbus in the interest of "Pinto," whereupon the reporters sighed to think of all the cab rides and store eats they were going to lose in the dreary days to come and beat it for their respective offices to spring the glad tidings upon a waiting public, which for three days had been storming the doors of the publication offices to get the first papers off the press that they might learn the newest facts.

Goldwyn's Mystery Woman

She surely did jazz Columbus, Ohio, when they put on "Pinto" "for the first time in the world."

Taking a Fresh Start.

But the now unmysterious lady was not through yet. She announced that she was going to give a special performance of "Pinto" for those dear newsboys who sold the papers telling all about herself. Columbus was to have the first chance outside of Sam Goldwyn to see what "Pinto" looked like, but the newsboys were going to be the very first of the first nighters. They were going to be such premier premiers that they had to get up very early in the morning and sell all their papers so they could get down to the Grand in time to see the show and still give the charwomen a chance to clean up the house for the benefit of the premiere matinee.

About seven hundred small boys made the gate and yelled their heads off over the many adventures of the lady with the painted pony. Then the general public, now aroused to the utmost pitch of clamorous enthusiasm, was permitted to step up to the box office. They did —almost to excess.

As a last flash she climbed into a suit of cowboy togs; perhaps the very suit Mable Normand had worn in the play, and sold newspapers on a prominent street corner. This last effort was not needed, for the Grand had about all the business it could use, but she was there and it cost nothing extra, so she boomed the sale of newspapers and a lot of the local sports were thrilled at the chance to talk to her.

Turns Newsboy Herself.

Then she went away and the press agent lighted a real Corona and reached for his yardstick. The stunt had pulled just about eight columns of pure reading matter.

After that it seemed foolish to do anything else, but they had planned a double deck display with twelve business concerns, each display carrying a portrait or scene still and each space having one typographical error more than the printer got in by mistake. If you found all twelve before anyone else, you got ticket prizes until the tickets ran out.

Taken by and large it was a fat week for the Grand and for Columbus and for the reporters and for Goldwyn and Miss Normand and everyone, and it didn't cost anything like what eight columns of pure reading would have cost at regular rates or even with a trade discount.

Advertising on Ice Used to Plug Burston Serial

LOUIS BURSTON has found one place where you do not have to give lithograph tickets for billboard privileges. Seeing profit for others than the icemen in the cold snap, he had five thousand spears made up with pennants advertising the King Baggot serial, "The Hawk's Trail." These were shipped to the various distributing companies and planted in the ice of the rivers, with the result that hundreds of floes on the Hudson, Ohio, Mississippi and other large rivers are "carrying the banner" for Burston. Naturally they attract a lot of attention as they float past the cities below the ice line, and newspaper publicity is added to the more direct results of the aquatic parade.

Omaha Took Ten Pages to Tell About "Everywoman"

ANOTHER ten page special on "Everywoman" is reported, this time from Omaha where the first presentation at the Rialto was marked by the issue of a ten page supplement wholly devoted to the play, with the advertisements of a dentist, physician, baker, beauty cream, automobiles, furniture, musical instruments, washing machines and candy; all wares for which the heart of "Everywoman" was supposed to yearn. These were all pages and half page spaces and helped to get the section over without too much expense to the house.

Race Track Lobby Helped "In Old Kentucky"

Elaborate Campaign and Lobby Dress Put Over "In Old Kentucky" to Limit

EVERYTHING from a "real" horse-race to a special lobby was used to put over "In Old Kentucky" at the Madison, Detroit. The running horse treadmills similar to those used in Ben Hur were imported from New York by Manager George W. Trendle, and at the proper place in the film the screen was flied and the running horses took up the action and Queen Bess in the flesh swept on to victory.

But this was just one of the jazz stunts which helped Mr. Trendle hang up a new house record in the face of the cussedest weather that could be imagined. That was all right to talk about in the newspapers, but he wanted something that would catch the crowd on the street—and he got it.

First of all he built the front of the lobby to suggest the back of a race-course grand stand, the pillars being masked by compo-board to suggest the supports of the stand. Inside, the box office was hidden behind a falsework suggesting the ticket window of a track. White palings led the audience to the various sections of the theatre, carrying out the suggestion of the course and taking them right to the top of the aisles in a proper frame of mind.

Plenty of Flags.

Outside the house was decorated with streamers including one rope of penants leading clear up to the corner where the side street intersects the main thoroughfare. Hundreds of these flags were employed both inside and outside of the house, and the gay colors bravely fought the snow-ladened clouds and made a bright spot on the grayest of gray days. The colors fairly screamed.

All available billboards were bought up for the showing, about four times the usual amount of paper being pasted, and the lithograph display was backed by window and street car cards while a full week before the showing a girl in jockey silks was stationed in the inner lobby to give out heralds.

The newspapers got quarter and half pages where smaller spaces were usually employed, and there was a heavy hook-up with the music stores on the plugger song, one establishment selling 1,200 copies of the song in a single day.

Right Down to the Show.

Not a single angle was overlooked. Everything possible was done to make everyone in town realize that a big picture was being shown, and after they got in they were given a big show. Only a news weekly and a prologue were used in addition to the film, but the prologue, with a colored troupe, was carefully staged and made into a real production. Effort did not stop with getting them in. Mr. Trendle wanted to send them out again, each a booster for the show, and he did that to the fullest degree. It was a real production, and the horserace, which has not been used in stage shows of late, was a knockout. It made them all sit up and take notice.

As a result the week run was extended and made an indefinite engagement. The first week broke all records with the weather against it, and Mr. Trendle wanted to see what it could do under more favorable circumstances.

Press Book on "Lost City" Offers Helpful Pointers

USEFUL and ornamental" is a time-worn expression which might well be applied to the press book for "The Lost City," the new Warner Brothers serial, for it is both sightly and helpful. Press books must both sell the exhibitor and then help him sell his patrons, and this does both, for it is very attractively printed with a cover in colors, and it is a lesson in good typography as well as in the art of retail film salesmanship, for the contents covers many good selling points as well as exploiting an unusually good line of posters and cuts, the latter ranging from ones to threes, including a very useful notched cut in two and three-column sizes which lets in any matter the exhibitor may desire.

Except for the portrait cuts, every cut and poster gives emphasis to the animal stunts in the fifteen episodes. The animal angle takes this away from the other serials and the cut and paper layout gives emphasis to these stunts.

There are also shown a very useful sticker, a set of animal cards and sheets of decalcomanie pictures which should prove one of the most potent attractors to the kiddies. Two column cuts and mats of a scene from each episode are offered for a weekly change in addition to window cards, slides, heralds and banners.

And if all this is not sufficient, there is a series of silhouettes across the top and bottoms of the text pages which have only to be sent to the engraver to supply top and bottom pieces for special ads. They will also work well in the lobby frames.

Bosworth Was the Person Behind the Grauman Door

MANY forms of doorway advertising were employed to get over the Ince-Bosworth feature, "Behind the Door." At Grauman's, Los Angeles, the door was a massive doorway raised in the lobby and masked by plush hangings, which when drawn apart, disclosed a painting from one of the virile scenes in the play. As an additional feature at this house was the personal appearance of the star, who was disclosed on the stage in a pose from the scene just enacted upon the screen; the picture being stopped and the screen raised at a vital moment. The personal apearances are limited, but running into actual action is always possible and effective.

A Real Idea for "Pro" and "Anti" Features

ADVERTISING an exhibit of "Rare Rum Relics" the Nixon Victoria, Baltimore, put out such a good lobby display that there was some danger that people would look at the lobby and go away without seeing "When Bearcat Went Dry," which the exhibit was supposed to advertise.

The film was played at the Baltimore the week the more rigid prohibition amendment went into effect and the management saw its opportunity for a display which would get the town talking. The house has a large main lobby and this was converted into a museum with exhibits lining both sides. The front was changed to represent the hamlet in the mountains and kerosene illumination replaced the electric lights. A log cabin was built about the box office and the other side was built in with a board structure to match.

Within fancy ran riot in the exhibits, and the display was planned with unusual cleverness. It was not a perfunctory show, but one with real humor. Some of the exhibits really came from road houses and resorts of a happier and damper day, but others were clearly fabricated. A barrel was labeled "Any Old Port in a storm" and another "Wood alcohol with a kick—kick the bucket."

Everybody Dry as "Bearcat."

One exhibit was a case containing some of the modern substitutes for rye and bourbon, mostly patent medicines, many of which contain a higher alcoholic content than the average whiskey, and there were growlers of varying sizes.

A Reminiscence.

A lettered card contrasted the prices of drinks before the war and during the wartime period with the roll of bills now required for a nip, stage money being used for the latter display, and a bottle of real champagne topped a statue wearing a "million dollar necklace" of small bottles of various cordials. This exhibit was guarded by an armed mountaineer who might have been imported from Bearcat itself. The champagne went into the safe each night before the guard went home.

Live white rats and snakes were among the terrible warnings, and a small vial of mincemeat was supposed to be the last ever made with brandy. A statue of Bacchus "on his last toot" purported to have come from Pompeii, and bottles of various suggestive shapes, empty beer cases and chianti flasks all brought sad reminiscences.

An Art Gallery, Too.

One of the big laughs was a series of portraits of the inhabitants of Bearcat, done by Harry McComas, the stage director. They were caricatures, but so well done as to call for a critical comment in one of the local papers.

The exhibits were not too wildly improbable and were so well framed up that some persons were at a loss to know whether the display was intended for a joke or otherwise. Most, however, were quick to catch the spirit of the occasion and heartily enjoyed the real humor or the announcement cards.

It was one of the most carefully devised stunts yet worked out on the subject, and it boomed business for the play.

Boom Complexion Aids in "Blooming Angel" Drive

WISE exhibitors who book "The Blooming Angel," a new Goldwyn release, will hustle for the drug stores and beauty parlors the moment they have signed on the dotted line. The story hinges on a girl who drags her husband to affluence through the sales of a beautifier, and there is not a town where the hook-up cannot be made with the drug dealers and others handling complexion aids.

Start early enough to get the other fellow enthused. Don't wait until a couple of days before the showing date. Start a month or six weeks ahead and plan with efficiency and forethought.

Almost any store can get a supply of demonstrating samples from one or another of the cosmetic firms. It may even be possible to arrange for a demonstrator for some lotion or cream. It might be possible to have a succession of these demonstrators for nonconflicting toilet aids. If your lobby will permit, have a demonstrator in a day or two before the showing. Take her inside if you have room in the foyer or if you have a side room which can be converted temporarily into a "Beauty Bower."

Take the "Long Break."

Never mind if you do advertise some other man's products. Take contentment in the thought that you are splitting 60-40 and getting the long end. He is helping advertise you.

Anyone can get a window display without half asking, but aim higher than that. Try and get a big splash. It costs no more and has many times the effect of a straight window hook-up, and you can work it all the way from a demonstrator in a window to talks on beauty at a morning matinee in your house.

Surcharged Ad on Front Page

GETTING on the front page with an advertisement is a hard enough job with most sheets, but surcharging an advertisement is more difficult still, yet it can be done and it works tremendously. The Colonial Theatre, Beaver Falls, Pa., recently ran a three line announcement across the front page of the local sheet, printing in light red which permitted the black type below to be seen. It merely read "Colonial Theatre, 'Auction of Souls.' Tonight, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday," but it is safe to say that it was one advertisement which every reader in town could not help seeing. It works well once, but it is an "only once" stunt.

Irresistible in his personal charm, dissolute and unprincipled, uncannily skillful in his profession, law — made "Beauty" Charley Steele at once the pride and despair of Montreal.

How his masterful personality, his craving for drink, his somehow attractive superciliousness, brought him into the lives of two women, different entirely save that both were beautiful, makes this one of the really great big love stories of modern times. It won for it's author knighthood.

Mr. Lytell's enactment of the role of Steele, the artistic and powerful dramatic merit of the production, put the picture on a plane equal to that occupied by the novel.

Six Practical Ideas to Get You Business

Similarity Contest Has Rival in Beauty Show

DIFFERING only from the "Similarity Contest" in that it is offered as a beauty quest, the Marguerite Clark Contest in the Memphis News-Scimetar brought the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., more than three pages of news publicity for Marguerite Clark in "Luck in Pawn" at the cost of a loving cup.

The stunt was adopted by G. E. Brown, publicity man for the theatres, and was taken up by the newspaper as a circulation idea. A week before the first showing the paper announced that Miss Clark wanted to know who was the prettiest girl in Memphis and would personally pass upon the winning photographs. The first shot was a two-column, front page story, followed by a daily story of varying lengths.

The prize, a loving cup of silver, was purchased from a local jeweler who was glad to give it a window display for the two weeks the contest ran. The "official" photographer made all photographs free, getting his profit from the additional orders. It was not required that the contestants pose to this photographer, but most of them went to him and almost all ordered some pictures for their own use.

Some 300 photographs were submitted to the local judges, and from these the twelve best were selected and sent Miss Clarke, who made the final decision. The contest ran the week preceding the showing and the week of the run, the announcement of the winner being made in the Saturday edition. Business was good the entire week.

An angle not used was a slide showing the entries of the twelve finally chosen. This might have been worked for additional publicity.

Mirror Ads Appeal to Women

LOBBY mirrors appeal to women, so James R. Duncan, of His Majesty's, Sherbrooke, Canada, had his mirrors lettered with advertisements for the coming shows, leaving space for the women to use in adjusting their hats as they left the theatre. All women and most men will instinctively glance in a mirror as they pass and an advertisement in colored chalks or even soap will work wonders. If chalk is used the mirror must be clean and the chalk triturated in a little water to which some glue has been added. Not too much glue should be used or it will not be as easy to clean the glass. Cut-outs from one sheets can be made the basis of really handsome displays.

This Teaser Worked by Postcard in Milwaukee

TEASING by mail is not new, but it is less frequently done than in the newspaper pages, and therefore it is more apt to attract attention. George Fisher, of the Alhambra, a Saxe house in Milwaukee, worked it to its last development for "Pollyanna." His campaign was simple yet vastly effective and it can be worked in any place, though in a small town the cards should be printed and mailed from some outside point, for absolute secrecy is one of the essentials.

Two weeks before the opening he mailed out several thousand cards reading "Why is Sunday, January 18, a day of gladness and the biggest day of the year?" This was all there was on the card and no one could figure whether it was an advertisement or some socialistic threat. It aroused immediate interest, but to make certain that the stunt worked right, Mr. Fisher had some carefully chosen assistants call up the newspapers every little while for a day or two to ask what it all meant. Naturally this started the newspapers' gumshoe experts on the trail, but clues led nowhere and for a week the town was all excited about it with repeated newspaper stories.

Then a second card was sent out to the same list of addresses announcing that Pollyanna, the glad girl, would be at the Alhambra for a week commencing on that date, and the town quieted down again, but every man, woman and child knew about "Pollyanna" and the Alhambra.

Stubborn Southern Mule Helped Old Mill Sales

MAKING the picture of Miss Pickford astride the mule his trade mark for "Heart of the Hills," C. E. Jeffress of the Old Mill, Dallas, Texas, played it to the limit. He had a cut-out made for the lobby seven feet at the base and eight feet high, used the idea of "The Mule and the Girl" in all his newspaper work and advertised for a girl to ride a mule through the business streets.

Ruth Yelton was engaged to chauffeur the mule and for several days she rode the downtown sections trailed by five reporters from as many newspapers each hoping that the mule would have an altercation with a street car, or something. The street cars seemed to bear a charmed life and none of them got hit, though several narrowly escaped having their dashboards kicked in, then the mule took pity on the newspaper men and bucked his rider off on one of the busiest thoroughfares and went for a stroll on the sidewalk. He lost his job right then and there, but a farmer who had read the advertisement had just come thirty-five miles with a bunch of assorted mules and a more reliable understudy was engaged. The aggregate result was several pages—not columns—of more or less humorous stuff in the different papers, and a lot of people attended the Old Mill who would not have been coaxed by page advertisements. It was merely a new version of an old stunt—but it brought the money in in the good old way.

Same Old Flat Car and Same Old Cash Result

CERTAINLY you can't do small time stuff in the cities. Any lazy or weak kneed exhibitor will tell you that, but the Strand, Denver, very lately chartered a flat car from the trolley company, mounted two 24-sheets and six and ran it over the rails with a siren in perpetual motion to call attention to the display, and people came and bought tickets precisely as they would in the yappest of yap towns. Don't listen to the wail of the pessimist. Be an optimistic advertiser and you'll grow into a regular Pollyanna on the results.

But to help the street car work, the Strand put out twenty-five 24-sheets, 10,000 cardboard keys and the same number of blotters, all telling about the keys in "The Adventures of Ruth," the serial that was being given a trolley ride.

Rogers Clothes Used to Help Clothing Dealer

WILL ROGERS is no mold of fashion in "Jubilo," and when this film played Elmira, N. Y., at the Amusu lately, a local clothing company used a cut-out and a number of stills in his window with a remark to the effect that he could get a new suit at the store very cheaply. They also took a quarter page space in the papers with a press-book cut showing Jubilo receiving money from the heroine with the line "This will get me a new suit at Reid & Winner's 33⅓% discount sale."

Warner Brothers Serial Was Incorrectly Credited

APOLOGIES are offered Warner Brothers for an error in the last issue which incorrectly gave credit for the very striking poster for "The Lost City" to another company. "The Lost City" is a Warner Brothers serial and the poster was designed by them. Naturally they desire full credit for so excellent a piece of work. We regret that proper credit was not given originally.

Thirty-two Thousand Persons Saw Show in 1,000 Seat House in Week

THIRTY-TWO thousand persons saw "Broken Blossoms" in a single week in a house seating only one thousand persons, yet not a single person was admitted to any one of the forty three shows after the performance was begun. That is the record hung up by Harvey C. Horater, of the Pantheon, Toledo, and his campaign presents many points of novelty.

In the first place tickets were sold in advance. This fact was widely advertised, and equal publicity was given the fact that no one would be permitted to enter the house, once the performance had begun. For once patrons were assured the fullest enjoyment of the performance. The first reel was not utterly spoiled by the streaming in of late comers. So much emphasis was given this fact that no one could complain at the enforcement of the rule, and so well was it understood that there were few late comers.

The Ticket Plan.

As stated, Mr. Horater's house seats 1,000 persons. The tickets for each day were printed on pasteboard of a different color, red for Sunday, white for Monday, and so on through the entire seven days. Of these 700 were sold in advance, 237 were held for the box-office sale; each sale starting directly the doors were closed for the preceding performance, and 63 were reserved to carry over any who might wish to remain for a second showing. No seat checks were given, the reservation covering only the particular showing.

The film ran for an hour and three quarters, with fifteen minutes for clearing the house and seating the new crowd. The first show started at eleven, and there was a repeat every two hours thereafter. The tickets for the first show were lettered "A," for the second "B" and so on to "F" for the nine o'clock show. Tickets were good only for the show sold, but so few came late that their tickets were taken up under the play allowance of the 63 tickets held out.

Saw the Whole Show.

As soon as the overture began the doors were closed and the line formed for the next performance. Long before the doors were reopened two hours later, a packed lobby served as an advertisement for the next show. The crowds were made as comfortable as possible, but Mr. Horater realized the advertising value of that line.

There was a special prologue and an overture, and for once every person saw a complete performance without interruption. Two orchestras were used as well as four Chinese musicians who played off stage at appropriate points in the picture. The oriental effect was taken from the prologue right through to the front of the house, the ushers being dressed in Chinese costume and the lobby decorated with apple blossoms and foliage, picked out with colored lanterns.

Six regular shows were given each day, with a midnight matinee in addition.

Lavish With Paper.

In all 7,000 sheets of paper were posted, including 150 24-sheets, 200 6-sheets, the same number of threes and 100 sixteen sheets, all up for two weeks, with 500 ones to freshen the showing the second week, the latter being used mostly in the central section, with the others going well outside of the city.

The newspaper campaign ran for three weeks in advance and covered some 2,000 inches of space, and all advertising displays carried the details of the advance sale and the closed doors. This heavy campaign carried much reading publicity.

All of this brought a heavy advance sale and offset a period of unsettled weather, while there was assurance that a certain percentage of late comers could be cared for, and people did not stay away feeling that it would be useless to try. This was one of the important angles of the reservation sale. Mr. Horater was practically assured an attendance of 700 at each performance, but he was still able to coax the late comers and those who could not plan in advance. It was a record breaking week and worthy of imitation.

Back Stills with Cretonne

ANNABEL DAVIDSON, of the City, Strand and Rialto theatres, Brockton, Mass., writes that she gets a good backing for lobby displays of stills by having several sets of cretonne covered boards which just fit the frames and serve as a backing for small stills or the larger sizes. With a number of sets the displays can be changed weekly without becoming stale.

Along the same lines it should be remembered that often the local decorator will have part of a roll of wallpaper left from a job. He will sell this stuff cheaply, if he does not give it away in return for a couple of passes, and some very effective backings can be made in this manner.

In either case care should be taken that the design of the cloth or paper is not more assertive than the stills they are to back. Tell the decorator or the dry goods man just what you want it for and often you can pick up a remnant at practically no cost.

Soft Drinks Will Boom Fountain and Feature

BOOMING plays by means of soda fountain concoctions is no new scheme, but it always works and if you can hit upon some good combination, you can get a really big run. There are several soda fountain publications which give prizes for the best suggestions, and you can get your hints from these if your own invention is limited. If you hit upon a really good combination you will be surprised how quickly the public will take it up. The Anita Stewart Productions is sending around an "In Old Kentucky Julep," based upon a combination of grape juice and mint syrup or leaves and it is making a hit. It may give you an idea for somehting for your own house drink, a "Rivoli Rickey," or a "Capital Cobbler." The julep is made with ⅛ of a fountain glass of grape juice, one ounce of pineapple syrup, the juice of a lime or half a lemon, chopped ice and soda, topping with mint leaves or adding mint syrup as a "float."

The Shutter Problem

THE criticism advanced by Stringer, page 422, January 17 issue, has brought out a mass of comment by correspondents, who all agree that Stringer is right, but that nevertheless the error is so slight as to be negligible.

In this Griffith agrees, as also does Auerbach, from whom we shall presently publish a letter clearing up the whole thing.

Jarden himself admits the correctness of Stringer's correction, but says:

> The difference between the two calculations is an angle of such magnitude that if a line .125 of an inch high were erected perpendicular to one side, so that it would just touch the other side, it would have 2.5 feet from the apex of the angle.
> Such an angle is insignificant when we consider the increased complexity of the problem and the fact that it adds less than .02 of an inch to the necessary shutter blade width.
> Of course, if the diameter of the beam were increased the error would be greater, and vice versa, but I do not think that, in actual practice, the beam will ever appreciably exceed 1.25 inches in diameter.

You Are in Error.

You are in error there, friend Jardin. The ray may, and often does, exceed that diameter by considerable, though that would, we think, never be true if the shutter were placed at the aerial image, where it belongs. But on the whole, we hold you to be justly entitled to the prize which was awarded you, because but for your very-nearly-correct solution the correct one would not have appeared.

In other words, while brother Stringer has given us the correct formula, he gave us nothing at all until you pulled his trigger. Just a gentle tap on the dome of neighbor Stringer, for the good of his immortal soul.

John Solar says "Stringer's formula is correct and will prove out under any condition."

To Members Society M. P. Engineers

President Campe, in sending out New Year's greetings, very properly urges all members to come to the May Montreal meeting, prepared to take part in the various discussions.

He points out the fact that such discussions usually are carried on by a small group of active members.

He asks that ALL members lift themselves into that class, and if his exhortation is heeded we shall all benefit vastly.

Size of Screen

H. T. Harrell, Indianapolis, Ind., proposes to enlarge his theatre from fifty by 110 to fifty by 165 feet. He asks whether his present twelve by sixteen foot mirror screen will serve.

A sixteen foot picture would be a bit small for a house where the rear seats are 155 feet from same. If an ordinary screen were used, I think, however, you will find the sixteen foot mirror screen will do very well, because you will be able to get a brilliant picture and one of the peculiarities of the mirror screen is that the further one is from it the better it shows up.

On the whole, I would advise that you keep the sixteen foot mirror filling the same entirely with the picture and extending a black border not less than three feet wide (four will be better) all the way around it.

Important Notice

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which canot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Are You Getting Maximum Screen Illumination for Wattage Used?

The 11x17 (two on one) LENS CHARTS printed on heavy paper are suitable for framing. Both A. C. and D. C. amperage 25 to 60 is covered with Plano-convex or meniscus bi-convex; correct projection lens diameter to avoid waste, also correct distance of revolving shutter from aperture.

Your projection room is not complete without the LENS CHARTS.

From Trenton New Jersey

Lewis M. Edwards, Trenton, New Jersey, after commenting on the Stringer-Jarden argument, says:

> I agree with you that distance of center of a shutter shaft from center of light beam has an important bearing on efficiency of an intermittent movement (probably you mean right, and are merely tangled in your words, brother).
> The thing has to do with efficiency, alright, but has no bearing on intermittent movement. A given intermittent ratio will itself always deliver a given possibility in light percentage at the screen, but that result may be made slightly greater or less by added or lessened distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam.
> (Very likely this is exactly what you meant, but it is not what you actually said. Ed.).
> While the angular speed of the shutter is the same at all points of its diameter, the linear speed is more rapid as distance from center is increased, hence the further from the center the less time will be required to travel across a given distance, such as, for instance, one and one half inches.
> The one-and-a-half-to-one shutter has a faster angular and linear speed than the ordinary shutter) hence, from this viewpoint, it has advantage.
> Thankful for Help.
> This is the first time I have accepted your open invitation to enter the department lists, but I have nevertheless been a reader of it for a long time and am very thankful to it for the help it has given me.
> Would like to suggest that you put questions in the department regularly. It gives the fellows a chance to get busy instead of sitting around with nothing to do.

All right, friend Edwards. While we hold that the one who wants to get busy can always dig up a subject for discussion (and he'll be very apt to get it, too, in this department), I'll give you all this nut to try your hammers on:

Exactly what are the advantages and disadvantages of the one-and-a-half-to-one shutter as against the ordinary 3-winger? There, now, go to it and let's see what sort of a cloud of dust you can kick up.

From an Old Standby

Recently we opened a letter and gave a mental gasp as the signature came to view. The lost is found. The sleeper hath awakened. Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, is with us once more.

Welcome to our city, Old Timer. Wipe your feet and walk right in while we slaughter the fatted, long waiting calf.

In explanation to our newer readers, Brother Smith is an old-time department fan, who was its regular correspondent for several years. Having now made his bow for him, we will let him talk as follows:

> Well, Old Pal, I see you are still holding the fort against all comers. Good luck to you!
> No, I'm not dead, but studying always. Recently, I have received several inquiries (Friend Smith is a bit of an oracle in the Lone Star State. Ed.) as to how to connect two rectifiers in multiple series (Gonna set on you there, very presently, friend Smith. It can't be done. Ed.) and burn both arcs at once, so that craters may be burned in on new trim. Am inclosing sketch of connection which has been aproved by the G. E. Company's Dallas office.

To operate rectifiers F and G and projector arc J, close switches C, Ma, Mb and T and close switch N on Na. Close single throw, double pole switch R on contact Ra. This will keep both rectifiers in operation and projector arc J.

To Start Arc K.

We now have both rectifiers working on arc J and desire to start arc K. To do this we switch O to Oa and open switch T. (that would cut out rectifier G. Ed.)

When ready to strike arc K we close switch T and open switch N. If either rectifier goes dead (holy smoke, man, how can you open switch T without killing rectifier G? You've made a mistake somewhere. Ed.) throw switch R on contact Rb for warming up, close switch Mc, keeping A closed. Suppose arc J is being operated and K is ready for warming up; throw O to Ob. When reay to start throw O to Oa.

With both rectifiers out of commission you can run on Compensarc H and warm up with resistance I. Keeping T closed, U open and R closed, compensarc H operates either arc, as so also does resistance I, but switches Ma and Mb must be kept open and switch E (dotted lines) closed to do this.

You understand that rectifiers are temperamental animals and that fact must be taken into consideration.

It is out of my system now and I feel better.

A Bit Twisted.

Friend Joe's idea seems to be entirely practical, though it seems to me he gets just a bit twisted when it comes to telling about it.

I would put the matter this way. To operate both rectifiers in parallel on arc J, close switches C, Ma, Mb and T. Next close switch R on Rb and switch N on Na, switch E (dotted lines) and switch Mc being open. Both rectifiers will now operate on arc J.

To use both rectifiers on arc K, close switches C, M and Mb. Close switch T and close switch R on Rb. Close switch O on Oa and you have it, switch Mc being, of course, open.

To use both rectifiers on arc J and warm up arc K with compensarc H, proceed as already set forth for rectifiers, then close switch M, C and close O on Ob.

To warm up J with both rectifiers, or only one, for that matter, working on K, close Mc and close N on Nb.

To cut out the rectifiers entirely and use compensarc H, open Ma and Mb, close E and Mc.

To use resistance H for warming up when either or both rectifiers are working on either arc, it can't be done.

To operate arc J with resistance when rectifiers are not working, open Ma and Mb, close E, open U and close S.

To use the resistance on arc K, same as on J, except open N, close T and close O on Oa.

Oh, yes, I nearly forgot to sit on friend Smith. It would be impossible to make a multiple series with only two rectifiers.

The connection is straight parallel, or multiple.

Enterprising Exhibitor

H. T. Dodge, Manager, Morrisville, Vermont orders lens charts and question booklets and says:

> With the above I hope to inject a little pep into my projectionist. Have told the "boys" that when they can answer the questions I will double their pay.
> Most of the help I have had advance only about so far and then go the other way, with result that I don't get the work I should in my projection room.

Surely the proposal to double the pay should be ample inducement to your men to do some real studying. You say your men advance about so far and then "go back"

Could we not put it this way: they go ahead while the business of projection is a novelty to them, then they lose interest, cease studying or trying, or adopt the idea that they already know enough, or even all there is worth knowing, under which condition they do not advance and the man who does not advance automatically goes back.

Already Preparing for Montreal Meeting

Already the Papers Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is busy whipping things into shape for the Montreal meeting of the society, although that meeting is almost half a year away.

We also have it on reliable authority that friend Perkins, of the Perkins Electric Company, Montreal, is busy sandpapering his welcomer, polishing up his come-again smile and dusting off his handshaker against the glad time when his office will be turned into a howling wilderness, his business totally disrupted and his desks used for sofas by the delegate engineers.

As to Patents

Every year for more than ten years the editor has received dozens of inquiries as to the advisability of taking out patent on some idea or invention. He has said, in print, many times and now repeats, that the ordinary man would do very much better, in the end, by finding a roulette game and bucking the double O.

In the first place, a patent has little real value, unless it is a "basic" patent—a patent on a basic idea, such, for instance, as the Latham loop, and even then only the corporation or man of unlimited capital is able to protect it from piracy.

The Only Hope.

The only small hope the small inventor has is to get a basic patent (which must be drawn by a high class patent attorney if it is to hold water in the courts) and then sell it, usually for a nominal sum, to some one in position to use the invention.

Like playing the small towns, this looks might alluring, but, also like playing the small towns, for one who gets away with it, hundreds fail, utterly to realize a cent, and the one who does win out well earns every penny that he gets.

Williard B. Cook Will Have a Paper

Williard B. Cook, president of the Pathescope Company of America, New York City, will read a paper entitled "A New Intermittent Movement," at the May Montreal meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the salient points of which will be as follows:

Intermittent movement a prime essential to motion picture projection.

Mention of beater movement, Lumiere harmonic movement and star and cam movement.

Description and analysis of the ordinary geneva movement and modifications of same.

Specific description of the new eccentric star and cam movement, with analysis of its action and description of its alleged advantages over other types of movement.

The paper will be illustrated with line drawings. We should imagine the paper will be pretty thoroughly discussed.

An English Solution

From Colwyn Bay, North Wales, England, comes a letter signed Frank H. Kenyon, Projectionist, which reads.

> I herewith present my idea of the solution of the required width of master blade of revolving shutter working with a five-to-one intermittent movement, as per query October 4 issue.
> Suppose we had a shutter eight inches in diameter, as per circle I of diagram.
> From line A to line B is 72 degrees, which represents the blade width necessary to cover a point size ray for the whole movement of the intermittent. However, since our light ray is one and one-quarter inches in diameter, as per circle L, we must add twenty-one degrees to the width of our blade, so that from A to C, 93 degrees, is the width actually necessary.
> Suppose, however, the shutter to have twelve-inch diameter, as per circle 2. It would then only be necessary to add thirteen degrees to the 72 degree blade, so that the diameter of shutter is an important factor.
> The World came to hand the morning of October 12, so you see I am wasting no time in answering.

We are pleased to see that, although in conservative England you have adopted the modern term "Projectionist." Congratulations! We have not published the diagram because you have confused the five to one movement with the four to one, the latter forming the basis of your figures.

Two Arcs from One Generator

Emily Dolliver, North East Harbor, Maine, asks:

> Have my own light plant, consisting of a ten h.p. kerosene engine and two belt driven generators, one for house lights and one for the projection arc. The latter is a 60 volt, 2.5 K.W., supplying 41.7 amperes.
> Have heretofore had but one projector, but now I wish to install another. Query: Will I be able to use the two projectors with only the one dynamo?
> I understand the two arcs will burn together for an instant. Will you advise me about it and what, if any, change is necessary.
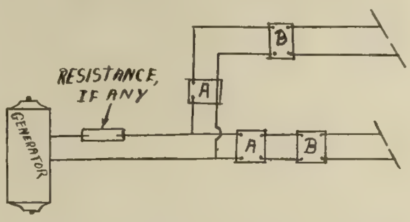
> Attached find stamps for carbon of department reply and I am anxious for my answer.

You can run two projectors from your generator, but not at the same time.

Wire as per attached diagram, in which A-A are fifty ampere fuses and B-B the machine table switches. When one arc is burning and you bring the carbons of the other together to strike the arc of the idle lamp the other arc will quit you cold—go on vacation—go out. And that is all there is to it.

Striking the second arc will probably make the armature of the generator sing for a second, but it will not injure it if it is in good condition. Any well made generator should stand a 100 per cent. overload for as much as two minutes, whereas yours will only get a small jolt for a fraction of a second.



Your Real Trouble.

Your trouble will be that you cannot burn craters on new trim, and that you must start a second projector on an arc which has just been struck, which will probably mean poor light for at least a goodly part of a minute.

You can burn craters in carbons when the theatre is idle, and that will help some. You may have trouble at first in striking the second arc, and get bad results, but with a little practice a very fairly good result may be attained.

Griffiths Objects

John Griffiths objects to our large-diameter-and-diaphragm-down proposal as set forth in the January 31 issue. He says:

> Attached diagram will show that a diaphram should not be placed within the objective when the crater is at or near the aperture. It will be clearly seen that such a diaphram would cut more than half the light from the marginal points of the film before it began to cut any from the central points, which same would make for uneven illumination.
> If a diaphragm be used at all it should be either at the condenser or its image, where it will trim the rays from the points of the film evenly, exactly as it does in the camera lens. Only by such a procedure may we secure that even illumination which is so essential to good screen results.
> What Is Depth.
> The projectionist projects an absolutely flat image from an absolutely flat object, hence any apparent "depth" is in the nature of an optical illusion. The completeness of this illusion depends entirely to what extent we are able to duplicate the film image on the screen.
> The film image gets its apparent depth because of the fact that the relative light values of the different points in the area of the original object were correctly registered by the camera lens upon the film, and if we are to get the full benefit of the splendid work of registration of the high grade camera lens the projectionist must project a perfectly even field to the screen—meaning that if the film were removed the field would be perfectly even as to illumination values. A diaphragm at the condenser will help in this, but the diaphragm must not be used unless there is reserve amperage available to compensate for the loss of light through using the diaphragm.

Did Not Get Meaning.

I think friend Griffiths did not get my meaning, though I am glad it is so, since his objection has brought out the importance of evenness of illumination from an entirely new viewpoint.

My own idea as to the diaphragm remains unchanged. I think Griffiths will agree when he understands.

It is not designed to cut off any of the effective illumination. Not at all.

My idea is just this: Let us adopt a standard diameter for ALL objectives, regardless of focal length or anything else.

Personally, I believe this diameter should be two and a quarter or two and five eighths inches.

Now, you all well know that the picture ray, or beam would not fill the entire diameter of such a lens in all cases, and that is where the diaphragm would come in. It would enable the projectionist to stop the lens down to the actual picture ray or beam, but without cutting any of that.

Why the diaphragm, then, you ask? Merely to prevent stray light which may be reflected from the lens barrel, aperture edges, etc., from passing the lens.

My whole argument is to establish a standard objective diameter and to do it without any damage except in first cost. Show me where I am wrong in that.

Should Demand Better Work

Projectionists should demand better work from directors, cameramen and dark-room men. These chaps have heretofore complained that the poor work of projectionists has injured their artistic effort.

Mebby so, gentlemen, mebby so, but how about the projectionist who is obliged to place before his audience an utterly rotten blunder in the directing and place upon his screen a picture which is dull, fuzzy, out-of-focus and generally punk because of carelessness, stupidity or inefficiency in the dark room or at the camera. Projectionists should protest against the injury to their art through being obliged to place such things before their audiences.

Hoosier Happenings

Calbeck Forges Ahead.

NEWTON A. CALBECK, proprietor of the Auditorium and Crystal theatres at Nappanee, Ind., has taken a seven-year lease on the Spohn Building, Fifth street and Lincoln avenue, Goshen, and will open a new motion picture theatre at the place about April 15. Workmen started this week to make the necessary alterations in the building.

The proposed new theatre, which has not yet been named, will have a seating capacity of about 700. Kenneth Calbeck, who has been associated with his father in the operation of the two theatres at Nappanee, will have active charge of the new theatre.

Alhambra Buys in Theatre.

The property housing the Alhambra Theatre at Indianapolis has been acquired on a ninety-nine-year lease by the Alhambra Realty Company, which is made up of Charles Olson, Edward G. Sourbier, Eugene Marks and several others who are associated with Mr. Olson in a number of theatre projects. The theatre is owned by the Central Amusement Company, which is made up by Mr. Olson and his associates. The realty company, it is understood, has been organized for the purpose of acquiring theatre property.

Easley Enlarges Premises.

Walter Easley, owner of the Princess Theatre at Rushville, Ind., has perfected plans for enlarging the capacity of the theatre and expects to have the work started as soon as the material for the improvements arrives. He has taken a lease on the room adjoining the theatre and will convert it into a part of the theatre.

Shafer Buys Greenville Star.

John H. Shafer, of Greenville, O., last week bought the Star Theatre at Union City, Ind., from H. E. Jackson, who has been proprietor of the theatre for the last three years. The consideration was not made public. Mr. Shafer took charge of the theatre immediately after the transaction was completed. The Star is regarded as one of the most profitable theatres in that county.

Pittsburgh Paragraphs

U. T. E. Has Model Shop.

THE Pittsburgh branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation is now comfortably settled in its new location at 1006-1008 Forbes street, diagonally across the street from its own location. Everything is on one floor, systematically arranged for quick service, and on the whole is one of the finest motion picture supply houses to be found anywhere. Exhibitors are invited to drop in and inspect the new model supply house.

Steeles in Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. James Steele, of Pittsburgh, are in Detroit, where Mr. Steele is looking after some matters in connection with his theatres in Detroit and Bay City. This is the first visit to that section since Mr. Steele's deplorable accident last May.

William Kramer Dies.

Pittsburgh film men were greatly shocked when they learned of the death of William Kramer, caused by pneumonia, Thursday evening, January 22. Mr. Kramer ran the Gem Theatre, on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, for the past several months, formerly owned by Henry Blum, and was one of the most popular exhibitors in the city. He was a young man, 28 years old, and married, and his passing will be mourned for a long time to come.

Weiland Buys "Tillie."

A. A. Weiland, of the Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, has just returned from New York City, where he secured state rights on the famous Keystone comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Denver Doings

"Mickey" Still Breaking 'Em.

THE showing of Mabel Normand in "Mickey" broke attendance records for the season at the American Theatre, according to the manager, Alvah G. Talbot. Being National Stock Show week, the film proved a fine attraction for the cattlemen and the cowmen. There were 9,040 paid admissions on the opening day, and business throughout the entire week remained on a comparative basis. Mr. Talbot lost no time in wiring his success to the New York offices of the W. H. Productions.

Orchestra Leader Switches.

R. Cavallo, leader of the forty-piece orchestra at the Rivoli Theatre for more than a year, has signed a contract to lead the orchestra at the Empress Theatre, a vaudeville house. "Pop concerts," lasting for an hour each Sunday afternoon, were a feature during Cavallo's Rivoli service.

Girl Jockeys Race One Over.

In exploiting Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky" the management of the Rivoli engaged six girl riders and a like number of likely looking horses to appear on the leading thoroughfares.

These "Tablecloth Promoters."

George McDonald, of Trinidad, Colo., always had a hankering to become a movie hero like Bill Hart. While attending the National Stock Show in Denver last week he was approached by a young man claiming to be a representative of a producing company in search of western actors. McDonald paid the stranger $200 to assure his appearance at the latter's office. Cowboy friends of McDonald convinced him he had been fleeced and he immediately notified the police. The stranger, upon being arrested, gave the name of A. T. Hill, of New York City.

Flooding Them with "Doug."

Cincinnati Chinnings

Franklin, Ind., to Step Out.

IF plans now under consideration are carried to success Franklin, Ind., will have one of the finest photoplay houses in the Hoosier State before the year ends. Definite announcement has not been made regarding the location of the playhouse, but O. I. Demaree, who will head the new company, said that options on two favorable sites have been obtained, and declared that unless the very unexpected happens the new theatre project will be put across this year.

As planned the theatre will be on the ground floor and will cost between $30,000 and $50,000 and will be thoroughly modern in every way.

Thomas Leaves U. P. T.

D. M. Thomas has severed connections with the United Picture Theatres of America, having resigned as division manager for Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Dallas, Tex. Mr. Thomas will make an announcement of his plans later.

Bower Tries Bunk Fatigue.

Oscar F. Bower, local manager for Goldwyn, is directing the affairs of his office from a bedside telephone. He is one of the recent "ice storm" victims, suffering a broken leg when he slipped on the ice last week near his home.

On Health Campaign.

At the request of I. W. McMahan and Jerome Jackson, proprietors of a film exchange and Gifts Movie House and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the resolution introduced in the City Council asking the police and Board of Health to inquire into crowding of movie houses has been referred to Council Committee on Public Safety for public hearing. The resolution affects nearly every motion picture theatre in Cincinnati.

Pepping Up a Vacant One.

Negotiations have been completed whereby the Standard Theatre, Vine and Canal streets, which has been vacant for several years, is leased for a period of five years by the owner, Gordon Neff, to Charles J. Broughton and Louis Fischer, Cincinnati business men, for use as a motion picture house. Vaudeville may be added. About $15,000 will be spent in beautifying and renovating the theatre.

Dwyer Goes to New Plant.

The D. Dwyer & Bros. Co., in the theatre supply business on Walnut street, near Sixth, will move to quarters in the Film Exchange Building, having leased a portion of the ground floor for a period of five years, and will pay a rental of $3,300 a year.

Hite Enlarges Activities.

The C. C. Hite Film Exchange has leased the Lyric Theatre for the summer and will run vaudeville and photoplays. The Grand will be retained by John Havlin. The Keith interests have withdrawn their contract with the C. C. Hite Company for summer photoplays, as the theatre will probably be rebuilt along with a new building on the Walnut street side.

Oklahoma Oddities

The Trade in Renew.

ELK CITY, OKLA.—The Princess Theatre has been leased to J. H. Massey, of Elk City by Noah and Hughes, under whose management it had been operated for the past several months. New equipment is to be added by the new manager.

Nowata, Okla.—A new moving picture house has just been completed here by George E. Skilkett, at a cost of $35,000. It has a seating capacity of 900 and opened February 1.

Okemah, Okla.—Work will begin in a few days on the new Crystal Theatre building. It will be fireproof and have a seating capacity of 700.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—A $300,000 moving picture theatre is to be constructed here immediately. Buildings on the site chosen, 118-20 West Main street, are being wrecked to make way for the new structure, which is expected to be completed by next September.

Dan Myers Leases Another.

Dan Myers, owner of the Broadway and Strand theatres at Muskogee, Okla., has taken a long time lease on the Denton Theatre, a legitimate playhouse. He has announced his intention of spending $150,000 in remodeling the theatre into a thoroughly modern moving picture house, with up-to-date equipment.

Cleveland Cullings

Ward'll Be Good Now.

WARD MARSH, photoplay editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer and a popular fellow among the film people of the city, ought to be very, very good now.

He's married—and to Miss Mabel Boyes, the church editor of the Plain Dealer.

It was a newspaper romance, so we are told. Mr. Marsh met Miss Boyes while both were working on the paper, and the young lady being particularly fond of movies enjoyed accompanying Mr. Marsh to see them. Hooray for the movies!

Mary First Star at Euclid.

Mary Pickford is to come into her own in Cleveland with the presentation of her first United Artists production, "Pollyanna," at Loew's Euclid Theatre.

This is the first star to be used at that house, which commands the highest movie prices in the city—35 to 55 cents. Heretofore only super-productions have been shown. Pictures with stars have been used at other Loew houses.

Now, however, a star will be shown, and as "Pollyanna" seemed to come up to the standard for high class pictures set at the Euclid, it was decided to book it for an indefinite run, which Manager Bair hopes will be four weeks at the least.

"Pollyanna" will follow D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Question," which is now playing an indefinite engagement.

Milo and Miles Square Sold.

The Milo Theatre Company, which operates several theatres in Cleveland and northern Ohio, has sold its Milo and Miles Square theatre in Cleveland to Ernest Schwartz, the lawyer.

The Milo Theatre Company, according to S. W. Manheim and Bert Todd, officials, received $25,000 and are now at work on plans for the construction of three new houses in and near Cleveland. They operate the Utopia in Painesville and the theatre in Geneva, Ohio.

Massachusetts Mutterings

Fire Damages Central Square.

FIRE seriously damaged Central Square Theatre, East Boston, the largest moving picture theatre in the district. The blaze started in a storeroom in the basement of the theatre. John Flynn, stage manager, entering the basement early in the morning made the discovery.

Firemen were unable to enter because a gas meter had burned off, filling the place with illuminating gas. A large hole was cut in the concrete in the orchestra and a revolving nozzle inserted. The flames continued to gain headway. The rescue squad was sent for. Donning their masks, they entered the basement and shut off the gas.

The flames did not get into the main part of the theatre. It will be impossible, however, for performances to be given for some time because of the big hole in the orchestra floor.

Theatre to Be Synagogue.

Jewish residents of North Adams, Mass., have purchased the Bijou Theatre for use as a new synagogue. A fund of about $40,000 has been raised.

Well Known Object Lesson.

An employe of the Lancaster Theatre, Boston, has been taught a lesson that he will not soon forget.

This employe, who has charge of the cash of the motion picture theatre, went away leaving the door of the theatre safe open. Upon returning he discovered $200 gone from the open safe. Thinking that robbers had been at work, the employe telephoned the police. When a police sergeant arrived the manager of the Lancaster Theatre explained to the sergeant and employe together that he took the money from the safe as an object lesson to the employe, pointing out to the latter that it would have been very easy for robbers to have gotten the money.

Baltimore Banter

Hartford to Enlarge.

PLANS for the entire reconstruction of the Hartford Theatre, 2618 Hartford avenue, are now under way by Architect E. G. Blanke, 213 North Calvert street. The residence property which adjoins this theatre has been purchased by the Hartford Amusement Company, of which J. J. Valentini is president and Vicent Valentini manager. It is planned to rebuild this playhouse to take in the property just purchased and enlarge the seating capacity from 400 to 1,100.

Benefit Shows Given.

An entertainment for the benefit of the Ladies' Independent Charity League of Baltimore was given at the Picture Garden Theatre, on Sunday night, February 1, through the courtesy of Joseph Blechman, the proprietor.

Almost $1,500 was raised toward the fund for the rebuilding of the Workshop for the Blind, destroyed by fire, at a benefit performance given at the Garden Theatre, on Sunday night, January 25. The affair was held under the auspices of the Harvard Club of Baltimore. The program of moving pictures was arranged by Louis A. DeHoff, director of this playhouse, who also loaned the theatre for the occasion.

Censors Condemn a Mutt and Jeff.

"Shaking the Shimmie," a Mutt and Jeff cartoon, produced by Fox Film, was billed for showing at Loew's Hippodrome in Baltimore recently, and when this film was examined by the Maryland Censor Board it was condemned entirely. The Hippodrome, which is under the management of George A. McDermott, had to go without a Mutt and Jeff cartoon. The Censor Board then reconsidered their decision and will permit the cartoon to be shown with certain eliminations.

Recruiting Rally at Grand.

A program of navy moving pictures was the feature of the entertainment which was part of the navy recruiting rally which was held at the Grand Theatre, Highlandtown, Md., by Commander P. V. H. Weems, on Sunday night, January 25. This theatre was loaned for the occasion by C. B. Councilman, manager of the playhouse. "The Surrender of the German Fleet," and "The President's Convoy" were among the moving pictures shown. The Baltimore Dry Docks and Shipbuilding Company's band furnished music for the occasion. Addresses were made by Commander Weems and J. J. McCarthy, the oldest man who served with the overseas fleet.

Baltimore Personals.

George C. Easter, president of the Baltimore State Rights Film Company, and secretary and treasurer of Jans Pictures, Inc., visited New York City on Wednesday, January 28, to attend a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Jans company.

Arthur D. Gans, a former film man of this city, has obtained an option on the Park Movies Theatre, Fulton avenue and Francis street.

Knee Deep—and Deep in Favor

Little Mary in her first United Artists' "Pollyanna."

The Reliance Film Exchange was recently formed in Washington, D. C., by Leo G. Garner, formerly with Sidney B. Lust and Meyer M. Emmanuel, and they are handling the Alice Brady and Robert Warwick reissues. Mr. Garner visited Baltimore last week.

Clarence Eiseman, well known in Baltimore as a film man, has become associated with Paramount-Artcraft and will handle this territory for that company.

Atlanta Advices

Theatres and Police Agree.

MANAGERS of the motion picture theatres at Macon, Ga., having promised the Police Department that they will not show pictures in the future which might prove objectionable or detrimental to the morals of the city's theatregoing public, it is stated that the City Council will take no further action in the matter. Alderman B. J. Dasher had registered a complaint some time ago, stating that some of the pictures shown "did the young theatregoers no good." The police committee investigated and an agreement was reached.

The main complaint made by the alderman was in regard to poster advertisements. It was the first complaint made against the movie houses in Macon for a number of years.

Madison, Ga., Blossoms Out.

Carl Zirbes, of Washington, Ga., will erect a motion picture theatre, 23 by 85 feet, including balcony, in Madison, Ga. Architects have finished the plans.

New Theatres in South.

Following are several new theatrical construction projects to be carried out this spring and summer in various Southwestern states that have been announced in the past few days.

Richmond, Va., will have a new $300,000 motion picture theatre. Plans are now being drawn to build the theatre on a plot 100 by 160 feet in size.

A $75,000 picture house will be erected this summer at Beckley, W. Va., by Frank Middleberg, of Logan, W. Va.

The Liberty Theatre, a $50,000 vaudeville and motion picture house, will be erected at Jacksonville, Fla., by L. D. Joel.

The Bijou and Victory theatres are to be greatly improved at Greensboro, N. C., by Roland Hill and J. C. Hedgpeth, who also plan to make over the Bevill Building into a model theatre. They will spend about $75,000 on this latter project.

Fine Movie Department.

"A Critic Among the Films" is the title of a new department that is being conducted in a number of Southern daily newspapers by Ralph T. Jones, of Atlanta, one of the leading dramatic critics of the South. The department is developing a broad following, for people are beginning to find out that Mr. Jones' criticisms are unbiased and that he describes the pictures exactly as they affect him.

The department is constructive, educational and interesting at the same time, and the result is that thousands of newspaper readers watch for it and follow the advice of the critic when the pictures are shown in their city. The department is fully protected by copyright by Mr. Jones.

Canadian Chips

Hull Mayor Uses Movies.

THE first official act of Mayor Cousineau of Hull, Quebec, was to engage a representative of Pathe interests to take numerous views of the city of Hull with a view to securing additional industries for the enterprising centers. He stepped into office on January 21, and on the same day the cameraman was engaged in the taking of the pictures, which are to be distributed throughout Canada and sent to the United States for special presentations.

To Produce in Canada.

Louis Cote, of Ottawa, Ontario, one of the directors of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, has intimated that it is the intention of the company to undertake the production in Canada of moving picture dramas in which the stars are players who are now being featured in British film productions in studios across the pond.

"The idea of organizing the Anglo-Canadian company was suggested by Canadians who in England had seen the English features and who were impressed with the belief that there would be a market for such pictures in Canada," said Mr. Cote.

The Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, will release features, British scenics, cartoons and comedies through the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal. It is announced at Ottawa that all available stock in the British enterprise, which is capitalized at $750,000, has been sold. Scenics will be given close attention, as Canada is rich in natural beauties.

Transplanting Canada to London.

The Exhibits and Publicity Bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario, has arranged to take pictures of a number of representative Canadian industrial plants for presentation at the Canadian Industries' Exhibition to be held in the Royal Agricultural Hall, London, England, in June. In addition to the industrial views, the bureau will prepare a number of official pictures showing waterfalls, forests and mines for screening at the London exhibition. One of those interested in the proposition is Lloyd Harris, of Toronto, the Canadian Overseas Trade Commissioner. O. C. Pease is the Canadian representative of the London exposition.

Arkell Succeeds McKenna.

W. R. Arkell has been appointed to succeed Lindsay McKenna, formerly of New York, as exploitation manager for the Select Pictures Corporation, Toronto. Mr. McKenna was in charge of this department of the Canadian company since the organization of the company to handle Selznick releases in the Dominion last year.

Alberta Uses "Fit to Win."

Hon. A. G. McKay, Minister of Public Health for the Province of Alberta, has decided to permit the screening of "Fit to Win," the health propaganda picture, throughout Alberta under the auspices of the Department of Health. The minister has arranged to have I. H. Allen handle the picture in the various Alberta cities and it will be booked through the Allen Theatre Enterprises. The film will be shown to men only.

Washington Whispers

Millionaire Stuff.

V. DAY SHREVE, who for a number of years operated the Revere Theatre, Washington, D. C., has gone to Florida, where he has a large pecan grove. Mr. Shreve recently sold his theatre interests to Tom O'Donnell, of the Navy Theatre.

Dealth of Samuel Davis.

Maurice Davis, of the M Street Theatre, is receiving condolences from his many friends in this territory following the death of his brother, Samuel Davis, who was associated with him in the operation of the theatre.

The deceased had been in ill health for a long time, having been confined to his bed for about fifteen weeks. The body was taken to New York City for burial in the family lot. Maurice Davis is also connected with the Exhibitors Co-operative Film Exchange.

Keenan Takes Over Regent.

Jack Keenan, who for a number of years was manager of the Avenue Grand Theatre on Pennsylvania avenue, Southeast, and who recently tendered his resignation to the Crandall Amusement Company, has taken over the Regent Theatre on Eighteenth street, from A. H. Brown. Mr. Brown, shortly after the entrance of the United States into the war, received a commission as major in the army, leaving the operation of the theatre to his son.

Murphy Buys Big Property.

Wiliam C. Murphy, who operates the Home and Carolina theatres in Northeast Washington, recently purchased at auction sale the property at Twelfth and H streets, northeast. The block, known as the Northeast Temple and Market, went under the hammer at $71,450. It will be remodeled by Mr. Murphy into a modern picture house.

Mr. Murphy's house will add another to the long list of beautiful theatres in the District, already noted for its distinguished array of cinema palaces. Mr. Murphy intends to have his theatre "stand out."

Piggly Wiggly Out for More.

It is rumored here in the district that a large chain grocery concern is seeking possession of one of the Ninth street theatre properties with a view to converting it into a grocery store. This same concern, operating the Piggly Wiggly stores, is said to have secured the Zenith Theatre, at Eighth and G streets, Southeast, to house one of its stores.

Kansas Komments

New Film Paper.

THE first edition of "The Reel Journal," a local weekly paper devoted to the film trade news of the Kansas City exchanges and exhibitors, was published January 31. Ben Schlyen, editor of the new journalistic venture, formerly was connected with the Standard Film Corporation exchange. "The Reel Journal" is published at 201 Graphic Arts Building.

To Test Tax Law.

The test case of the constitutionality of the county amusement tax law, which is being watched closely by Kansas City theatre owners, was again delayed January 31, when the fifth continuance in the case against John B. Fitzpatrick, manager of the Shubert Theatre, a legitimate house, was granted by Judge E. E. Porterfield of the circuit court. Fitzpatrick is charged with refusal to pay the amusement tax.

February 16 was the new date set for the hearing of the case. Frank Lowe, attorney for Mr. Fitzpatrick, represents a number of moving picture theatres, and he desires to test the validity of the law. This was the reason why Mr. Fitzpatrick submitted to arrest.

Mr. Exchange Manager: Your Territory's Here Come Again!

Mr. Picture Showman: Here's the News for You Come Again!

Shows "Erstwhile Susan" on His Farm.

Otto Feess, owner of the Best Theatre, Parsons, Kans., is showing "Erstwhile Susan" on his farm which adjoins the city limits of Parsons. But don't get excited—this "Erstwhile Susan" is only a calf, although a thoroughbred.

Operating the Best Theatre is only a part of the business carried on by Mr. Feess. In addition he is one of the largest breeders of Guernsey thoroughbred cattle in that section of the state. The names of recent moving picture releases were adopted by him as names for his prize calves. The suggestion came from Joseph Fox, salesman for the Kansas City exchange of Realart. Another calf on the farm is named "Anne of the Greene Gables," and a young bull bears the name of "Lightning Raider."

Booking on Rental Basis.

Booking state right features on a flat rental basis is proving highly successful in the Kansas City territory, according to L. C. McElroy, manager of the new feature department of the Standard Film Corporation exchange. The "Unpardonable Sin," one of the five features obtained by the Standard, broke records in several large towns in the district and is going over good every place.

Buckley Closes Good Contract.

Harry D. Buckley, branch manager of the United Artists Corporation at Kansas City, returned a few days ago from St. Louis, where he was successful in placing a contract with the Koplar string of theatres for "When Clouds Roll By," a new release.

Wilkerson Resigns Branch Management.

W. R. Wilkerson, branch manager of the Universal Exchange for the past six months, resigned recently and returned to New York. His place will be filled by J. H. Calvert, branch manager at Omaha, in a short time. During the interval Nat Liebeskind, office manager, will have charge of the branch.

Buffalo Brieflets

Variety Theatre Sold.

THE Variety Theatre, 740 Fillmore avenue, has been sold to Gusta and Meyer Wallach for a sum said to exceed $75,000. V. Bielanski is the former owner.

Majestic Increases Capital.

The Majestic Theatre Company of Buffalo has certified to the Secretary of State in Albany that it has increased its capital stock from $15,000 to $150,000. The company operates the Majestic Theatre, Buffalo, of which Dr. Peter C. Cornell is manager.

Cohen Joins Realart.

Maurice Cohen, formerly a member of the Universal and Gardiner Film Syndicate sales staff, has been engaged by Henry E. Wilkinson as a salesman on the Realart exchange staff. Mr. Wilkinson screened Mary Miles Minter in "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," in Shea's Hippodrome Friday evening, January 30, and it was well received by a large audience of film men.

Taylor Boosts Dempsey.

C. A. Taylor, manager of the Pathe branch, has started a publicity campaign for the new Dempsey feature, which is being largely booked in this territory.

Smith Grip Victim.

P. H. Smith, manager of the First National office, has been confined to his bed for over a week with an attack of the grip. He is greatly improved at this writing and expects to return to duty the first part of the week of February 9. Mr. Smith's assistant, Otto Siegel, is also laid up with the grip.

Join Gardiner in Albany.

K. H. Woolson, formerly with the Phoenix Cheese Company of New York City; J. S. Savage, former manager of the Como and Abbott theatres, Buffalo, and R. H. Pearch, Jamestown, have been assigned to the Albany office of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., by F. M. Zimmerman, sales manager, who has just returned from a rest cure in the South.

Serving 125 Exhibitors.

J. F. Kirsch, manager of the Buffalo office of the Dooley Exchange, Inc., announces that he is now serving 125 exhibitors in the western New York territory. Mr. Kirsch accompanied Thomas W. Dooley to New York recently to purchase a serial and some big feature films. The company has recently purchased twenty-six original Billy West comedies made by the Emerald Motion Picture Company, which will be released two a week.

'Frisco Frolics

Turner & Dahnken to Build Huge Theatre.

THE negotiations that have been under way for months by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit for the acquisition of a suitable site for a moving picture house have been terminated by the purchase of property on Fourth street for approximately $600,000. This property is separated from the California Theatre site by only a narrow street and covers a ground area of 47,623 square feet, having two corners and three street frontages. It has a frontage of 155 feet on Fourth street, 310 feet on Stevenson and 305 feet on Jessie. Plans are being prepared for the largest and finest moving picture house in the world, having a seating capacity of more than 5,000.

Sam Gordon Opens New Theatre.

Sam Gordon, one of San Francisco's pioneer exhibitors, opened his latest theatre, the Orpheus, in the suburban city of San Rafael on the evening of January 21. The opening was a successful event and attracted many from San Francisco, despite the threatening weather. The new house has a seating capacity of about 1,200, making it the largest in Marin County. Now that this theatre is in running shape Mr. Gordon will direct his attention toward the remodeling of the Lyric on Fillmore street, San Francisco, on which he recently secured a long-time lease.

M. L. Markowitz Deserts Distributing Field

M. L. Markowitz has resigned as manager of the Universal Exchange at San Francisco and in the future will devote his entire attention to his extensive theatre interests in Northern California. This step came as a distinct surprise, as Mr. Markowitz is the dean of film exchange managers, having been in charge of the Universal interests here since 1907. He started an exchange in that year under the name of the California Film Exchange, and when this was taken over seven years later by Universal, whose output he had been haindling, he continued as manager. Executive offices have been fitted up in the Strand Theatre Building, and he will manage his theatre interests from there. He has been succeeded in the management of the Universal Exchange by C. A. Nathan, who has been his assistant for several months, and Beverly Griffith, head of the sales department, has been made assistant manager.

Selznick Representative Visits Coast.

V. P. Whitaker, general representative for Louis J. Selznick, spent several days recently visiting the San Francisco exchange conducted under the management of Harry L. Knappen, leaving later for Los Angeles.

Pantages Has New Manager.

Roy Stephenson has been made resident manager of Pantages Theatre, succeeding John J. Cluxton. He has been connected with the local house for about nine years.

Many Theatres Change Hands.

The activity in the amusement business is reflected in the many changes in ownership of houses in the San Francisco territory. Among the sales made of late through the office of the United Theatres Exchange are the following: The Majestic Theatre, of Concord, from Carenna Bros. to Charles Holz, of Merced; Peralta Theatre, Oakland, from H. C. Clapp to W. C. Wilson; Allies Theatre, San Francisco, from C. Johnson to Crescent Theatre Company; Regent Theatre, San Francisco, from E. C. Cunningham to H. Discuss Differences Between Exchanges and Showmen at Philadelphia Meet

WITH almost 130 exchange managers and their assistants present, the recently organized Motion Picture Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, at a recent luncheon, launched its opening gun for a cleaner, better and a more businesslike industry when Harry M. White, chairman, outlined to the members the policies and functions of the new board.

Unusual interest is attached to the activities of this organization. It is not only the largest gathering seen in Philadelphia for some time in film circles, but marks the first successful attempt of exchangemen at organization.

Claiming but two years actual experience in the motion picture business, Mr. White in an address said, in part:

"Personally, I have been in this business but a comparatively short time, but even in that short time I have noticed the wonderful improvement in the personnel of both exhibitors and exchangemen, and I want to go on record right now to the effect that I personally believe that ninety-eight per cent. of the men in the film industry are absolutely conscientious and honest, but we still find ourselves compelled to deal with men who, to put it mildly, have a shrewd eye to the main chance; men who evince a tendency to evade implicit obligation; men who seem to have no sense of the fundamental principles of right and wrong, and who not infrequently stoop to practices generally considered discreditable.

"We exchangemen through all these years have been suspicious of each other. Our individual efforts to right matters have been negligible, almost futile. Good results have been accidental rather than intentional. Protests upon our part have sometimes met with an elaborate assumption of indifference; sometimes feigned indignation and most amazing impudence.

"We propose no revolutionary innovations but intend to proceed in a spirit of friendliness and conciliation. Our purpose is to educate rather than punish. Many differences between the exchange and the exhibitor are, in fact, more apparent than real. They are due in a great measure to the wide diversity of mind and temperament and to the bewildering multiplication of detail."

The matter of adjusting any differences that may arise between an exchange and an exhibitor, was next taken up by Mr. White, who explained that only as a last resort would the matter be placed in the hands of the adjustment committee of three exchangemen and two exhibitors for settlement.

"Their decision would be final," added Mr. White.

Present also at the luncheon were Gene Crandall, district manager for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and William H. Hall, of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hall in brief address welcomed the members of the new organization.

Ruth Clifford Entertains Maeterlinck at Luncheon

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, the noted Belgian author, and Madame Maeterlinck were guests at a luncheon given recently by Ruth Clifford at the Hotel Commodore. Both M. Maeterlinck and his wife are ardent picture fans, and familiar with the work of American screen stars, and in a recent interview, published in one of the New York papers, M. Maeterlinck laid particular emphasis on the artistic work of Miss Clifford.

Later they met at a reception, and the noted Belgian expressed a desire to learn more of the intricacies of photoplay acting, and at the luncheon Miss Clifford enlightened the Maeterlincks on some of the difficulties of screen portrayals.

Miss Clifford is co-starring with Jack Sherrill in "The Invisible Ray" serial being made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which W. L. Sherrill is president. The scenario for this production was written by a well-known magazine writer, Guy W. McConnell.

By Giebler

ABOUT the usual grind this week, but with what may be called a high-light happening here and there in the grist that is worthy of a little comment.

Such as "Pollyanna" going to church.

On Sunday evening, January 24, the Rev. Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church, preached a sermon entitled, "How to Play the Glad Game," and he introduced and illustrated his subject with Mary Pickford's latest picture, "Pollyanna." A Pollyanna setting, combined with a scene from the River Jordan, was used for a baptismal service at which many were welcomed into the bosom of the church.

Many parsons would as soon think of inviting the Old Scratch himself as to bring the movies into their church, but the Rev. Dr. Brougher is not that kind of a parson. Doctor Brougher is a successful parson, one of the most successful parsons in our fair city, if not in the entire country. His sermons are all in the big feature class and the S. R. O. sign is always displayed when he expounds the gospel.

Taylor Edits the Mouth Organ.

If you want to hear the movies treated to scathing denunciation; if you want to know just what kind of devil's tools they are, go to a church and listen to the dry and dusty dogma of the preacher who pounds his pulpit to empty pews. He's the boy who can tear the hide off the pictures and hang it on the fence to dry. The big-time preacher does not fear competition and therefore he does not fear and hate the movies.

The Studio Publicists have held another meeting, and the "Mouth Organ" has resulted therefrom. The Mouth Organ is a clever little thing, mimeographea; so far, but with a promise of printers' work later on, and Ted Taylor, of Metro, is the "tentative" editor.

Our mayor has turned on the lights on Broadway and we no longer have to depend on the illumination from the windows of the Owl Drug Store and the Bon Ton Bonbon Shop to guide our steps along the thoroughfare. Of course, the lights came too late to be of any real service to many of us, but it's all right, we are glad something can be "lit up," if it's only a street.

Three P. A.'s Make Changes.

There have been three important moves on the press agent checkerboard. Mark Larkin, who doped out publicity for the Mary Pickford Company, is now doing the same duties for the Mayflower Corporation, and J. Hesser Walraven, who was the previous incumbent at Mayflower, has moved over to be the personal press representative of Maurice Tourneur; while Kenneth McGaffey, who has been missing from active P. A. circles since he took to writing titles for Paramount-Artcraft, is occupying the easy chair made vacant by Mark Larkin's move.

I went out and visited around at the King Vidor studios one day this week and had the most interesting time I've had for a month of Sundays.

King told me he was making a play called "The Family Honor," a little old-fashioned story about a little old-fashioned town, which he said was somewhere in that vague section known as "Down South."

Reminiscing a Bit.

It wasn't vague to me, however, when I'd seen the court room set he was getting ready for the murder trial, one of the big punches of the piece. I knew that court room at once. It is in Swamp-East, Missouri, down near the part of the map where Missouri sticks its foot into Arkansas. Why, man, it was all as natural as life!

The judge was a dead ringer for Circuit Judge Charlie Fort, who used to dispense justice in that neck of the woods; the prosecuting attorney looked as much like old John Kelly as two peas in a pod, and if Lon Martin could come to life he wouldn't look any more like himself than the actor who played the part of the sheriff.

Typical Down East Story.

There was the same kind of a crowd, too. Colored folks off to one side, a houn' dog on the floor, and I could close my eyes and hear the catbirds singing in the sycamores and the sound of the ripe pawpaws plopping on the ground on the other side of the fly-specked windows The same old court house where we staged a prize fight once between Rabbit Henshaw, a saddle "complected" boy, and a good-for-nothing, chicken-stealin' coon that a lot of city sports brought down with the idea of picking up some rube money in our town.

"The Family Honor" is a typical Down South story. Florence Vidor plays the leading figure in the story, that of Beverly Tucker. Roscoe Karns is "Dal," her shif'less brother, who gets accused of murder. J. P. Lockney is a crooked road-house proprietor. Willis Marks is a shyster lawyer; George Nichols is the mayor of the town. Harold Goodwin works in the grocery store, and Charles Meredith keeps the jail. Little Ben Alexander is little Bennie Tucker, brother to Bev and Dal, and helps make things right in the end.

Ole Lucas, the Witness.

There was another actor in the cast that I must not forget, however. Lucas C. Luke, colored (very much so). "Bo'n in Shrevepo't—lemme see, 'long 'bout fifty, fifty-five, mebbe sixty years ago."

Lucas was a witness in the murder trial. He knew who killed the man that young Dal Tucker was accused of murdering.

"There he is," said Lucas. "That white man settin' right over there."

It was only a bit, but it looked like art to me, even if it was only black art, and Florence Deshon, who was visiting at the studio and shared a court house bench with me, said it looked good to her, and I could tell by the way that King Vidor smiled at old Lucas, that he though the same, and so, after the scene was over, I looked up Lucas with the intention of telling him he was a good actor. But it was no use, he already knew it.

Evidence Conclusive.

"Do I do much of this kind of work?" he said, in answer to my question. "Why, I don't do nothin' for a livin' except act. You-all wait here a minute.

"Ah," Says Jiggs, "the Key to the Mayor's Cellarette."

"No," says Mayor Snyder of Los Angeles, "the key to the city"— to Johnny Ray as "Jiggs" in Pathe's picturization of McManus' "Bringing Up Father" cartoons.

I got something in my vest I want to show you."

Lucas retired to his vest and came back with a bunch of letters. The first one read as follows:

"It takes time to hunt up stills, and I am very busy, but this man is wonderful. With a little direction he can do anything.

"Jerry Storm,
"Director, Thos. H. Ince Studios."

"That's what Mister Sto'm says about me," said Lucas. How many actors in the colony can show recommendations like that?

First Glimpse at Sister Lottie.

I had luck this week. I saw Lottie Pickford making a picture. I have seen Little Mary at work many times, and likewise Jack, but as long as I've been in the movies, this week was the first time I ever saw Sister Lottie before the lens.

I was crossing a stage at Burnton's when I came upon a company at work with an artist's studio setting. The director was staging a scene between a girl with bobbed hair and wearing a smock all messed up with water colors, and a snappy looking little chap with a mustache.

The chap was madly, deeply, desperately, wildly in love with the girl with the bobbed hair. I could tell that by the director's directions. The girl pretended to fall for his stuff. She wasn't crazy about him a-tall, I could tell that from the way she acted when he hugged her.

The Huggee Wanted to Scratch.

There are certain rules for hugging, you know. If the huggee loves the hugger she will show it by doing a little strangling on her own account, sort of co-operate, as it were. Well, this party of the second part didn't use her hands at all. She let them hang straight down at her sides, and she worked her fingers like a woman does when she's got 'em full of biscuit dough or something, and what's more, the fingers said just as plain as words, that they wanted to scratch somebody's eyes out.

They got about fifty foot of this stuff, and the director—it was Martin Justice—said, "Cut," the girl turned around, and it was Lottie Pickford. The hugging chap was Allan Forrest, and the mustache was all his own, and it's a dandy, too.

Almost Three Plays in One.

Lottie Pickford is making a play that has no name as yet. They call it Production 97 at the studio. But whatever it's going to be called, it's going to be a pretty good picture, to judge by the story.

Miss Pickford is the daughter of a man who is wronged by three villains. Before the father dies of a broken heart he exacts a promise from his daughter that she will avenge him.

This seemingly simple plot gets to be one of the most complicated and thrilling things you ever heard of. The girl, in scheming out her plans for revenge, is forced to assume three distinct characterizations. It is almost three plays in one, so far as action is concerned. She gets oodles of revenge, and in the scene I looked at she was hitting at one of the villains through his son by making said son believe she was in love with him.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH,. a city of 40,000 population, is looked upon by the industry with a great deal of respect because it is classed as one of the best show cities of its size anywhere. There are two outstanding reasons. One is that the people of Battle Creek are blessed with the average amount of inteligence so far as their amusement ideas are concerned and the other is or are, H. E. Lipp and G. A. Cross.

A peculiar condition exists in the city. There are five motion picture houses all modern in every respect and all doing a thriving business of their own—and all are operated under the one direction. Of course, such a condition is not peculiar in itself. There are scores of other American cities of the same size and with probably the same industrial prospects, as Battle Creek, but there are very few, in fact, where the public keep abreast with the motion picture times as in Battle Creek.

Battle Creek is a most unusual example of what in motion picture circles is termed the "closed" town. If a picture is shown in Battle Creek it must be flashed on the screen of one of those five theatres. Naturally, such a condition of affairs would tend to make the controlling exhibitor in such a town mighty independent. There are two things possible for him in his operating policy. He can adopt a progressive method calling for the best pictures played on release, or as close to release dates as possible, or he can fill his theatre with old films and play them whenever it bests fits his own convenience.

Book Only the Best.

Here is where Lipp & Cross enter. At the very outset of their business affiliation several years ago, they decided that the people of Battle Creek should be given a class of entertainment on the same plane with that of Detroit and other cities. They refused to book anything but the best in the market and they have continuously followed an iron-clad rule to set in dates for their first run houses as near the Detroit release dates as possible. In many instances, they play pictures day and date with the Detroit first runs.

Just the Thing We Needed
To complete the beauty of this page was this picture of Helene Chadwick, Goldwyn player.

Messrs. Lipp and Cross always make it a practice to find out what their public wants in the line of entertainment. Through the medium of a newsy little magazine that is circulated in all of their five theatres weekly, they keep in intimate touch with their patrons and furnish them free with all of the news of the industry that might interest them.

The Regent, which is one of the finest in the state, was opened about a year ago. Here the biggest film production of the day get their first run in Battle Creek. The Strand, Garden and Rex are the other houses, while the Post, besides being the home of the legitimate, is used on special occasions for big pictures.

Although still young in years, Messrs. Lipp and Cross are pioneers in the show business. Before coming to Battle Creek, Mr. Lipp was associated with Barnum and Bailey; the Buffalo Bill Shows and the Forepaugh, Sells Brothers Circus. He foresaw the possibilities of the motion pictures and during his visits to Battle Creek took up the proposition of locating there with Mr. Cross.

Began Exhibiting in 1911.

Mr. Cross is one of the best known men in Battle Creek. Fifteen years ago he was the singer of the city's first motion picture theatre. In 1911, he and Mr. Lipp purchased the Dreamland Theatre and their success was such that they enlarged their holdings from year to year.

Exchange managers and film salesmen usually look upon the controlled town as the biggest problem of all, but the policy of Lipp and Cross has helped, in a measure, to shatter that idea. Not only are these exhibitors anxious to set in play dates as soon as possible, but they are willing at all times to pay equitable rental prices to the exchanges. The percentage or rental plus systems are always opened to the exchange in their houses when they feel that the prices asked for films are too high. Thus they play as fairly with the exchanges in their business dealings as they do with their public.

On Big Feature Programs.

Reports emanating from Pittsburgh to the home office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., state that the serial is continuing to win wider recognition as a necessary adjunct of the program at the better houses, and contain the information that the Olympic Theatre of Greenville, Pa., presented the first episode of "The Adventures of Ruth," starring Ruth Roland, on the program with Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."

Manager Gould of the Arcadia Theatre in Pittsburgh has announced the first episode of the Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland as a feature of the Arcadia's program when "Broken Blossoms" is presented.

"SERIALS are often spoiled in the making through haphazard production," says Arthur B. Reeve, vice-president of Supreme Pictures, Inc. He and John W. Grey, president, are co-authors of "The Mystery Mind," dealing with hypnotism, in which they are starring J. Robert Pauline and personally supervising the production in their own studio.

"Few serials have been produced even approximately as the author wrote them. They have been wrecked all along the line by director, star, and producer each taking a whack at them," continued Mr. Reeve. "Serial producers rely too much on their director. They accept his opinion of a story—and the average director's attitude is: 'This is a pretty punk story, but I may be able to doctor it up.' So he rewrites the story as he thinks it should be.

"Later the star decides to change something, ignoring the fact that the author may have had a far-reaching ultimate reason for writing that particular bit. The star's change ruins a logical climax and when the story doesn't hang together the 'bum author' is blamed—never the director or star who made the change.

"If the author happens to be clever with his pencil or possesses mechanical genius he may send a sketch or a working model with his script. Then the technical director pounces upon it and ridicules it out of court. The only person who can successfully monkey with a story is the one who best understands it—the author. In serials especially his presence is invaluable. Changes are always necessary as a picture progresses.

"Actors don't always pan out as expected and their characters have to be abridged. Other actors exceed expectations and develop splendid parts from an original small bit. Sets also have the faculty of being more or less effective than anticipated.

"But only the author should be permitted to alter a story to meet changing conditions. He alone sees the story as a perfect whole and can judge where and how ramifications may extend without detriment to the finished work. The future worth while cinema plays will be produced like football games are won—with the entire team obeying the signals of one man, all working with and for the author."

Comedienne Gale Henry Is No Longer with Bulls Eye

THE Model Comedy Company announces that Gale Henry, comedienne and head of the company, has severed connections with the Bull's Eye Film Corporation, which has been distributing her releases, and has signed a contract with a prominent distributing company. She will produce only six two-reelers a year, instead of twenty-four a year as heretofore. Work upon the first subject will commence in a few days at the comedienne's studio in Hollywood, Cal. The Gale Henry studios at Hollywood have been sold and the company may erect its own studio probably at Riverside, Cal.

National to Make Three Series for Marion Kohn

THE National Film Corporation announces it has begun production on three short series of subjects for exclusive release by Marion Kohn of 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco. The stars in the new series will be Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones. Miss Cunard, who will be supported by Cole Hebert, also known as "Slim Cole," will produce sensational comedy-dramatic thrillers, while Polly Moran will appear in one-reel slap-stick comedies. "Smiling Bill" Jones will also appear in one-reels of the "polite" comedy sort. Each star will make a series of twenty-six pictures.

This deal places Mr. Kohn among the ranks of the foremost producers of short subjects, as the agreement with the National is merely for the purpose of manufacture, according to I. Bernstein of the National, that firm retaining but a small interest in the productions, which will be marketed via the state rights plan.

World's rights to these series will be owned by the Marion H. Kohn productions. Plans for their production are elaborate, and call for a big expenditure of money. Each star will be surrounded by a capable cast and augumented by beautiful girls.

Grace Cunard is leaving feature and serial work for comedy roles, which she is said to be particularly adapted for. Polly Moran's comedy work is well known, as she has appeared in various brands.

Joe Brandt, 1600 Broadway, New York, is eastern representative and will handle all business at this end and arrange for distribution.

Gaumont Making Specials Vivian Martin in First

THE Gaumont Company is resuming production in the United States. The first big feature will be, "Husbands and Wives," starring Vivian Martin, adapted from "Making Her His Wife," the popular novel by Corra Harris. It has just been completed and is now offered to state rights exchanges exclusively. It is described as a strong domestic drama, in which Miss Martin charmingly portrays the role of the pampered city heiress in love with a poor country chap. His efforts to bend her to his will, her resistance and determination to lead her own life, create tense situations followed by tender heart interest scenes.

The story is set in the South. In order to obtain the real atmosphere, Miss Martin and a company of twenty spent six weeks in and around Atlanta, Ga.

The production is said to be replete with realism and emotional appeal. It is planned to follow "Husbands and Wives" with other big pictures, to be elaborately produced.

Much Interest Shown in Cohns' "Broke" Contest

NUMEROUS letters are arriving in reply to the offer of Jack Cohn, of the firm of Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall Room Boys comedies, to give one hundred dollars for the letter which most humorously relates the time in the writer's life when he was absolutely "broke." The incidents described in the accepted letters will be used as situations in forthcoming releases of Hall Room Boys Comedies.

The letters are being received from all sections of the country and from all classes of people. One man was owner of a chain of theatres in the Northwest. Another, in his letter, written on wrapping paper and mailed in a dirty envelope, had "been broke all his life, which was not very funny at all."

Freuler in New York to Place State Right Films

SINCE the resignation of John R. Freuler from the Mutual Film Corporation in 1918 and his affiliation with the American Film Company, Inc., little has been heard of him and his presence in the film center of New York the past week aroused more or less curiosity and some speculation as to what he was doing here. After locating him and a few minutes' conversation with him it was learned that he plans for exploitation in the state rights market, pictures in which he is financially interested and for which the open market has created a fresh demand.

Mr. Freuler still retains his interest in the American Film Corporation, management of which is entirely in the hands of S. S. Hutchinson, his business associate. Mr. Freuler is more particularly interested in the theatrical end of the industry. He holds a large interest in theatres in Kansas City, Milwaukee and in many other cities west of Chicago. He is planning the erection of many new theatres this spring. He says he will make an announcement soon that involves the production and presentation of some special features, which are in course of preparation.

"Hall Rooms" to Be Better Than Ever.

Reports from Harry Cohn, who is in California to supervise the production of Hall Rom Boys Comedies, are to the effect that new releases of this series, produced under his direction, will be much improved over early releases. He says: "I am gathering together, as far as it is possible, a brand new supporting company. It is my aim to make them of a class and distinction which will be marked by every exhibitor."

McConville Wrote Kellerman Story.

Bernard McConville is the author of the story for the first production in which Annette Kellerman will appear under the Sol Lesser's management. Mr. McConville has to his credit such adaptations as "Heart 'o the Hills" and "The Hoodlum" for Mary Pickford.

Arrow to Handle Steiner's Series of Twelve Five-Reel Detective Stories

WILLIAM STEINER, well-known to exhibitors for his continued connection with the film industry since its earliest days, as a producer, anounces the completion of an unusually big deal in the independent field. He will make a series of twelve five-reel pictures under the general title of "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries," the world rights to which have been secured by Arrow Film Corporation, of which W. E. Shallenberger is president.

Mr. Steiner is very enthusiastic over these pictures, and explains that they are up-to-the-minute detective stories, written by popular authors, and that exhibitors will be able to contract at once for the entire series, to be released one a month. The first three, "Circumstantial Evidnce," "The Wall Street Mystery" and "The Scrap of Paper," are already complete, and work is progressing on the fourth.

The role of "Tex" is portrayed by Glen White, and the cast includes such players as Leo Delaney, Jane McAlpine, David Wall, Alfred Warman, Robert Tabor, Alex F. Frank, Joseph M. L. Striker, Joseph Sullivan, Charles Graham and Marie Treador.

Several state rights buyers have viewed the first picture and contracted for the series, according to an announcement from Arrow. The series will be advertised extensively, and a big two-color press book is now in the hands of the printers, while other papers are being prepared. One of the novelties will be a one-sheet on which will appear four or five different scenes, while a number of other unique aids are being prepared.

After Seventeen Months in Making "Lost City" Serial Is Now Complete

WARNER BROTHERS, who have the distribution rights of Selig's animal serial, "The Lost City," received a wire from Colonel Selig that the production is now complete and negatives of the final episodes are en route to New York. Announcement of distribution details will be made later.

Owing to the nature of the animals that took part in this serial and the difficulty of finding suitable locations, it is announced that seventeen months was necessary to complete the serial. "Time cannot be figured," says an official of the company, "in dealing with wild animals, as often it requires a week or more to get a scene in which several animals take part. Then there is always an element of danger, as no one can tell when a beast, in spite of his training, will attack.

"E. A. Martin, who directed the serial, on one occasion passed through an enclosure where several leopards were loose without noticing the sign of warning. The leopards, coming from behind a large rock, began crawling in his direction, when Juanita Hansen, featured in the serial, shouted to him. Just in time, he dived into a moat of water which had been provided for just such an emergency, and in which there is a cage which offers protection from the attacks of the animals. The leopard's dislike for water saved him, as it is said that none of the cat family, tiger, lion, panther, puma or jaguar, will follow a victim into the water."

National Reproduced Entire Town for Read's "The Kentucky Colonel"

THAT one-third of the cost of the National Film Corporation of America production of Opie Read's "The Kentucky Colonel" was spent to construct a replica of the village of Emeryville, Ky., with its mansions, business district, race track, stables and authentic properties, was contained in a letter received by Joe Brandt, the National's Eastern representative, from I. Bernstein, production manager on the West Coast. According to the letter, this photoplay, which the National states is that firm's greatest cinema achievement, cost over $150,000, not including overhead.

In order not to have the picture conflict with the book it was found necessary to build sets in keeping with the real atmosphere of the novel. After a long search, Mr. Bernstein hit upon Sunland, Cal., in the heart of the coast range mountains. Negotiations resulted in a permit to reconstruct the town facing Sunland's grove of live oaks. M. J. Caldwell, the National's technical and art director, who was born in Kentucky, is in a great measure responsbile for the transformation of Sunland, a town founded by the Spanish padres, to "Emeryville, Ky." It required 200 carpenters, masons and laborers.

Price and Clark-Cornelius Get Big Spectacular Film

THE Clark-Cornelius Corporation, and C. B. Price and Co., Inc., have jointly purchased a big spectacular production presented by an all-star cast. The name of the picture has not yet been divulged, however. Mr. Price announces that it will create a sensation and arouse a big demand for bookings.

A big advertising and exploitation campaign will be launched, with a full line of paper and exploitation aids. The picture will be sold on state right basis, and it is said will be a big money-getter. It portrays some historical episodes of American history, and is said to embody some of the most beautiful and elaborate episodes ever screened. There are also some thrilling hand to hand encounters.

Capital Film Service Reorganized as the Seaboard Film Corporation

HENRY I. COLEMAN, president of the Capital Film Service of Washington, D. C., with offices in that city, Baltimore and Raleigh, is at present in New York, and when interviewed by a representative of this publication in the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation, announced that on account of the increase of his firm's business, the company has been reorganized under the name of the Seaboard Film Corporation, with $100,000 capital.

The change in the firm name was decided upon on account of the former name conflicting with other companies, and the further fact that, as the company will open other offices along the entire Atlantic Seaboard, the new name is especially appropriate.

Already an exchange has been opened in this city at 729 Seventh avenue, on the fifth floor, with Leon Torin in charge. For the present only the Hank Mann comedy two-reelers are being distributed here. In the southern offices short subjects, such as Christies, Romayne, Billy West and Gale Henry comedies are handled.

In adition to the president the officers are W. E. Lewis, vice-president, and W. L. White, secretary. Jackson H. Ralston, an international lawyer, who was on the commission settling the Venezuelan boundary question, is one of the directors.

With the opening of the new offices this will make the Seaboard Film Corporation one of the largest state rights organizations operating in the United States.

Henry I. Coleman.
President Seaboard Film Corporation.

Schomer-Ross Productions to Make Four Big Feature Pictures a Year

FOUR feature pictures a year will be produced by Schomer-Ross Productions, of which Abraham S. Schomer is director general, and E. S. Manheimer, general manager, with Agnes Egan Cobb in charge of sales and publicity.

The company, now located at 1440 Broadway, will, as soon as alterations are completed, move to much larger quarters on the eleventh floor of the Leavitt Building at 126 West Forty-sixth street. The first production of the company, recently released, is "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens.

All productions will be sold on the state rights market, and will consist of clean and strongly dramatic subjects, portrayed by well-known stars. It is announced that "quality" will be the motto.

Mr. Schomer is well-known for his past successes, and Mr. Manheimer needs no introduction to foreign buyers. Agnes Egan Cobb also needs no introduction, as she has been in constant touch with state rights buyers and exhibitors for a number of years.

Several sales have been made, and other offers for territories received and are under consideration. The second production, which is now under way, is "The Hidden Light," starring Dolores Cassinelli.

Net Profit of $10,500 for Week's Run of "Confession" at Frisco's Rialto

ALL records for the Rialto, San Francisco, were broken by the run of "The Confession" at that theatre for one week, according to advices received by Joe Brandt, general representative of the National Film Corporation of America, from George Davis, supervisor of exploitation and distribution of the feature.

After running for one week at the Rialto to a net profit amounting to $10,500, owners of the theatre rebooked it for two weeks more. These figures, Mr. Davis pointed out, are actual box office figures.

"The Confession," according to Mr. Brandt, is making a record as a moneymaker wherever it is shown, and the San Francisco figures are being repeated, proportionately, in other cities, both in the East and the West.

C. B. Price Reports Sales.

C. B. Price Company, Inc., announces disposition of state rights of "The Log of the U-35" for Northern Illinois to Rosenthal & Saperstein, 220 S. State street, Chicago; to S. S. Rankin of Billings, Mont., for Montana; to Maurice Less Attractions, Terre Haute, for Indiana.

Max Glucksman has purchased the rights for Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay and Chile for "The Greater Woman," "The Debt," starring Marjorie Rambeau, and "Hedda Gabler," featuring Nance O'Neill.

National Preparing for Spring Rush.

Three shifts of carpenters, scenic artists and laborers are busy at the West Coast studios of the National Film Corporation of America preparing for the production rush. Three companies are already in action, with four more to follow, according to I. Bernstein, production manager. To offset the probable confusion, Mr. Bernstein plans to construct the various interior sets on rollers, the directors taking turns in using the space allotted to them. A new unit of directors' offices and dressing rooms is being built to care for the additional personnel. The stars in the new National pictures will be Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Jack Hoxie, Neal Burns, Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones.

Quick Sales Being Made on Series of Jans Films

HAVING completed the filming of "Love Without Question," B. A. Rolfe, supervising director and his associates of Jans Pictures, Inc., are now busily engaged in cutting, editing and assembling this feature which is shortly to be released on the state rights basis.

"Love Without Question" is a filmization of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel "The Abandoned Room" and, according to Mr. Rolfe, the original story has been followed closely and wherever possible amplified and the high lights of the tale brought out forcibly and the many incidents of the story have been built up into situations of deep dramatic power and told in the picture version in a way impossible on the printed page.

The officials of Jans Pictures, Inc., are also greatly pleased with their initial release and believe that Mr. Rolfe has turned out a photodrama that will break box-office records wherever properly presented and exploited. Territorial rights on the six Olive Tell-Jans superfeatures sold with remarkable rapidity and it is expected that hardly a territory will be left when the first release, "Love Without Question," is ready for release.

Tarzan Film in Cutting Stage.

Owing to the necessity of considerable cutting of fine film to bring the story into regulation length, "The Return of Tarzan," Numa Pictures Corporation's feature, has been delayed for a couple of weeks in its premiere in New York. Under the direction of George Merrick, the assembling is now practically completed. A trade showing in a Broadway theatre is shortly to be announced.

Selznick Changes Title.

Olive Thomas' sixth Selznick feature, "Glorious Youth," has been changed to "Youthful Folly." This was done in order to select a better title, if possible, from a box office viewpoint.

Allgood's "Daredevil" Star Enacts Unusually Thrilling Aeroplane Stunt

ON January 27 at Pablo Beach, Fla., Charles Hutchison, star of Allgood's big new serial, "The Whirlwind," gave an unusual exhibition of skill, nerve and daring, and one that it is claimed that has never been surpassed by any motion picture star.

The script called for a thrilling chase, with Hutchison on his ninety mile per hour motorcycle pursuing an airplane which was ordered to skim close to the ground. All Hutchison was supposed to do was to foil the action of the villainous airplane crew.

As the plane neared the ground Hutchison approached, and, instead of merely chasing off the maurauders, Hutchison leaped from his speeding motorcycle and by a narrow margin caught a flying rope ladder dangling beneath the plane.

Jerked from his motorcycle, he was carried aloft dangling on the rope ladder, while frantic cries of the director, cameramen and the crowds below were of no avail in drawing the attention of the airplane crew to Hutchison's perilous position.

With the rope ladder describing a long swinging motion, Hutchison, realizing his dangerous situation, began climbing until he reached the seat of the plane, when he swung himself into the driver's seat with the aid of one of the crew.

By this time the airplane had gone for nearly a mile and a half, and had risen over 500 feet.

Crowds of people who had witnessed the stunt cheered when Hutchison climbed to safety.

On descending, Hutchison was reprimanded by Joseph A. Golden, director of the serial, who, while appreciating what such a scene would mean, let Hutchison also understand that had Hutchison lost his life in attempting such a stunt the serial would have ended then and there, and a wonderful young athlete would have been added to the toll of the over daring.

Several aviators who witnessed the stunt are said to have expressed themselves as perfectly agreeable in "letting George do it." The Allgood Company will remain for about two months in Jacksonville, where many of the big scenes are now being filmed.

HERMAN F. JANS, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., announces the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp, from which the screen version "Love Without Question" has been taken, will appear serially in over forty important newspapers in the United States, including the Dallas Evening Journal, Omaha Bee, Atlanta Constitution, New York Evening World, Philadelphia North American and Washington Post.

B. A. Rolfe, in producing this feature for the Jans Pictures, together with Mr. Jans and Jans Pictures, Inc., feel that the selection of their initial production to be exploited serially in the daily newspapers, proves their statement as to it's appeal to the public and that it should prove of great interest to exhibitors inasmuch as it gives splendid exploitation possibilities and a valuable amount of advertising.

Many Sales on "Alma" and "Crimson Shoals"

MAX COHEN, manager of Monopol Pictures Company, reports healthy activity around two of his subjects. Foreign rights to "Alma, Where Do You Live?" have been sold to the Export and Import Film Corporation, at 729 Seventh avenue; Eastern Pennsylvania to Consolidated Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky to Co-Partner Attractions, Pittsburgh; New York and Northern New Jersey to H. A. Samwick, 729 Seventh avenue, New York; Illinois and Indiana to E. E. Gagnon, Chicago; Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, Alabama to Pearce Films, New Orleans.

L. Case Russell Directing Last "Blazed Trail" Films

THE last two "Blazed Trail" productions being released by the Arrow Film Corporation are being directed by L. Case Russell, who has replaced Joseph J. Barry, director of the first ten. Mr. Barry left the "Blazed Trail" productions to embark in the producing business at the head of his own company.

Mr. Russell is well known to picture playgoers, having written numerous plays for Madame Petrova, Kitty Gordon and other stars. The eleventh feature of "Blazed Trail" productions is now skiing merrily along, and if this fair weather keeps up the twelfth and last of this series will be "shot" before the middle of February.

These pictures are stories about the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and are being filmed in the Adirondacks. They are said to be full of action, and to have met with a splendid reception.

Most of the scenes required outdoor locations, and because of the heavy snow storms which have succeeded closely on the heels of each other, the company have found themselves working on ground covered with over five feet of snow.

Everything possible was done to make the studio comfortable. It was specially built as headquarters for companies requiring picturesque winter scenery, but in spite of this the members of the company have suffered from severe colds.

Pioneer Offices Now Occupy Entire Floor

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has taken over, on a long term lease, the entire seventeenth floor of the Leavitt Building, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, formerly occupied by Fox Film Corporation. The company has for some time been located on the eleventh floor of the same building, in much smaller quarters, and announces the removal to the new quarters was due to the necessity for much larger quarters, as, within the past year, business has increased six-fold.

Several of the departments, such as film, editorial and art, were quartered elsewhere, however, all departments will now be together. A force of carpenters and interior decorators are busy laying out the new headquarters, which it is expected will be completed within a week. There will be two projection rooms and elaborate cutting rooms, while the exchange, it is said, will be one of the best equipped in the city.

Photoplayers Equity Announces Its Aims Through Educational Campaign

THE Photoplayers Equity Association, with headquarters at 4518 Hollywood Boulevard, now entering upon its third year, with a membership of 700 professional players, announces that it is conducting a campaign of education as to its aims.

The association, which is a co-operative, non-profit organization, supplies high class extra talent to the western studios. Each individual sent out is capable of doing or performing what is required of him. Before a player can become a member, he must show a complete record of his work and produce written recommendations. The association is also prepared to furnish entire casts of nationally advertised players of exceptional ability, down to the necessary "atmosphere."

The Equity's motto is to please the producer and co-operate with him in making better pictures. The question of salaries is left to the producer. No commission is charged the player, and the service is free to the studios. The asociation derives its necessary revenue from small monthly dues paid by members, and is not affiliated with any movement seeking to monopolize the employment business.

Forty different studios are now making regular use of the association's placement bureau, and during the latter part of 1919 a large number of players were supplied for productions featuring Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Lew Cody and others. D. W. Griffith, while in the West, secured many of his players from the Equity Association.

To Build Rothacker Laboratory.

Watterson H. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, is on his way to Los Angeles for the purpose of getting the construction work started on the new film laboratory for which he purchased a site some months ago. The Rothacker Company is now printing films in Chicago for Charles Chaplin, Katherine MacDonald, Constance and Norma Talmadge and others. After the Los Angeles laboratory is completed prints for the western theatres and the Orient will be made there. Mr. Rothacker is planning to build another laboratory in New York and later on one in England.

Gets Control of Romayne.

G. F. Thew, head of the Thew Syndicate, Ltd., Liverpool, England, who is now in Los Angeles, has purchased the controlling interest in the Romayne Superfilm Company, of which H. Y. Romayne is president. Mr. Thew and his son, Eric, who came with him, are completing preparations for the expansion of the Romayne studios in Culver City. A portion of Thew's time will be spent in California and the remainder in England, where a studio will be built to produce pictures for the company, with occasional migrations to France and Italy for special productions. Eric Thew will remain in this country to study and supervise the film work done at the Culver City studio.

First "Jiggs" Comedy Completed.

The first of the "Bringing Up Father" comedies, now being produced at the Christie studio from the George McManus cartoons, has been completed under the co-direction of Al Christie and Reggie Morris. Johnny Ray as "Jiggs" is the leading character of the film, although Margaret Fitzroy, as Maggie, comes in for her share of leading honors. Laura La Plante, as the pretty daughter, and Ward Caulfield, Jack Henderson, Eddie Baker, George George and Gus Leonard, as Jiggs' friends, are all well cast.

Ball for Theatrical Charities.

An elaborate ball, planned and promoted by Wallace Reid, will be given at the Alexandria Hotel on the evening of February 11, for the benefit of the Theatrical Charities Fund. Wally will be special host, and the Wally Reid Jazz Band will contribute several musical numbers as part of the evening's entertainment. Other features, musical and otherwise, will be sprung as surprises for the guests.

Mrs. Wallace Reid and Mary Miles Minter will act as hostesses, and the patronesses include Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Anita Stewart, Viola Dana, Mabel Normand, May Allison, Mary MacLaren, Enid Bennett, Bessie Barriscale, Gloria Swanson, Ruth Roland, Edna Purviance, Gladys Brockwell, Peggy Hyland, Mary Alden, Mary Anderson and Edith Roberts.

Eugenie Forde Marries.

Mrs. Eugenie Forde, well-known actress of the West Coast film colony, was married recently at the Mission Inn, Riverside, to Guy H. Fetters, superintendent of the mechanical department of the Times-Mirror Printing and Binding Company of Los Angeles. Eugenie Forde is the mother of Victoria Forde, who was married to Tom Mix some two years or more ago in the same chapel and by the same minister that performed the ceremony for her mother.

Metro Officials on West Coast.

Marcus A. Loew, who recently acquired the controlling interest in Metro Pictures Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, and Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the company, who joined them in Chicago. When Maxwell Karger, who is on a vacation just now, returns to Hollywood, conferences will be held by these officials upon future production activities of Metro. C. E. Shurtleff, for whom Metro is producing a series of Jack London stories, is also in the West.

Irving Ackerman and Sam Harris of San Francisco, whose chain of twenty Pacific Coast theatres was amalgamated with the Loew interests last November, came down to Los Angeles to meet Mr. Loew and to pass upon plans and drawings for two palatial theatres which they intend to build on or near Broadway. One of these houses is destined for vaudeville and the other for high class pictures.

Clermont Begins Active Work.

Announcement has been made of the formation of the Clermont Photoplay Corporation in Los Angeles, with H. N. Clermont as president, H. F. Albers, first vice-president and treasurer, John T. Carleton, second vice-president and production manager, and Lloyd Carleton, director general.

H. N. Clermont, the president of the new company, has been connected with various independent productions in a fiancial way for the past five years and is well-known to the picture industry. Mr. Clermont states that the plans for the corporation include the production of six five-reel features and twelve two-reel comedies a year. Well-known books will be used for the feature subjects, and the comedies are to be of the well-dressed and genteel variety with no slap stick action or situations of any kind. The direction of the features will be in the hands of Lloyd Carleton. The name of the comedy director will be announced later.

Sprang Surprise on Audience.

When Mack Sennett completed his five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," he made arrangements with the manager of the Victory Theatre of Los Angeles to substitute the film for one of the features on the program, just to see how the production would be greeted by an audience who had heard absolutely nothing of the picture, either through advertising or through the press. The picture was received with loud and satisfactory applause, and has not been seen in any theatre since. Negotiations are under way for half interest in the production between a firm of San Francisco capitalists and Mack Sennett.

Vitagraph Buys More Land.

The Vitagraph Company has added ten more acres of land to its plant at Prospect avenue and Talmadge street in Hollywood, which brings the total Vitagraph acreage up to twenty in that neighborhood. W. S. Smith, manager of the western studio, states that Vitagraph now has three serial companies at work and that Earle Williams is expected soon from the East to produce a feature. Pauline Stark will soon begin work in a play that is being put in preparation for her.

Reid Leaves for Chicago.

Luther B. Reid, author and playwright, has left for Chicago to supervise rehearsals for his new play, "Dear Me," which John L. Golden is staging.

New Studio for Rolin.

The Rolin Film Company, producing films for the Pathe program, has purchased a tract of land at Culver City, where a new film producing studio will be erected for the accommodation of all the comedy producing units now working under the Rolin banner.

Break Ground for New Pickford Home.

Construction work has begun on the $250,000 residence for Mary Pickford at Fremont Place, facing Wilshire Boulevard. The house will be of Italian design, and the building itself will cost $150,000. The lot is valued at $50,000, and the furnishings for the house when it is completed will cost another $50,000. Miss Pickford will also build a house on her property at Santa Monica, which will be of old English design, and which will cost approximately $100,000.

Fox Injured in Train Collision.

Finis Fox, scenario writer, was severely injured one day last week when he tried to cross the tracks in front of a three-car Venice Pacific Electric train. Fox was hurled 15 feet, fracturing his left leg and suffering bruises on his body. The automobile was smashed. Fox claims he neither heard nor saw the train coming.

Irvine in Charge of Film Library.

Clark Irvine, editor of the Goldwyn Studio Skeleton, has been placed in charge of the new film library instituted at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City by Vice President Abraham Lehr. The library will consist of films depicting thrilling and unusual scenes, which will be filed away for future use and reference. Clark wil continue to publish the Skeleton, as heretofore.

Alkire Official Goes East.

P. H. White, vice president and general manager of the Alkire Productions Company, has gone to New York to sign contracts for the distribution rights of eight five-reel comedy-dramas featuring Joseph Bennett. The first of the series, to be released in February, is called "An Ace in the Hole," which was made from a story written by White.

Polo to Sign with Big "U" Again.

Tarkington Baker, manager of the Universal studios, announces that negotiations are under way for the signing of a long term contract between Universal and Eddie Polo, and that preparations are being made for another big serial production, in which Polo will have the star part.

Asks $4,500 for Four Scenarios.

Charles E. Whittaker, scenario writer, has brought suit against Harry I. Garson for the sum of $4,500, which he claims is due him for writing the continuity of four stories, "Michael and His Lost Angel," "Elevating a Husband," "The Forbidden Woman" and "The Soul of Raphael."

From Theatre to Studio Manager.

Otto H. Little, who has been manager of Clune's Broadway Theatre for some time, relinquished that post February 1 to become manager of the Clune studio in Hollywood. C. A. Petrick, formerly manager of Clune's Pasadena Theatre, will succeed Mr. Little as manager of the Broadway.

New Manager for Symphony.

"Mac" MacCarthy, formerly associated in an executive capacity with the W. H. Clune enterprises, has become house manager of the Symphony Theatre, succeeding Wallace Carter, who resigned to assume charge of a large suburban playhouse.

Bershon Goes with First National.

David Bershon, who has been manager of the Universal Exchange for a long time, has resigned that position to assume charge of the First National Exhibitors exchange in Los Angeles. C. L. Theuerkauf, former assistant manager, has been placed at the head of the Universal distributing office for Southern California.

Lehr a Bank Official.

Abraham Lehr, vice president of Goldwyn, and in charge of film production at Culver City, has been elected vice president of the Culver City Bank.

Studio Shots

J. PARKER READ, JR., producer of the Louise Glaum pictures, leaves within a few days for New York to complete details for the distribution of "Sex," Miss Glaum's latest play.

Hugh Ford, Paramount-Artcraft director, has arrived on the West Coast to direct a special production at the Lasky studio.

Barbara Castleton will play the part of Joan in "The Branding Iron," the coming Reginald Barker production for Goldwyn.

Tsuru Aoki, Japanese star in Universal productions, is writing a play that deals wit the Japanese-American question.

Arthur and Lois Zellner, of the Metro scenario staff, have purchased a home in the Hollywood foothills three miles from the studio.

Gale Henry has signed a new contract whereby she will make a series of six two-reel comedies a year instead of twenty-four, as she did the past year.

Robert McKim has been given a strong part in "Luck," the current Harry Carey production at U City.

Shirley Mason is now working on "Molly and I," at Fox, with Albert Roscoe, Harry Dunkinson and Lillie Leslie in her support.

Chet Franklin has been engaged by Sol Lesser to direct Annette Kellerman in her coming production at Brunton.

Waldemar Young is putting "Hop O' My Thumb" into continuity form for Mary Pickford for her next contribution to the United Artists program.

Because of his splendid work for the Government War Loans, Douglas Fairbanks has been appointed director of War Sayings for southern California by the federal authorities.

MOTION picture producers are keeping close step behind stage productions, many of the plays of the last theatrical season having already been screened. Dramatic stock companies formerly absorbed these plays as fast as they ceased to be useful to the original producers, but local stock companies have felt the opposition of the screen and are now few and far between. After the average play has run one season the picture producer gets it, under the newer theatrical system, and takes it to thousands of screens in towns where otherwise the play would remain forever unknown and unseen.

You may not be personally acquainted with Little Gloria Joy, but men of money, nevertheless, know her and believe that she should become a screen star. She has been "capitalized," will head her own company and soon blossom forth in photoplays written especially to bring joy to Gloria and to bring Gloria Joy to screens in big towns and little throughout the land.

Will Rogers and a company of Goldwyn photoplayers are busy with production of John G. Holland's "Seven Oaks," a novel of great vogue forty years ago. Incidentally it was Holland who built the first "summer cottage" in the Thousand Islands—and "Bonnie Castle" still stands on the rocky promontory overlooking the village of Alexandria Bay.

Georges Clemenceau, the "Tiger of France," has become an author for the screen through his book "The Strongest," which William Fox has filmed. The first print has been shipped from New York to Paris, where it will pass inspection under the eye of the famous statesman. Then it will be shown throughout North America and the rest of the world.

Madge Kennedy, having completed "Two Cents' Worth of Kindness" in Los Angeles, has gone to New York to begin another Goldwyn photoplay—"Trimmed with Red."

Opie Read's famous story, "A Kentucky Colonel," is being filmed, with Joseph Dowling in the name-role and Kathleen MacDonald as the leading woman. The first scenes of the photoplay were filmed in Louisville and elsewhere in the Blue Grass State.

Mrs. Charmion London, widow of Jack London, has collaborated with Hobart Bosworth on a story Bosworth will photoplay under J. Parker Reid's management.

The next photoplay in which Charley Ray will greet his "fans" will be entitled "An Old-Fashioned Young Man," and will mark his finish as a Thomas H. Ince star. Hereafter Ray will go it "on his own."

Japanese make-up as well as a blonde wig will disguise Anita Stewart in her next screen presentation. Edward Jose is directing her in Harold McGrath's "The Yellow Typhoon."

She's been out of a couple of Bill Hart pictures, has Ann Little—but she's back again and will be seen as the woman the brave hero protects in "Two Gun Bill's" next screen offering.

"Sheriff Nell," otherwise known under her ordinary name of Polly Moran, is going to ride and shoot and whoop and cavort in twenty-six screen comedies starting right away.

David Wark Griffith has purchased the screen rights to "'Way Down East," the play which made William A. Brady a million. Just why this splendid piece of property has been denied a screening long ago is probably demonstrated in the purchase price—$175,000. Lottie Blair Parker's famous story, produced by Joseph R. Grismer and starring Phoebe Davis, has entertained thousands upon thousands in the theatre—and the later generation is expected to multiply its audience in films.

If money and effort and talent can supply the requisites, Bill Hart is in for another rival with horse and "shooting irons" on the screen. The new Westerner is Buck Jones, and William Fox, who already stars Tom Mix in prairie romances, is going to "present" Mr. Jones with plenty of fame. "The Last Straw" is his first vehicle.

"Other Men's Shoes" will be filled by Edgar Lewis as a Pathe star for immediate circulation on the nation's screens, Mr. Lewis being the director and Crauford Kent the principal actor.

Charles Lapworth.

Will direct Goldwyn advertising and publicity in England.

Vaudeville is going to furnish another star of the screen, with musical comedy dividing the honors, when T. Roy Barnes gets into films via Goldwyn and the comedy "Scratch My Back." Barnes was the fellow who used to take a shotgun to vaudeville audiences (before the war) when they did not applaud the American flag. His skit was preparedness in tabloid and might have helped win the war, for all we know.

David Powell has long been prominent in film-dramas as leading man for various stars, but greater recognition than usual comes to him in "On With the Dance," where his name is given equal prominence with that of Mae Murray in this Paramount release.

The picture-camera gets close to events in more ways than in the "news weeklies." When the Stecher and Caddock wrestling bout was decided at Madison Square Garden films were made, and on Sunday afternoon and evening—less than forty-eight hours after the event—the match was screened at George M. Cohan's Theatre, New York, at $1—top price.

Willard King Bradley's photoplay "Empty Arms" has been produced under the direction of Frank Reicher, with Gail Kane the star. J. Herbert Frank, Irene Blackwell and Thurston Hall assist in telling the story of childless mothers.

Having discovered that nine out of ten of us are "Respectable by Proxy," Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is going to name a film just that—and Pathe will send it around to all the screens of the world.

Zena Keefe will be the star of "The Woman God Sent," with Jack West her leading man. This will be a Selznick presentation, screened under direction of Richard L'Estrange.

Goldwyn has purchased screen rights to "The Christian," the Hall Caine story brought to fame upon the stage by Viola Allen and played in every clime by dramatic stock companies. The name of the star who will play the role of Glory Quail in the screen presentation has not been disclosed.

"The Heart of a Child," screen version of Frank Danby's novel, has been secured by Metro. Nazimova is working at the head of the company which is now producing the feature at Metro's Los Angeles studio.

Norma Talmadge will soon be screened in "Yes or No," a play that was produced on the stage two seasons ago. G. M. Anderson, who made screen fame as "Broncho Billy" when pictures were not taken so seriously as now, made the stage production.

Marguerita Fisher will be the star of a "Flying A" screen drama to be entitled "The Dangerous Talent." Just what this alarming possession may be is not disclosed in any of the early references to the plot.

"The Fear Market" has been screened as the first picture Alice Brady completed after her recent marriage. Miss Brady's father is famous enough as a theatrical manager and her father-in-law is Dr. Frank Crane, the widely read and quoted newspaper and magazine writer.

Goldwyn is doing a good share toward the task of keeping an exhaustless supply of pictures on the screen. Ten companies are working for the Goldwyn organization in California.

With husband and wife collaborating in scenorizing and directing her first film, Bessie Love will soon come back to her friends as the star of her own producing company. Joseph De Grasse and Ida May Parks, his wife, are making ready her first presentation.

Maurice Tourneur's next production will probably offer a screen version of one of Robert Louis Stevenson's novels. In the presenting company will be Janice Wilson, a sister of Lois and Roberta Wilson, two pretty girls already prominent in pictures.

Lloyd Whitlock and Allan Forrest will divide the responsibility of "leads' opposite Lottie Pickford in the first independent production of "Little Mary's" sister.

Free Film Shows Please Boston's Poor Children

THE Lancaster Theatre, Boston, is doing its bit toward making the poor children of the crowded West End happy and promoting good citizenship. This photoplay house is open to children every Saturday morning from 10 to 12 o'clock. The kiddies are the guests of the theatre, the Catholic Italian Civic League and other volunteer associations. A nominal subscription of 10 cents for each child is solicited to cover expenses, the poor children receiving tickets free through the generosity of subscribers.

"The idea is simply to give the children a good time and to promote good citizenship," said C. W. Dimock, president of the corporation which owns the theatre. "Films especially selected are shown. They are the sort of films children should see. We find the children like these pictures better than the more lurid sort."

There were 1,500 children at the first free performance. "The Eternal Triangle," dealing with the matrimonial troubles of a pair of collie dogs, caused gales of laughter. Norma Talmadge as the delightful little tomboy from the West in "Mickey" was the other picture that afforded great enjoyment.

A song leader from the War Camp Community Service led the singing. A large American flag was thrown on the screen. The audience of boys and girls rose as a unit and recited the "pledge to the flag." Then they made the theatre fairly rock with "America." Several little fellows recited poems and a boy soprano gave a very good selection.

"Wanderlust."

During the week of Jan. 2 the New York Rivoli had one of the most beautiful scenics that has appeared in some time. It is a Robert C. Bruce production released by the Educational Films Corporation of America, and consists of a series of scenes illustrating a poem, the lines of which are distributed through the picture as subtitles. It opens with sunrise in the mountains, followed by a scene looking toward the west and "beyond the west, the sea." Then at intervals we follow the white road leading we know not whither, gaze on the open sky, contemplate the flight of a bird, or meditate on the depths of distant hills. There are scenes in which trees are silhouetted against the sky, promontories overlooking a wide sweep of water, and merry running rivers that sparkle like loose diamonds in the sun. There are canoes that skim over tranquil, wood-fringed lakes, and ships that come and go.

WALTER O. RUNCIE, a cameraman of the C. L. Chester forces, has reached central Brazil and is heading for the River of Doubt region. Word was received from him the other day announcing his arrival at Corumba, a little town near the border of Brazil and Bolivia, and a few hundred miles north of Paraguay. It is one of the outposts of civilization in the heart of South America.

Mr. Runcia made his way up the Paraguay River after taking a series of reels in the water labyrinths of the Parana in southern Brazil. He has obtained pictures of the celebrated Guayra Falls. C. L. Chester expects to receive these spectacular films in the near future.

The cameraman's trip through the rough rapids of the Iguatimi on the way to the Parana was eventful. His boat became wedged in the rocks and was extricated with difficulty. The crew had not recovered when the swift current swept the party to the brink of a falls where the river drops 75 feet. The men jumped and swam ashore while the frail craft was abandoned. Such baggage as could be found in the chasm below was recovered. Travel proceeded overland until an Indian village was reached. Here a fiesta was in progress and when the chief learned of the loss of the boat he offered his own dugout for the completion of the journey.

Iowa Club Women Survey Movie Industry in State

FIFTY-FIVE representative Iowa club women recently met in Des Moines to hear the report of the committee which has made a survey of the moving picture industry in the state. Mrs. George Tones, Des Moines, chairman of the educating committee, presided. Mrs. Eugene Henley Grinnel made the report.

The committee saw 785 films at theatres in all parts of the state. Practically every manager asked was glad to cooperate with the women in the work.

The women classified 59 per cent. of the films as good, 16 per cent. as fair, 12 per cent. as medium, and 11 per cent. as bad. In Des Moines, 81 films were seen and 36 proved good, 16 bad, 14 fair, and 11 medium.

The worst criticism made of the films was that 14 per cent. showed infidelity of disregard of the marriage vow and 11 per cent. showed objectionable exposure of the person. Fifteen per cent. were thought likely to contribute to the moral delinquency of the younger element." However, 63 per cent. were judged as "proper plays for immature youths or children."

Considering the theatres themselves, 431 were good from the standpoint of ventilation, 175 fair and 116 poor. Sanitary conditions in 539 were good, 64 fair, and 36 poor.

Mrs. Henley advised mothers to see all films before permitting their children to attend the theatres. She urged motion pictures in school houses, and told of their help in Americanizing the foreigner.

Iowa club women are on record as opposed to censorship by so-called "censorship boards" appointed by state or municipalities. They are undertaking extensive work to provide "better films" in the state, but are aiming to co-operate with the theatre managers and arouse public interest, rather than to get legislation on the subject.

At the Des Moines meeting the women expressed their opposition to sensational films, advertising shown in the theatres,

W. O. Runcie, Filming Iguatimi River in Brazil, Writes That a Cameraman's Life Is the Only One.

A. G. Stolte, manager of A. H. Blank's Des Moines, addressed the women at the meeting. He told how all films shown at his theatre were first reviewed in the private projection room by the manager, musical director and chief electrician. He made the statement that music was today almost two-thirds of the silent drama.

First Adventure Scenic Shows Northwest Indians

WITH the making of the first Adventure Scenic, Jock Rantz, H. H. Brownwell and Jesse G. Sill, the producers, decided upon a definite policy which was a promise to the motion picture public that they would never present a familiar subject—that there was too vast a field in the unknown and the undiscovered places of the world for them to tread the paths of the usual tours to find their subjects, and so we have "The Sons of Salooskin," the test Adventure Scenic to be released by Robertson-Cole.

"The Sons of Salooskin" may be said to have happened. Certainly they were not known outside of the few square miles where they make their home. In fact, the producers were on the trail of an entirely different picture in the mountains of the Northwest when they found that they were the remnants of the tribe of the Salooskin Indians who formerly populated the entire territory.

Other Indians have had their tribal secrets and home life exposed in paintings, in fiction and in motion picture so often that they have become an old story. But these familiar redskins have become associated more with the plains of the West, and it seemed unusual to have them on a hunt through the deep snows of the north. So it was worth a picture chance to trail with them and see what happened.

The picture certainly was worth the chance. There was nothing of the familiar Indian in their action and the country through which they passed afforded some most picturesque camera shots.

Lists Three More Animal Pictures.

Universal announces that three more Major Allen pictures will be released shortly. The first of these, "The Story of the Jaguar," is on the list for March 1. "The Story of the Wolf" will be released on April 5, while the date for "Tiger Land" is set for May 3.

Major Allen's pictures have aroused enthusiasm wherever they were shown. There have been but three released to date, namely: "Trailing the Leopard," "Bear Trapping" and "Lion Trapping."

Three Well-Contrasted Subjects in Pictograph

THREE interesting subjects are contained Pictograph No. 7025 to be released February 22, through the Goldwyn exchanges. It is an unusually entertaining reel that should have a strong appeal for all types of audiences.

The female wasp is closely studied in the "Winged Huntsmen" subject that shows how this ruthless freebooter among insects preys upon other insects less well equipped by nature to protect themselves. The habits of the wasp are presented with great detail in this brief film that is instructive as well as entertaining.

"Would You Make a Date With This Girl?" is one of the "Movies Exposed" series that comprise a unique feature of the Pictograph. First we see a picture of an old hag with stringy gray hair, tattered clothes, discolored teeth and a wrinkled face. There is no suggestion of deception until the marvelously convincing makeup is suddenly removed, revealing an attractive young actress, who may be a "Queen of the Movies," or an aged woman as occasion requires.

No cartoon subjects are more popular with motion picture audiences than the "Out of the Inkwell" studies, one of which, under the title of "The Boxing Kangaroo," closes this Pictograph. Out of a splotch of ink a clown appears. Feeling neglected because the artist is drawing a boxing kangaroo, the clown decides to cut some capers on his own account. Trouble ensues, mostly a boxing match in which the clown and the kangaroo both finish much the worse for wear.

Capitol Treats Teachers to "Hiawatha" Rehearsals

A DRESS rehearsal of "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," which also included the regular Saturday morning rehearsal of music for the coming week under the direction of Nathaniel Finston, was enjoyed by a large audience of invited guests at the Capitol Theatre, on Saturday morning, Jan. 31. Among those invited were in the neighborhood of five thousand school teachers from New York's public schools. Their interest in the affair was contained in the fact that for the first time on any stage, "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," set to music by S. Coleridge Taylor, was to be presented. To be sure it was only a dress rehearsal, but it ran as smoothly as though it had had a season's run. Old Nokomis (played by Ida Mulle) was mistress of ceremonies, even as Longfellow intended she should be. She saw to it that there was food in plenty for all, and that each of the entertainers did his bit "that the guests be more contented," and it may be said for Ida Mulle that her portrayal of the character of Nokomis was a finished piece of work.

Lois Zellner

Adapting for Metro "Shore Acres," in which Alice Lake will star.

Then there was the light-footed Pau-puk-kee-wis, and the sweet-voiced Chibiabos singing to the bridal pair, played by Angelo Romeo and Warren Proctor. Minnehaha was gracefully done by Margaret Waldron, and Willard Foote was a lithe-limbed Hiawatha. The chorus of sixty voices gave a delightful rendition of the choral portion of the music. The cantata opera, as it is called, was a success from an artistic standpoint.

One of the interesting features of the entertainment provided for the guests was the rehearsing of the Gomez overture, "Il Guarany," by the Capitol orchestra. To the uninitiated, the patient, careful manner in which Nat Finston attended to the deserts of the composer, was a revelation. It was indeed interesting to learn first hand just how an orchestra leader gets his musicians under way, and how by careful repetition of the more difficult passages he obtains the results that are met with in the finished performance.

"Hiawatha's Wedding Feast" is the first of this form of musical entertainment to be presented at the Capitol Theatre, under the change of policy in the formation of its weekly programs.

Attractive Idea in the Publishing of Songs

ONE of the newest ideas in song publishing is contained in a series of ballads which are being published by Harold Flammer under the name of "Musique Picturesque." The idea was originated by Bertrand Brown, a composer of songs, and consists of appropriately illustrated music sheets of which page as well as cover carries the suggestion of the song.

This series should prove of service in picture theatres especially on account of the optic suggestion offered by the publisher, for under the intention of "Musique Picturesque" the pictured page on which the music is printed bears evidence to the character of the ballad presented. Two of these songs, "Maybe" and "I Never Knew" composed by Bertrand Brown are among the more attractive of the romantic numbers.

RISKING death for "thrill" pictures, two cameramen obtained views of Mt. Lassen in action, from aeroplanes that swept within a few feet of the smoky crater. The pictures were the first of their kind ever taken, and are a valuable contribution to the already highly interesting history that has resulted through using the motion picture camera from the aeroplane.

The views, released in Fox News No. 34, were taken by Bertin E. Moisant and M. H. Morris, who already have added considerably to the splendid news quality of Fox News. The men set out in two big bombing planes such as participated in the great trans-continental air race last fall. The machines were piloted by Lieuts. Carlyle Ridenour and Eugene Batting.

They left Mather Field, Sacramento, the morning of January 21 for Mt. Lassen, 250 miles away. Mt. Lassen is the only active volcano within the continental limits of the United States, and is situated in a country difficult of access by ordinary means.

The greater part of the trip was made at altitudes ranging from seven to ten thousand feet. Two-thirds of the journey was over thickly wooded and mountainous country, so that a landing, if necessary, would have meant disaster.

"Zoomed" Over Summit.

One stop was made before the volcano was reached—at Red Bluff, a small town fifty miles from the peak. There the aviators inspected their machines and took on gas. The run from Red Bluff to Mt. Lassen was over some of the tallest timber in California, a state noted for the great height of its trees. Beautiful scenes were obtained during this part of the journey.

Arriving at the mountains, the aviators piloted their machines about the volcanic park for more than an hour, continually circling and "zooming" above and below the summit. To enable Moisant to get a fine close-up, Lieut. Ridenour made a dive for the peak and righted his plane when only a few feet over the summit—a stunt about as dangerous as it is possible to do in the air.

Chester Screenics Has Good Material.

An issue of the Chester "Screenics" to be released in the near future contains two entertaining subjects, "Barks and Skippers" and one of the "famous wit" series in which Oliver Hereford philosophizes. The first is an interesting series of views in which dogs are the chief actors. Aristocratic Russian wolf hounds perform jumping feats for the camera, as well as displaying considerable temperament. From wolf hounds with "grandukish airs" we make a quick change to the Canadian northwest and its pack dogs. Here we see the dogs being harnessed into their loads, and good-naturedly taking things as they come. The second subject contains many lines which will bring laughs.

"Wonders of Nature" Winning.

Prof. W. L. Brind's "Wonders of Nature" stories, released by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., on February 1, are meeting with popular approval wherever shown. They are the type of single reel educational subject which never fails to amuse and at the same time to instruct. In compiling these pictures, Prof. Brind was careful to arrange them so that their entertainment value was not lost, but rather enhanced by catchy titles of a humorous nature — in themselves an amusing feature. Exhibitors will find them helpful in giving a fitting setting to their feature photoplays and in adding a distinctive touch of refinement to their programs. Live showmen everywhere are booking the entire series of fifty-two subjects, released one each week.

For this week's release Prizma has secured the glorious colorings of the Riviera, which is the most celebrated rendezvous of the elite in Europe. The release is called "The Refreshing Riviera," and refreshing it is to sit back in a comfortable chair and see in Nature's colors on the screen this wonderful country as it is seen by those fortunate enough to visit the Riviera in person. This region along the Mediterranean is one of unusual charm and beauty, bordered on one side by the beautiful blue Mediterranean and on the other by the rugged heights of the Alps.

The Riviera is a wonderful garden with roses and other flowers growing in great profusion over walls and gateways centuries old. Among other towns and scenes, are those of Menton, Roquebrune, Crasseuil, Villefrance and the ancient churches of St. Michel, St. Marguerite, and the Chateau de Lascaris.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That Charles Hugo, a C. L. Chester cameraman, has cabled his arrival in the Philippine Islands after an extended trip through Korea, Shantung and Southern China, where he has made a series of pictures which will be released shortly. In the Philippines he will photograph some of the little known tribes before proceeding south to the Sulu Islands and then to British North Borneo. He has fifteen months of travel still before him.

That the Willard Storage Battery Company, City, held a convention at the Hotel Astor on January 29 and 30, in which all their branch managers throughout the United States assembled. The various point of the Willard Storage battery was brought before the assemblage through the use of motion pictures, and Power's machines were selected for the presentation.

That Charles Hugo, "cameraing" for C. L. Chester, arriving in Te-Chow, China, along the Grand Canal, put up for the night at a small hotel, and encountered the following amusing, and at the same time annoying situation: In order to catch a train at 5 o'clock the next morning, he asked the proprietor to wake him early. He forthwith retired and was dozing off into a sound sleep after a hard day's work when he was aroused by a violent commotion at the foot of the bed. He struck a light and discovered a Chinese boy valiantly attempting to tie a resentful rooster to the bedstead.

The cameraman expostulated with warmth, taking the rooster's side of the argument, but little progress was made as the boy did not understand English. The wrangle attracted the landlord. He was astounded.

"Master wantchie wake up 5 o'clock morning time," he explained. "The he must have chickie stop he room. When master hear he sing savy 5 o'clock come—must get up. Suppose you want to catchie train more better, let chickie stop here."

When the landlord refused to take responsibility for the call himself, Hugo submitted to sharing his room with the king of the barnyard.

That "The Winking Lights of Never-Never Land" is one of the interesting subjects of the Pathe Review for February 15. It gives an insight into the U. S. Lighthouse service along the Hudson River. These lights in contrast to those in the old wooden structures, and which had to be tended every few days, are substantially set in concrete bases, and require attention only twice yearly.

When seen he was primed full of news, but the writer was in the place of the small boy in an orchard who feasts his eyes on a tempting, rosy apple without a chance of reaching it by hook or crook. "Verboten" hedged Mr. Rothapfel in on every side, so far as pertinent news was concerned, and the writer, who has known him since the year 1911, was fully aware of his plight and did not press him beyond the friendly limit.

As the national director of moving picture presentation for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, it becomes at once apparent that Mr. Rothapfel's visit had something to do with that line of effort and with picture theatres, and from the fact that he kept in such close contact with the Ascher Brothers during his stay there is convincing evidence that Goldwyn has purchased an interest in the Ascher Brothers houses in Chicago and elsewhere, notwithstanding the fact that no official confirmation of the rumor has yet been made.

Mr. Rothapfel predicts a decided advance in the near future in the presentation of pictures, and announced that it is Mr. Goldwyn's intention to give to exhibitors the best service possible in this respect.

It is the opinion of Mr. Rothapfel that moving picture presentation has been at a standstill for the past year. By this, he was careful to state, he means that little or no progress has been shown over the past achievements. He was aware that such a statement by him would appear like bragging to many exhibitors, but he reasserted it was the truth nevertheless. He predicted for the year entered upon a tremendous stride forward in the matter of presentations.

He was modest in referring to the success of the California Theatre, Los Angeles. On taking hold he first redecorated the house. Then he took the same staff and made it modern. The orchestra was increased, and the house was equipped in every modern, approved way, so as to insure a perfect modern presentation. Then the admissions were changed from 35 and 50 cents to 30, 50 and 75 cents, and the house has been showing to capacity ever since, with a line of people outside always waiting for the next show during running hours.

It was near the close of September, 1911, that the writer was instructed by the late James P. Chalmers, Jr., to go to Minneapolis and visit the Lyric Theatre, and write an article describing how pictures were being shown by a Mr. Rothapfel at that house. Several months before the time mentioned rumors had come to me from Milwaukee that this man Rothapfel, who was then managing the Alhambra for Tom Saxe, was a wizard in the art of presenting pictures. It was, therefore, with considerable pleasure and keen expectancy that I set out on my mission.

I still look back to that visit as the birth time of an established faith in my own mind of the great future of the moving picture. Hitherto, with one single exception, I had viewed pictures, good and bad in the making, rushed off on the screen without any attempt to bring out artistic merit where it did appear, the main object being to rush the program through and take in another lot of nickels or dimes. The single exception referred to, and I am glad to recall it in justice to my old friend William Sievers, occurred at the old Grand Central Theatre in St. Louis in August, 1911.

I sent in my article to Mr. Chalmers, but three weeks passed, and it did not appear. I wrote to him concerning the matter, asking the reason for delay, with the result that the article appeared in the issue of December 2, 1911. I never learned personally from Mr. Chalmers the cause of the delay in publication, but I learned through Mr. Rothapfel some considerable time afterward that Mr. Chalmers had written him he had been afraid to publish my article as it was to him as great a surprise as the manner of showing pictures at the Lyric had been to me.

Excerpts from Lyric Article.

Following are several paragraphs from my article on the Lyric, which, doubtless, and with considerable reason at the time, caused Mr. Chalmers to hesitate in publishing it:

"How I wish that exhibitors throughout the country could attend the Lyric in Minneapolis and see how S. L. Rothapfel, the Belasco of moving picture presentations, does things. I mean how he works wonders. How he takes a picture that ordinarily awakens but little interest and transforms what were only shadows into living, sentient beings whose varied emotions fill us with joy or sadness, or thrill us with fear. How he takes one into the very atmosphere of the story, so that we live amid its scenes and listen to its sounds.

"Is it a great subject—'A Tale of Two Cities'? Hark! Do you hear two bars of the Marseilles played in medium key by the orchestra and the rumble of kettle drums. Then, immediately following, the same bars repeated pianissimo, succeeded by the rattle of kettle drums sounding farther off. All this before the operator has made a single turn of the crank. Then the picture follows. There you have the theme of the story in a flash—the French Revolution, with its scenes of strife and bloodshed.

"Is it 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'? Look at the stage. Down-stage to the right is a conservatory and ball room brilliantly illuminated, through the windows of which we see the happy dancers and hear joyful sounds. 'Old Kentucky Home' followed by 'Good Night' falls sweetly on our ears. As the last note dies away an old darkey is seen coming down the steps of an old Southern mansion, Colonial style, down-stage to the left. As Uncle Ned crosses into the pale moonlight to the centre of stage in four about twenty pickaninnies come out of the shadows from the left and squat themselves in a semi-circle around him, their backs toward the audience. They ask him to tell the story of Uncle Tom. As the old man seats himself the picture appears on the screen, and all keep their positions in the subdued light until the story is told by the silent drama."

Rothapfel's Influence Invaluable.

The influence exerted by Mr. Rothapfel on moving picture entertainment and indirectly on the production of moving pictures and the uplift of the entire industry has been invaluable. He has aided greatly in raising the moving picture from the level of a mere toy, a plaything, to the importance of a thing of art and beauty, and of intellectual enjoyment.

Nor must he stop short in the work he has so successfully begun. He is now in a position that will enable him to bring the presentation of pictures to a still higher plane. Actuated by the same love of artistry and accomplishment that dominated him when I met him first in Minneapolis, he cannot fail to conduct moving picture entertainment steadily forward toward its predestined goal.

A UNIQUE invitation to attend the opening of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, which took place Tuesday, February 3, at 6:45 p. m., was received at the Chicago office recently. The invitation was printed in the form of a summons, the Palace Theatre Beautiful being the plaintiff against the writer and his associates, who are cited to appear before the Supreme Court (Highest Achievement in Motion Picture Presentation) in the Palace Theatre in the city of Hamilton, Ohio, at the opening term, on the date before mentioned.

The Palace management also attached an accompanying slip to the summons which advised that all seats had been reserved for the opening presentation and requesting that advice be made by return mail as to the number of tickets required. The summons was signed by F. S. Meyer for the plaintiffs. The writer regrets that he was unable to obey the summons, and must, therefore, "be adjudged and decreed to have wilfully, negligently, wantonly and carelessly neglected his own welfare and the opportunity of indulging in the most edifying, gratifying and exhilarating presentation heretofore offered, or at any time in the future to be presented on this mundane sphere."

In mitigation of this sentence the writer implores the said F. S. Meyer to send him at the first opportunity a full description of the Palace Theatre, together with photographs showing the front and the interior of the house, and a story of the doings in the court mentioned on Tuesday, February 3. On receipt of these presents he will forever pray, etc.

Hyman Opens Offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati

A. S. HYMAN, vice-president and general manager of Hyman Attractions, Inc., came into the city last week after a booking trip of three weeks in Michigan. During this trip he had wonderful success with the booking of George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" and the recent pictures of his own company. He recently purchased from George Kleine the exclusive rights for a certain period for the showing of "Quo Vadis?" in Michigan, Ohio and other states as a road show.

During his latest visit to Chicago he arranged to handle the great super feature, "Deliverance," for George Kleine in the state of Ohio for a stated period. Like "Quo Vadis?" this super feature will be handled as a road show.

Mr. Hyman left for Cleveland and Cincinnati Thursday, January 29, where he will open offices for the handling of "Deliverance" and "Quo Vadis?" and the pictures owned by Hyman Attractions, Inc.

Roy Sheldon Director of Capital's Special Pictures

ROY SHELDON, the well known author, director and actor, has been engaged by the Capital Film Company to take charge of the direction of the special productions of the organization.

Mr. Sheldon has been engaged in the moving picture business for the past twelve years in the capacities mentioned, having been connected with the Reliance Film Company, the Sid Olcott International Company, and the Gene Gautier Film Company.

Among his recent pictures are "The Land of the Lost," "Trooper 44," "His First Ambition," "Miss U. S. A." and "Bonnie Annie Laurie."

Mr. Sheldon was in Chicago last week in conference with President Barnhard, of the Capital, getting a line on the new productions to be released by the company in the near future.

Rothacker Off to Coast; Starts Los Angeles Plant

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, left for Los Angeles last week. He was accompanied by William H. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News. Before leaving, Mr. Rothacker had J. D. Williams, Bruce Johnson and Henry Lehrman out at the plant to view a sample print of Marshal Neilan's new picture, "The River's End." Other visitors at the plant were S. L. Rothapfel and Joseph Engel, the latter being treasurer of Metro.

The chief object of Mr. Rothacker's present visit is to start construction on his Los Angeles laboratory, the site for which was purchased recently. It is understood that he will also complete arrangements for the production of a six-reel feature, the story for which he secured some time ago.

At the annual meeting of stockholders of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company held in Chicago, January 27, the following officers were elected: Watterson R. Rothacker, president; H. J. Aldous, vice-president and treasurer; John G. Hahn, secretary, and J. G. Mammoser, assistant treasurer.

The usual cash dividends of 10 per cent. on the common stock and 7 per cent. on the preferred were declared.

Randolph Has Two Entrances.

The Randolph Theatre has now an entrance from North State street, as well as from Randolph street. The State street entrance was completed and opened to the public last week. It offers a beautiful tile marble lobby, fifty feet wide by one hundred feet in depth, to accommodate the waiting throngs comfortably.

Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two World" proved a very attractive feature at the Randolph last week. It will be followed February 8 by Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead."

At Goldwyn's Chicago Office.

E. C. Jensen, Western district manager for Goldwyn, has just returned from a two weeks' trip over his territory. During his absence from Chicago, Mr. Jensen was in Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis and Kansas City.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago offiice, had a battle with the grip last week. He, however, refused to take the count, and continued to do business as usual. Van says that he is now feeling 100 per cent. again.

"The Great Air Robbery" Advertised from the Clouds

THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY," in which Lieut. O. L. Locklear is the daring star and the first of its kind ever filmed anywhere, will be given its opening run at the Bandbox in the Loop, on West Madison street, beginning February 22. It will run two weeks at this house.

Universal is making extraordinary efforts to give the picture befitting publicity. The company has arranged with the Curtis Aeroplane people for a worldwide campaign that will be conducted in the air. Manager John Keane, of the Bandbox, is taking due advantage of this arrangement to announce his opening day in Chicago by raining on the city hundreds of thousands of leaflets from several Curtis machines. Mr. Keane will also engage in heavy exploitation in the Chicago dailies. Prominent Chicagoans will also be taken aboard the Curtis planes during their advertising flights.

There is a big demand for the picture in this city, and Manager Lesserman, of Universal's Chicago branch, states that all the leading theatres here will show it.

Banks Winters "Flue" Victim.

Banks Winters, in charge of publicity and exploitation for Universal in the Chicago office, is a victim of the grip. To add to his troubles, Mrs. Winters was also seized with the malady a short time previous to his confinement to bed, and the health officers declared it a case of diphtheria, which led to the quarantine of Mr. Winters' residence.

The last news received from the nurse in attendance was to the effect that Mrs. Winters was able to get around again and that Mr. Winters was slowly recovering.

"In Old Kentucky" in Big Favor.

"In Old Kentucky" will start extended runs beginning Sunday, February 8, at the Pastime, the Ziegfeld and the Bijou Dream, simultaneously. These houses are in the Loop district. This super feature is in big demand by Chicago theatres.

Pre-Showing of "Other Men's Shoes."

A private presentation of "Other Men's Shoes" was given by Manager Eshman, of the Chicago office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., at the Playhouse, Monday morning, January 26. A full orchestral accompaniment was given the showing, and the picture was highly complimented by a gathering of exhibitors and others which taxed the capacity of the handsome little theatre.

Ince Goes North for Scenes.

A journey of several thousand miles is being made by Ralph Ince and his supporting cast in order to obtain scenes for a new production for Selznick Pictures under the title of "The Law Bringers." Mr. Ince and the cast have left for the Northwest, where they will remain until the required scenes are shot.

"The Law Bringers" is a story written by G. B. Lancaster, well known writer of Western stories. This one deals with the life of the Northwest mounted police and Mr. Ince will play the leading role. The supporting cast includes Zena Keefe, Huntley Gordon, Anita Booth, H. D. Southard, P. C. Hartigan and Red Eagle, a full-blooded Indian.

Dr. Crane Gives High Praise to "Pollyanna"

DR. FRANK CRANE'S comments on "Pollyanna," which have been placed on three sheet billboards throughout the country in connection with Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists, has created an extraordinary amount of enthusiasm among exhibitors. They have commented upon it as being one of the best pieces of exploitation that they have ever had to use in connection with a big production.

There are few men in the literary world who are as popular as Dr. Frank Crane, writer, philosopher, statesman and opinionist. His "Four Minute Essays," full of inspiration, wit and common sense, are known everywhere and have done wonders for the good of his fellow-men.

Dr. Crane, fell in love with "Pollyanna" and he hasn't hesitated to say so. His love for this wonderful "glad" story has been written boldly by him, and he willingly gave Miss Pickford the privilege of using it anywhere, at any time and at any place, in connection with her production. The editorial, which was originally printed in the New York Evening Globe, has been reproduced in enlarged form on a three sheet by United Artists, making an exceptional attention-attractor, and which is being used in great profusion throughout the country by exhibitors in connection with the exploitation of this production.

WESTERN Canada is seeing something of the latest and most approved design of picture theatre since the opening of the new Allen Theatre in Winnipeg, Manitoba, in January under the management of Will M. Elliott, formerly manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, and the Washington Theatre, Detroit.

The new Allen structure at Winnipeg is both spacious and magnificent. Moreover, many of the details of construction are unique and interesting to both Easterners and Westerners. This theatre is the first in the Canadian West to be fitted with an oil-burning furnace. This is very interesting in view of the fact that Manitoba winters are long and severe. In spite of keen winters, California orange trees are found in the luxuriantly-appointed promenade on the mezzanine floor. There is an orchestra of twenty pieces, which is the largest permanent musical organization to be found in any city of Canada with exception of Toronto. Two thousand people can view a performance at one sitting and there are no less than four aisles on each floor. These aisles are illuminated by concealed lamps—which is also something new for Winnipeg. The projection room is equipped with three projection machines—one more than usual.

Colored Lights Guide Orchestra.

The new house started out without an organ but it was not intended to do so. The expensive concert instrument went astray in transit. A unique detail is that Joseph Shadwick, the director of the orchestra, guides his musical band by means of small varied-colored light bulbs on each of the music stands. Various signals are flashed to the orchestra members by means of these tiny bulbs.

When the theatre was opened, the local newspapers devoted considerable space to descriptions of various features. The Winnipeg Evening Tribune carried three pages of reading matter and advertising, the latter having been secured from the theatres and from contractors who had had charge of building details. Practically every outstanding feature of the house was written up in this section.

On the opening night, Manager Elliott received telegrams from many film stars and officials of the moving picture industry, as well as from many of his host of friends in both Canada and the United States. The opening attraction was "Upstairs," starring Mabel Normand.

Goldwyn Reports Purchase of "A Tailor Made Man"

ANOTHER of the comedy stage successes produced by Cohan & Harris has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and will be prepared for the screen at an early date. This time an announcement from the Goldwyn offices states that the motion picture rights to "A Tailor Made Man" have been secured, making the third important purchase from Cohan & Harris in recent weeks, the others being "Officer 666" and "Stop Thief."

The record of "A Tailor Made Man" has been equaled by few plays of any description. It struck a vein of American humor that brought a general response in every section of the country. It was equally popular in large cities and in small towns, and for two years drew capacity audiences. The screen version of the story will reach the theatregoing public while the stage play is still fresh in mind.

The original manuscript that inspired "A Tailor Made Man" was written by Gabriel Dregley under the name of "The Well-Fitting Dress Suit." Although Mr. Dregley's play was not considered entirely suitable for stage presentation, it revealed great comedy possibilities which were recognized by Harry James Smith and Cohan & Harris. Mr. Smith took the substance of the first play and worked it over into a new comedy, gave it the catchy title of "A Tailor Made Man," and it was produced by Cohan & Harris in New York, August 27, 1917. Grant Mitchell scored a triumph through his portrayal of the leading character.

Fox Schedules "The Strongest" for February; Twenty-one Subjects Listed

PROMINENT in the list of releases scheduled by Fox Film Corporation for February is found in the "special" classification, Clemenceau's celebrated story "The Strongest."

This picture is enacted by a strong cast, including Carlo Liten, George Harrison Hunter, Jack Horne, Jean Gauthier de Trigny, Mme. Gauthier de Trigny, Florence Malone, Renee Adoree and James Marcus. Clemenceau himself not only wrote the novel but is credited as well with the authorship of the scenario. R. A. Walsh directed the picture, and Ben Bail did the photography.

"The Adventurer" is the name of the William Farnum film scheduled for February release, and those who have seen this vehicle admit that it is in a class with the best of his recent pictures. It is of the romantic drama type, and was directed by J. Gordon Edwards from the story by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

First Pearl White Picture.

"The White Moll," Pearl White's first starring vehicle for William Fox, also is scheduled for February. This screen adaptation of Frank L. Packard's original story is as vital in its them as any other of his works. It was directed by Harry Millard. E. Lloyd Sheldon is responsible for the adaptation.

The cast supporting Miss White includes Richard Travers, William Harvey, Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport and Jack Baston. Anthony Merlo assisted the director and Eddie Wynard cranked the camera.

"Her Elephant Man," the "sweetest circus story ever told" is Miss Shirley Mason's first picture for Fox. It has been seen by a special audience of reviewers, circus people, newspaper editors and exchangemen. The company refuses to say anything in behalf of Miss Mason's vehicle putting the matter up to the "ultimate consumer"; but if the trade press opinion is to be considered a criterion, the production is a complete success.

Pearl Doles Boll, author of the book from which the play was made, is most enthusiastic over the pictorial version and the circus folk acclaim it unanimously as the greatest screen play of the circus ever produced.

Russell's February Release.

William Russell's contribution to the Fox February releases is "Shod with Fire," an adaptation of Harold Titus' story directed by Emmett Flynn, and showing the star in a distinctly different sort of role from the portrayed by him in "Sacred Silence" or "The Lincoln Highwayman." J. Anthony Roach adapted it to the screen. In the cast are Helen Ferguson, Betty Schade, Robert Cain, George Stewart, Nelson McDowell and Jack Connelly.

In "The Devil's Riddle," Gladys Brockwell adds to her laurels by the creation of a novel character role. The play is taken from the original by Edwin Levin, and was adapted by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Frank Beal directed it, with Sam Landers at the camera. It is a story of the Middle West and a girl's struggle against a callous world. William Scott, who has acquitted himself so well as leading man for Miss Brockwell in her recent Fox entertainments is cast with her again in this production. The other members of the company are Richard Cummings, Claire McDowell, Easter Walters, Nicholas Duneaw, Kate Price, Louis Fritzroy, Chance Ward, Vera Lewis, Louis Natho, Tom Bates and Benny Susslow.

"Mere Mid-Winter Madness—This Reflection Business."

Fox Debut of Buck Jones.

The third of the new stars to make their debut under the Fox banner, in February is Buck Jones, famed cowboy hero. "The Last Straw" is the name of the picture in which he will be seen and it comes from the pen of Harold Titus.

The last of the multiple reel productions scheduled for February is Madlaine Traverse in "The Hell Ship," a tale of the sea and of a love that knows no end. This story gives the star ample opportunity to display her magnetism and emotional power. Denison Clift is the author of the story and Scott Dunlap is the director.

Three Sunshine Comedies Listed.

Hampton Del Ruth, besides devoting more than five months to the production of the recently announced five-reel Fox-Sunshine Special, has found time to supervise the production of the regular two-reel Sunshines—three of which are booked for February release. These in their order include "Sheriff Nell's Comeback," "Her Naughty Wink" and "Her Private Husband."

Five Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons are listed for the month. They include "The Plumbers," "I'm Ringing Your Party," "Fishing," "Dead-Eye Jeff" and "The Sour Violin." All are timely subjects conceived by Capt. Bud Fisher, creator of the black-and-white co-stars, and in each there is something distinctive and new.

To Revive Six Big Productions.

This practically concludes the William Fox program for February so far as regular releases are concerned. However, the producer has inaugurated a country-wide exchange campaign in behalf of six of his big special productions —"Les Miserables," "Cleopatra," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Salome," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "The Honor System."

The revival of these de luxe productions is attributed by the Fox organization to the theatremen of the country. The exhibitors it is said have insisted on revivals of these stories, and the producer has responded with a new series of prints, brand-new press sheets paper and accessories.

These pictures are to be issued in February and the combined sales force of the Fox exchanges throughout the country will concentrate their efforts toward showing them not only in new territory, but also for return engagements handling the films in the same manner in which the speaking stage has presented successes for repeat performances or revivals.

Ritchey Receives Promotion.

Will M. Ritchey has been promoted to the position of head of the scenario department at the Morosco Studio, where he will have entire charge of this branch of activities at the Occidental Boulevard plant for Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Ritchey has to his credit such productions as "Everywoman," directed by George Melford, and "The Fighting Chance," which Charles Maigne is directing for Paramount Artcraft at the present time.

John W. Allen Is Dead, After a Week's Illness

JOHN W. ALLEN, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with headquarters at Chicago, died in that city on Friday, January 30, after an illness of one week. Mr. Allen's death is felt particularly by the men with whom he has been associated for years, and by the men of more recent acquaintance who felt the charm of his genial personality during the recent convention at Chicago. It was during this convention that Mr. Allen was stricken.

John W. Allen was 33 years of age. He was educated in Kansas and entered the motion picture business as an operator. His next affiliation was with Warner Brothers as an exchange man and later as a salesman. A larger field was offered to him by the Universal Film Company, which he accepted and went to Los Angeles. He became affiliated with Famous Players in 1915 as manager of the San Francisco exchange. Two years later he went to the Orient on a business mission and in 1918 was promoted to the position of special representative, with headquarters at Chicago.

Mr. Allen is survived by his widow, who was with him through his illness; and by his mother and a half-brother, whose homes are in Kansas.

"John W. Allen," said Mr. Zukor, "was one of the finest examples of the young and successful business man whom I have been privileged to have associated with me. He was sterling in character, upright and honorable in business, clean and wholesome in his viewpoint of life."

Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution, said: "John W. Allen was a 'one hundred per cent. fellow.' He was even more than that: he was a friend, a pal in the strongest sense of the term. His hand, his heart and his soul were at all times at the command of the organization. Mere words cannot tell my admiration for that man."

Callaghan Signs ZuSu Pitts.

George H. Callaghan, special representative for the R. C. P. Smith Syndicate of Los Angeles, announces that the syndicate, which has recently entered the picture field as a producer, has signed ZaSu Pitts, now a Brentwood star, to a long term contract. Sara Mason, who wrote Miss Pitts' starring vehicles produced under the direction of King Vidor for Brentwood, will write specially for Miss Pitts under her new contract. Production will start in the Spring.

ARTHUR S. KANE announces that Charles Ray completed, on Saturday, January 31, his last picture for Thomas Ince, and will soon start work on his new productions for First National release.

The star, whose affiliation with Mr. Kane was first announced last week, has left for the California hills, where he will take a much needed rest, and will return to his newly equipped studios in Los Angeles some time in the middle of February to start the filming of his first pictures under the new auspices.

Construction is proceeding rapidly on the group of additional buildings which will house the production work of the star, and it is expected that the remodeling of the present property will have been completed by the time the star returns from his vacation. Extensive additions to the original studios are also under way.

Mr. Ray is considering several well-known plays, and these are being contracted for by the local Kane offices. The rights to a number of stage successes and popular books have already been bought by the new producing company.

Studios Ready When Ray Returns.

When Mr. Ray returns from the California hills in the middle of the month he will find the home of the Charles Ray productions ready for immediate occupancy. The Fleming Street studios recently vacated by the Jesse D. Hampton Productions are being improved by the addition of another spacious enclosed stage to be built on the property adjoining. Ground for the structure has already been broken and building has begun. Other alterations and improvements will include a large generating plant and a complete lighting system.

Mr. Ray will bring to his new productions several of the best directorial and technical men with whom he has been associated in the past. Jerome Storm, who has directed Charles Ray in many of his great successes, will continue to watch over the destinies of the star. Chester Lyons, the cameraman who has filmed the star in all of his recent pictures, is expected to join the rapidly organizing forces when actual work begins.

Wesley Gilmour, who is reputed to be one of the most experienced studio men on the Coast, has concluded arrangements to come on with the Ray organization as studio manager.

Learns Drawing Power of Screen.

That a special motion picture feature has twice the drawing power of a regular bill of vaudeville and is able to draw a capacity house in a comparatively small town threatre, where a combination program of vaudeville and pictures had failed repeatedly, has been proven by Leo F. Keiler, manager of the Arcade Theatre at Paducah, Ky.

The revelation was made to Mr. Keiler when he booked "Back to God's Country," starring Nell Shipman and distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit, and canceled his vaudeville bookings during the run of the picture. When Mr. Keiler found that he was playing to capacity without the aid of vaudeville he instituted a split week—four days of pictures and two of vaudeville. He immediately visited the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange and signed up for twenty-five First National attractions for use during the film portion of the week.

THE opening of a new theatre may be an event or an incident, according to circumstances. When Louis M. Boas does the opening it is an event. He proved this the other day when he unlocked the doors of his Rialto Theatre in Fall River, Mass.

Most of Fall River was there. So was James H. Kay, mayor of the city, and Joseph E. Warren of Taunton, speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives. So was Emile Chautard, motion picture director; Elaine Hammerstein, Guy Empey, Mary Rogers and Lucy Cotton, motion picture stars, and Albert Lena, manager of Mr. Chautard's studio.

Mayor Kay and Speaker Warren made addresses; the orchestra played an overture; the Fox News was shown; Mme. Margarita Boas sang, and three pictures were screened. The pictures, in order of their presentation, were Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure" and Wallace Reid in "Double Speed." The exercises began at 7.30 o'clock and lasted until nearly midnight.

Great Publicity.

Mr. Boas received congratulations, money and probably more publicity than ever has been given an amusement undertaking in the history of this section of the country. All of the newspapers gave the affair liberal space and the Fall River Daily Globe fairly outdid itself with practically a full page splash on the afternoon of the dedication. A seven-column display heading, five columns of text, a three-column and a two-column cut of the interior of the theatre and single column cuts of Mr. Boas; George Austin, superintendent of construction, and George Darling, the architect, constituted the showing. The Evening Herald used a four-column cut which was more than one-half page deep—this also previous to the opening.

The house seats 1,700 persons. It is a brick structure, fireproof and possesses of all modern conveniences for the accommodation of the public and the facilitation of motion picture entertainment. The foyer has three sections, the outer lobby containing display frames which provide space for very elaborate advertising work, a gold and ivory mirrored lobby and an inner foyer, also done in ivory and gold and having mirrors arranged in window-like panels.

Thoroughly Modern Equipment.

The equipment and conveniences include five projection machines, a house telephone system, an organ, fan system of heating and ventilating, a projection booth nine by twenty feet in size, with a height of twelve feet, electrical fixtures with special shades to give a subdued lighting effect and a women's lounging room where a public telephone is installed.

The theatre is owned by the Fall River Consolidated Enterprises, which, about a year ago, took over the Loew and Spitz interest in Fall River and now operates four theatres there, one in Lowell, one in Portland and two in Newburyport. The officers of this holding company are: President, J. C. Bills, Jr.; vice president, Louis M. Boas; treasurer, B. A. Prager, and clerk, James M. Swift.

THE New York exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, of which Louis Rosenbluh is executive, has taken over the entire tenth floor of the building at 130 West Forty-sixth street, and is completing rapidly the necessary subdivisions for the offices of the officials and salesmen.

The revival by William Fox of the six big De Luze productions has meet with an eager demand for bookings, many of the suburban theatres have already booked for the entire month of February.

The first release made by the New York exchange of the Fox company was Charles Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities," which was presented at the Acadamy of Music the first half of last week. It not only proved the sound judgment of William Fox in making this revival, but it also proved that William Farnum is a name to conjure with on the screen, and in the dual role of Sidney Carton and Charles Darney, Mr. William Farnum thrilled the audiences that were present at every performance.

At Fox's Star Theatre, 107th street and Lexington avenue, this week, the revival of "A Daughter of the Gods" has an added attraction in the presentation of a musical fantasy by a bevy of pretty Fox screen players who step, as it were, out of the picture and introduce a catching prologue arranged by Earl Lindsay entitled "We Are Making a Close-Up of You. The act, which is in two parts, presents these clever performers as sea-maidens and also in a melange of popular songs and dances. Those selected to appear in the playlet include Pam Lawrence, ingenue; the Lucille Sisters, dancers; Hilda Shayne, Marjorie Rooney, Reeny Genere, Hazel Heath, Edith Wild, Evelyn Pritchard and Mae Murray.

"Seeing It Through" Features ZaSu Pitts

ENCOURAGED by the wide success won during the past year by ZaSu Pitts, Brentwood in her newest picture to be released through Robertson-Cole has given this clever actress the broadest opportunity for exercise of her peculiar artistic abilities.

"Seeing It Through" is the name of the new production. Claude H. Mitchell both wrote and directed the picture. Miss Pitts is featured as part of an all-star cast which contains a number of notable names. Exhibitors should eagerly welcome a picture in which she is given wider opportunity, in view of her success in "Poor Relations," "The Other Half" and "Better Times," in all of which she gives the screen something new and distinctive.

Harry Woodward plays opposite Miss Pitts in the role of Jim Carrington, the lover. Edwin Stevens plays Bogram and Fannie Midgley plays Mrs. Lawrence. Hughie Mack, the heavyweight comedian, plays the father and Anna Hernandez is the mother. A succession of beautiful California exteriors are used.

Director Mitchell has brought into play many little human incidents which afford Miss Pitts a chance to do the sort of work for which she proved herself peculiarly fitted. This is the first screen story which has been especially written to fit the personality of ZaSu Pitts.

Republic Reports Bookings.

Home office acounts show that bookings on the Republic production, "Twelve Ten," starring Marie Doro, are climbing steadily and that it is meeting with approval in all parts of the country.

Some of the more prominent theatres which are among the latest to book this Herbert Brenon picture are the Everett Square of Boston, Keith's Prospect of Brooklyn, the Elite of Sag Harbor, N. Y., the Arena and Arcade of Astoria, N. Y., the Library of Pittsburgh, the Globe of New Haven and the New Theatre of Lexington, Va.

"The Blue Pearl" and "The Amazing Woman" have been booked by the New Theatre at Lexington for early showing, and the Globe of New Haven and the Princess of Baird, Texas, have booked "The Amazing Woman."

"Lone Wolf's Daughter" Break First Run Bookings

J. PARKER READ, JR., has produced another record-breaking picture for Louise Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the Louis Joseph Vance special released through the Hodkinson organization. The first runs of the largest cities have cleared their slates to handle this production without delays. Latest of the first run houses to sign for this picture are Talbot's America Theatre, Denver; The Finkelstein & Ruben first and subsequent runs in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth; Charles H. Williams' strand in Providence; the Colonial Theatre, Seattle; the Savoy, Wilmington, Del.; the Poli houses in Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa; the Comerford chain of theatres in Central Pennsylvania; the Hill, Newark, N. J.; the Liberty, Colorado Springs, Col.; the Starland, Anderson, Ind.; the American, Terre Haute, Ind.; the Washington, Richmond, Ind.; the Jackson, Lebanon, Pa.; the Hippodrome, Gloversville, N. Y.; the Strand, Oneonta, N. Y.; the Lyric, Lincoln, Nebr.; the Strand, Nashville, Tenn.; the Opera House, New Brunswick, N. J.; the Apollo, Peoria, Ill.; the Opera House, Jamestown, N. Y.; the Dome, Newcastle, Pa.; the Fox, Aurora, Ill.

In the Chicago territory alone the picture had booked for seventy-five per cent. of its territorial quota within four weeks.

Famous Players Canadian Company May Be Capitalized at $15,000,000

A STATEMENT subsequent to the announcement from Montreal, Quebec, regarding the organization of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, indicates that the capital of the new company will be $15,000,000 and that the first offering to the public will consist of $4,000,000 worth of first preferred stock. This will be listed on the Montreal stock exchange.

The new Famous Players company is absorbing control of the twenty moving picture theatres which were formerly under the direction of the Paramount Theatres, Ltd. Twenty-two more theatres wil be erected or purchased. The company will have seven theatres in Toronto alone. By the spring of 1921 it is expected that the combined seating capacity of all theatres owned or controlled by the company and in actual operation will be 45,000.

Some Directors Known.

The entire list of directors has not yet been made public, but the names of a number of prominent Canadians have been mentioned as among those who will hold office in the directorate. These include Lord Beaverbrook, who has been residing in London for a number of years and who took rather a prominent part in Canadian affairs in England during the war. Not long ago the news was cabled from London that Lord Beaverbrook had acquired a large interest in moving pictures in Great Britain.

Others mentioned include Sir Herbert Holt, W. G. Ross, a prominent Montreal financier; J. P. Bickell, a wealthy citizen of Toronto; W. T. Killem, J. B. Tudhope, a well-known carriage and automobile manufacturer of Orillia, Ontario, and W. J. Sheppard of Toronto. The president of the company is Adolph Zukor, of New York, who is also president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the managing director is N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, who has been managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., Paramount Theatres, Ltd., and subsidiary interests.

Linked to Interests in England?

Announcement has been made that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has made a large cash investment in the new Canadian company and has extended exclusive first run privileges in Canada to the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. It is also stated, however, that the majority of directors will be Canadians and the bulk of the securities and control of the enterprise will be in Canadian hands.

It has been suggested that "it is more than a coincidence" that Lord Beaverbrook recently secured large motion picture interests in Great Britain, and it is hinted that the Canadian development will be linked with the extensive transactions in Great Britain so that Famous Players' interestss in the British Empire wil probably become practically one organization. Lord Beaverbrook was president of the Royal Securities Corporation of Montreal for a number of years and it was this corporation which played a prominent part in the negotiations which led to the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Full Cast Is Announced for "Woman God Sent"

FIRST announcement of the cast supporting Zena Keefe in "The Woman God Sent," a story by Sophie Irene Loeb, which is nearing completion at Fort Lee and Bronx studios, is made by Myron Selznick. Miss Keefe's leading man is Joe King.

The story starts with a prologue in which Miss Keefe does not appear. In the prologue are Barbara Gilroy, John H. Wade, J. F. Walsh, Fannie Vogin, Ray Hewitt, Helen Healy, Henry Bartley and Thomas O'Dennell.

In the main picture besides Miss Keefe and Joe King, are Warren Cook, William Fredericks, William Gudgson, Louise Powell, William Magner, Russell Hewitt, Duncan Penwarden and John H. Wade.

The story was directed and adapted by Larry Trimble and contains one of the longest casts that has appeared in a picture for sometime. It is scheduled for February release through Select.

Visit and Study Frisco Theatres, Felix Feist Advises Exhibitors

FELIX F. FEIST, vice-president and general sales manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left San Francisco twenty-four hours ahead of the time he had contemplated, January 29, having been called to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City for an important business conference with F. J. Godsol, chairman of the board of directors of the Goldwyn company.

This has broken up Mr. Feist's itinerary. He expected to return to San Francisco when he had finished his business in Los Angeles and at the studios. He probably will go to Seattle after returning to San Francisco, he said, but this point has not been definitely decided.

The Goldwyn official had a pleasant and busy three days in San Francisco. He was much impressed with the theatre activity so much in evidence there, and predicted a big motion picture future for the city. Mr. Feist visited a number of houses, the small neighborhood houses as well as the first run and larger district houses.

Frisco Theatres Worth Studying.

After visiting and inspecting the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, owned and operated by Kahn & Greenfield, and the Coliseum, which is under the management of Samuel Levin, the Goldwyn vice-president said:

"Theatre managers and owners from all parts of the United States could very well afford to journey to San Francisco just to look over this city's district houses. I have visited all the big cities and no place in the United States have I found subsequent run theatres of such magnificence, modernity and comfort as the district houses in San Francisco.

"My inspection of these houses was not confined to the lobbies, the foyers and the main parts of the theatres. I went over each of them thoroughly. The Coliseum is one of the most beautiful suburban houses I have ever seen. The projection room of the New Fillmore proved a revelation to me—in few places in the United States have I seen its equal—and the New Mission I found to be up-to-date in every particular and far ahead of some of the first run houses in the biggest cities."

Among the exhibitors whom Mr. Feist met were Eugene Roth, managing director of the California Theatre; George M. Mann, manager of the Rialto; Fred Dahnken, president of the T. & D. Circuit, and Al Crook, also of that organization; Louis Greenfield, of Kahn & Greenfield; Samuel Levin, of the Coliseum; James Beatty, owner of the Liberty theatres in San Jose and Fresno; C. W. Midgley, manager of the American Theatre, Oakland, and Al Moore, manager of the U. C. Theatre, Berkeley.

NOT at all to be outdone by the Capitols, Rialtos, Circles and Roosevelts all over the country, the Rialto Theatre, Louisville, Ky., is soon due to swing the center of discussion from above to below the Mason-Dixon line.

The Louisville Rialto will have a seating capacity of 3,200, with 1,800 seats on the ground floor and 1,400 in the balcony. It will be erected on a plot 160 by 200 feet and will be patterned after the New York Capitol.

The total cost of the theatre, it is estimated, will be $500,000. One of its features will be a foyer 75 feet in depth and 35 feet in width. Music will be supplied by an orchestra of forty pieces.

Building operations will commence immediately and it is planned to open the Rialto October 1. As soon as this theatre is completed the Majestic in Louisville will be enlarged. Additional ground has been purchased and the seating capacity will be increased from 1,100 to 2,800.

Louis J. Dittmar, president of Artcolor Pictures Company, New York, is vice-president and managing director of the Majestic and will fill similar offices with the Rialto.

F. I. L. M. Club Frolics.

The New York F. I. L. M. Club had its annual dinner dance on Saturday, January 31, at Reisenweber's Restaurant, about 100 couples attending. It was hailed as the most enjoyable social affair ever staged by the club, and the abscence of artificial exhilaration did not detract in any way from the merriment. Singers and dancers kept the guests in a happy frame of mind.

The feature of the evening was a program of songs and dances given by Bert Sanford, Joseph Kline, I. J. Schmertz and William E. Raynor. There were favors for the women. The committee in charge was composed of Chairman Murray Beier, L. L. Barent, J. Bellman, Frank Gersten, William E. Raynor and Henry Siegel.

"Silent Avenger" to Be Next Duncan Serial Title

"THE Silent Avenger" has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the title of William Duncan's new $1,000,000 super-serial. Mr. Duncan appears as Phil Read, unjustly sent to prison, who is believed to have been killed in making his escape. The story deals with his successful attempts to prove his innocence and to punish those guilty of depriving him of his liberty. Mr. Duncan is now well into the fourth episode at Vitagraph's West Coast studio and other points in California and those already filmed will be cut and assembled in ample time to be released in April.

"The Silent Avenger" is the first of a series of six serials which Mr. Duncan will make for Vitagraph during the next three years under his new contract.

Vitagraph plans to make all of its serials at the West Coast studios, which have been recently greatly increased in capacity, not alone in the construction of new and additional buildings, but in the acquisition of more land. New buildings will also be erected on the newly acquired land.

Edith Johnson, who has been the heroine in several of Mr. Duncan's serials, is again his leading woman and the "heavies" are played by Jack Richardson and Virginia Nightingale.

Magician Praises Houdini Film.

Professor Harry Kellar, one of the world's most famous magicians, has professed unbounded admiration for the mysterious feats accomplished by Houdini in his next Paramount Artcraft picture, "Terror Island." In a letter commending Houdini's work, Professor Kellar says:

"This picture is full of melodramatic thrills, wonderful escapes and hair-raising episodes, and any one of the following would be a feature for one play: the automobile and racing scene, Houdini's marvelous under-water swimming, the nerve-racking fire scene where Houdini escapes after being chained and handcuffed, his escape from the nailed-up packing case thrown into the sea and his fight under the water with the diver.

Vitagraph Has Four Big Pictures Awaiting Release

VITAGRAPH now has four features ready for release, each with a different star. These are Earle Williams in "The Fortune Hunter," Alice Joyce in "The Sporting Duchess," Corinne Griffith in "Deadline at Eleven" and Harry Morey in "The Flaming Clue." They will be released in that order within the next few weeks.

"The Fortune Hunter" is a screen version of the comedy by Winchell Smith, in which John Barrymore kept Broadway laughing for more than two years. Jean Paige was Mr. Williams' leading woman and Tom Terriss directed the picture.

"The Sporting Duchess," with Alice Joyce as the Duchess of Desborough, is one of Vitagraph's most ambitious efforts. It is based on the Drury Lane spectacular melodrama of the same name in which Rose Coghland starred with great success a score of years ago.

"Deadline at Eleven" is a newspaper play by Ruth Byers, a newspaper woman. It affords Corinne Griffith what is for her a new type of character—a newspaper reporter; a real reporter, who goes into the slums and police courts. George Fawcett directs the picture.

"The Flaming Clue" is a detective story with Harry Morey as the hero detective. It was written by Frederic Van Rensselaer Day. It is a new kind of role for Mr. Morey. Edwin Hollywood directed the picture.

Popular Curwood Novel Being Made into Big Production by Vitagraph

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD'S popular novel of recent publication, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is being filmed at present by a special cast of motion picture players who are fighting their way over blizzard-swept ridges of the Rockies. Vitagraph announces that when this big special is completed it will cause a sensation in film circles.

Story of Great North.

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is complete within itself, but it introduces many of the same type of characters brought to life in previous stories of the great North Country by James Oliver Curwood, with his depth of Northland facts and his wizardry of words. These latter, however, are distinct from those appearing in the special "Back to God's Country," recently released, and "The River's End," a special Marshall Neilan production now on the eve of release.

Filmed in Blizzard.

One of the most successful specials ever released by Vitagraph was "God's Country and the Woman," from the pen of Curwood, but it is predicted that "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" will far overshadow even this classic of the snows. James Oliver Curwood might have had in mind the two stars selected by Vitagraph when he created the two principal characters of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," and if Director David Smith had ordered the weather he could not have had a better blizzard than he reported as raging a few miles out from Truckee, just a few days ago, when the filming of the big production was finally started.

Pauline Starke Has Title Role.

The casting and general preparations for the filming expedition consumed weeks, and the company set out from Hollywood for Truckee upon the receipt of news that weather conditions among the mountain peaks were just right. It is believed that "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" will be a literal record of the courage of this special camera clan who are braving an unbroken wilderness with the bravery of "forty-niners." The company had to snowshoe for many miles beyond the end of regular paths and roads.

The title role will be taken by Pauline Starke, who appeared in the Clara Kimball Young production, "Eyes of Youth," and who played the female lead in the Allan Dwan special production, "Soldiers of Fortune." She recently completed her work as leading woman for Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." She had the leading female role in Maurice Tourneur's special "The Life Line." Previously, she was a star in her own right for Triangle. Niles Welch is too well known to require any introduction. He has played leading male roles in a number of big special productions.

One of the biggest "punch" scenes will be an actual fight between two enraged grizzly bears; another is the gradual taming of an outlaw wolf-dog.

Two Realart Managers Recover from Illness

RALPH B. QUIVE, who left San Francisco last week to take charge of the Detroit office of Realart, has been unable to assume his new duties because of sickness. Both he and Mrs. Quive have been confined to bed, under the care of a physician, since their arrival in the Michigan city. A telegram just received from Mr. Quive states that he is slowly recovering and that he hopes to be out within a few days. His illness has delayed the departure for Omaha of C. G. Kingsley, who has been Realart manager at Detroit.

W. E. Wilkinson of Buffalo has been very seriously ill for several days from the "flu." In a letter to J. S. Woody, Realart general manager, dictated from his sick bed, Mr. Wilkinson says, "I look like an India famine-victim, but am beginning to feel first-rate."

J. S. Ragland, general sales manager for Realart, now in the Middle West on a business trip, is reported ill at a hotel in Chicago. While the sickness has seriously interfered with Mr. Ragland's itinerary, it is understood that his condition is not critical.

Famous Traveler to Comb Far East for Colorful Pictograph Material

E. ALEXANDER POWELL, famous as a traveler, war correspondent and the author of a number of books that are a permanent contribution to the literature of travel and of the war, has started on what promises to be a momentous tour in the interest of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph and other releases of the Goldwyn-Bray organization. Mr. Powell and his cameraman, E. L. Hawkinson, recognized as a foremost photographic expert, will visit Japan, the Island of Formosa, China, India and other places in the Far East to secure pictures to be released by Goldwyn. Most of the localities on Mr. Powell's itinerary have never been visited by a photographic expedition.

This trip is in accord with the policy of the recently allied Goldwyn-Bray companies to send the most experienced men available to far-away corners of the world where interesting and instructive films may be secured. They will make an important addition to the service supplied theatres and also will be a valuable contribution to the library of films being compiled for schools and other educational institutions. It is expected that the expedition will be of six months' duration, during which approximately eighty 1,000-foot reels of film will be exposed.

Japan and China First.

The first pictures will be secured in the neighborhood of Yokohama. Tokio and Pekin will next be visited. The Great Wall of China, Kalgan, Khadsin and the Gobi Deserts will provide material for the camera. The little known French possessions of Annam, Cochin China and Cambodia are included in the itinerary. The court of the King of Cambodia is particularly celebrated for the gorgeousness of its costumes and for its dancing girl.s

Other extraordinary scenes will be taken at Bangkok, capital of Siam. The strange customs and costumes of the Siamese court will be brought to the screen. It is here that the stables of the royal white elephants are located. An automobile will carry the travelers through the jungles of the Malay Peninsula, habitat of the Malay buffalo, the bird of paradise and the giant python. During the river trip from Rangoon to Mandalay there will be an opportunity to photograph scenes illustrating Kipling's "On the Road to Mandalay."

To Film Many Festivals.

Pictures rich in color and human interest will be available in March, when the festival of the Coming of Buddha is recognized by great pilgrimages to Buddha's Footprint on Adam's Peak and to the Sacred Bo-Tree at Ammadhepura.' Also in the early spring the Kings of Kandy hold their annual elephant hunts, when hundreds of elephants are driven into huge stockades. Then, at Puri there is the great festival of Juggernath.

A series of pictures of the more spectacular examples of Indian magic will be secured at the monastaries of Sikkim, the seat of Indian mysticism and magic. Tiger hunting in the jungle also will be photographed. Benares, a Mecca for pilgrims, is the home of the so-called "holy-men," who lie on beds of sharpened spikes, hold their limbs in fire and live for years on the top of pillars.

At Jaipur, the "Pink City," the central square is a pit filled with man-eating tigers. The Maharajah entertains his distinguished guests with elephant fights, two elephants being turned loose in a great arena where they fight to the death. Mr. Powell counts on securing some sensational screen material here.

The deserted city of Fatehpur-Siki will be visited, also Simla, the summer capital and the residence of the Viceroy. Pictures illustrating the localities made famous in Kipling's "Plain Tales From the Hills" are to be taken.

Macgowan Affiliates With Bernay's Publicity Bureau

MOVING picture concerns feeling the need for new angles in their publicity and new life in their promotion work generally, will be interested to hear that Kenneth Macgowan has associated himself with Edward L. Bernay's Publicity Bureau, to take special charge of the motion picture publicity and promotion for that organization. The combined records of the two men who have thus joined forces are such as to inspire confidence in their ability to do effective local and national motion picture promotion work.

Edward L. Bernays, who until the war was in charge of the publicity for a nationally known musical bureau, has handled some of the largest theatrical and moving picture campaigns in the country. During the war he was chief of the export section of the Committee on Public Information, and attended the Peace Conference in Paris in that capacity. Since the war he has specialized more particularly in political and commercial work.

Kenneth Macgowan, now dramatic critic of the New York Globe, is a newspaper man of wide experience, who has specialized in motion picture publicity for the past three years. As publicity director and later as advertising director of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation he became well known in the trade.

Prominent Writer Praises Hayakawa's "The Tong Man"

CLYDE C. WESTOVER, a well-known writer, comes to the front and loudly applauds the work of Sessue Hayakawa in "The Tong Man," a Robertson-Cole release which has been the hit of the first-run houses. The author declares the production to be one of the most interesting pictures of the year.

Several weeks ago Chinese Six Companies of San Francisco tried to hold up the showing on the Pacific Coast, claiming that the picture misrepresented the work of the Chinese colony in this country.

As soon as Mr. Westover learned of this fight, he wired for full particulars and received a copy of the brief held by the Chinese against this picture. After reading over their grievances he decided that the Chinese were misrepresenting the picture and declared that the scene filmed were patterned after real Chinese life, and that the inspiring theme of the story was based upon facts and not upon fiction.

Charles Richman Returns to Screen in "Half an Hour"

CHARLES RICHMAN will be welcomed back to the screen after an absence of over a year, in Sir James M. Barrie's play, "Half an Hour," in which he will play opposite Dorothy Dalton, Paramount Artcraft star. The direction of this play is in the hands of Harley Knoles and the adaptation for the screen was made by Clara Beranger.

Previous to Mr. Richman's absence he was engaged in the production of propaganda pictures, and for this purpose he organized the Charles Richman Pictures Corporation. His work with this corporation did not stop with the organizing, however, as he wrote the stories, starred in them and supervised their direction. The first picture to be made was titled "Over There," a recruiting picture directed by James Kirkwood. Another picture was "Everybody's Business," directed by Searle Dawley, and was a picture dealing with the problem of the returned soldier.

Charles Richman has been associated with such prominent producers as James A. Hearn, Augustin Daly, David Belasco and Daniel Frohman. For the past five years he has been starring in motion pictures under the best directors.

George King Here from England.

George King, representing Sir Oswold Stoll's picture interest, is in New York for another business visit. Mr. King was here soon after the armistice was signed and remained a fortnight looking over the field.

RANDALL

New Comedy Company Organized.

Anticipating the welcome coming to Jack L. and Sam L. Warner, when the trade has been acquainted with the news that Monty Banks, former Mack Sennett, then Vitagraph comedian, has signed a contract with them to appear in a new brand of comedies, probably inspired the new trade name, Welcome Comedies. Mr. Banks will start working with his new company about March 1 and will be seen regularly thereafter in two-reel feature comedies.

John Stahl Is to Direct Mildred Harris Chaplin

JOHN M. STAHL, one of the best known directors of the eastern studios, has been brought to California by Louis B. Mayer to direct Mildred Harris Chaplin in her next big First National attraction.

After fourteen years as an actor on the legitimate stage, Stahl entered the movies in their pioneer days. After two years of screen acting, he became a director and won immediate recognition for his artistic ability. He directed one of the first big features to hit Broadway, "The Boy and the Law." Some of his more recent pictures are "Wives of Men," "Her Code of Honor," "The Woman Under Oath," "Greater than Love," "Women Men Forget" and the all-star production, "Suspicion."

Mr. Stahl will have as his assistant director Harry Hagenah, who has been co-director in the filming of thirty-five of his own scenarios. For five years Hagenah has been engaged in motion picture work in the capacity of author, assistant director, and co-director. He has done considerable acting also, having appeared in Lasky pictures starring Fannie Ward and Geraldine Farrar.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that Universal already has a large area of floor space for stages and studios to accommodate its many activities at Universal City, continual additions are being made to its producing facilities.

When Carl Laemmle visited the plant recently he laid out such an elaborate program of productions for the coming year that the technical department decided that it would require additional floor space to house the many new companies that will soon be engaged in making features. A force of mechanics was at once put to work to erect an additional light studio measuring 150 by 400 feet and capable of accommodating an average of twelve settings.

New Features Under Way.

Three new feature productions have been started at Universal City this week. These are "The Girl in the Mirror," Philip Hurn's adaptation of the novel by Elizabeth Jordan, starring Frank Mayo under direction of Jack Ford; "Luck," a drama of the great West, written by John Frederick and starring Harry Carey under direction of Lyn Reynolds, and "Her Five Foot Highness," a comedy-drama directed by Harry Franklin and featuring Edith Roberts.

Maurice Maeterlinck, Belgian Poet, to Write Annual Story for Goldwyn

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, the Belgian poet, novelist, essayist and playwright, has signed a contract to write one original story a year for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The author of "The Bluebird" and its sequel, "The Betrothal," who came to America on a lecture tour, has never before been personally associated with the actual production of motion pictures. In the arrangement made between the poet and the Goldwyn organization, M. Maeterlinck will write one story a year, and will co-operate with the studio staff in the presentation of his work.

M. Maeterlinck will leave for the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., within a few days to learn the technic of photoplay production. The author will travel in a private car furnished by the Goldwyn corporation and will stop at various cities en route to tell of his venture into a field of authorship new to him.

Maurice Maeterlinck

Who has signed to write one original story a year for Goldwyn.

M. Maeterlinck's Statement.

Although M. Maeterlinck has never written directly for the screen, he has always entertained definite opinions about its possibilities as a medium for the wide diffusion of ideals of beauty and of standards of life. Shortly after signing his contract with the Goldwyn company, M. Maeterlinck gave out the following statement:

"It seems to me that America does not give the motion picture the artistic importance it merits. People seem to consider it an inferior type of art form. In my opinion, however, its potentialities are unfathomable, for it can teach in terms of beauty and of ideals in a manner not to be found in any other medium of expression.

"I feel myself fortunate in being allied with so great a motion picture concern as Goldwyn, an institution that shares these ideals and is bending its efforts to elevate the artistic level of the motion picture. I am happy to find an organization willing to extend the means of initiating myself into the technic of this new art. Under its auspices, I am undertaking this trip to California."

Can Now Teach Millions.

Although in all his work he has made his message to the man in the street clear, M. Maeterlinck believes that through the pictorial power of the photoplay he will be able to tell of his ideals of life to millions who have heretofore known him only as a name. In fact, he has been considered more or less as a writer who appealed only to those of deep learning and rare spiritual power. And so, almost as an answer to the implied charge, Mr. Maeterlinck intends to show that a story may be exquisitely beautiful and at the same time stirringly real.

Mary Anderson to Appear in New Film for Pioneer

MARY ANDERSON is the latest addition to the constellation of Pioneer stars. She will appear in a comedy drama which is just being finished, and will be known as "Bubbles."

In the making of this picture a large sum was expended to secure novelties which are said to have never before been attempted.

Miss Anderson plays the role of a girl who forsakes the garb of her sex and dons the attire of a boy. In order to prove her mettle she becomes the central figure of a rapid series of ludicrous situations. At last, however, Cupid steps in and puts an end to the show.

The picture was made by the Super Art, Inc., and was adapted from the story of the same name by J. Basil Kreider. Mary Anderson is supported by Jack Connolly, Bert Woodruff, Adelaide Elliott and a carefully selected cast of players.

National Adds Subject to February Releases

FOLLOWING the announcement last week that Republic Distributing Corporation would release in February "Mothers of Men," featuring Claire Whitney; "The Girl of the Sea," a Williamson production, and "The One Way Trail," with Edythe Sterling, it was made known this week that another feature has been added for that month. The latest subject to be released through Republic in February is "The Gift Supreme," with a cast of well-known players, including Melbourne MacDowell, Seena Owen, Bernard Durning and others.

With Edythe Sterling in "The One Way Trail," also released in February, are Gordon Sackville, Jack Connelly, J. Webster Dill and A. Hollingsworth. Leon T. Osborne presents Miss Sterling in this feature, the story and picturization of which were done by Charles Mortimer Peck. The direction is by Fred Kelsey, with William Beckaway at the camera. R. C. Currier edited it for the screen.

T. Roy Barnes.

Jewel Film Heads Big "U" Schedule for February 16

A JEWEL picture tops the list of Universal releases for the week of February 16. This picture, "The Madonna of the Slums," is the tenth of the Stage Women's War Relief Series, and Holbrook Blinn and Jeanne Eagles are the stage stars who are featured.

Two comedies, a Lyons and Moran one-reeler, "Old Clothes for New," and a two-reel picture, "The Bull Thrower," in which Edna Gregory, Phil Dunham and Billy Engel exchange compliments, are the laugh numbers on the program.

Elmo Lincoln appears in the second episode of the serial "Elmo the Fearless." This chapter of this weekly release is titled "The Racing Death."

"The Dungeon of Despair" is the eighth episode of "The Lion Man," in which Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin are featured.

A western, "A Sagebrush Gentleman," a vehicle for Bob Burns and Charlotte Merriam, is the only other two-reel offering for the week.

The remainder of the list of releases consists of the Hearst, Universal Current Events, New Screen Magazine and International news reels.

United Lists "The Hick" as a February 29 Release

FEBRUARY 29 is the date set by President J. A. Berst, of United, for the release of "The Hick," a recreated Triangle play in which Charles Ray plays the leading role.

"The Hick" presents the star in the sort of role that he has made a classic on the screen—that of a country boob who goes to college and runs into all sorts of trying circumstances. Mr. Ray's leading woman in this production is Bessie Barriscale, while the supporting cast includes Mabel Johnson, W. Burgermaster and Fanny Midgely.

The photoplay has been adapted from "Plain Jane" by C. Gardner Sullivan. The direction is handled by Charles Miller and the picture is a Thomas H. Ince production.

A SERIAL with all the dramatic interest, tasteful setting and production detail of a five-reel feature is promised to exhibitors by Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Daredevil Jack," in which Jack Dempsey, the world's champion heavyweight pugilist, is starred and which will be released on February 15th.

"Daredevil Jack" is a Brunton production, made at the Brunton Studio in Los Angeles under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton himself. The story was written especially for Dempsey by Frederic Chapin of the Pathe scenario department, and Harry O. Hoyt. H. S. Van Dyke is the director, and Jack Cunningham wrote the scenario.

Following out its policy of helping create an advance patronage for all theatres showing its serial, Pathe has launched a national advertising campaign.

In addition to this, 1,000 leading newspapers all over the country will carry a series of feature stories on Dempsey's life and activities. These feature stories will be handled by the International News Service, the Newspaper Enterprise Association, the American Press Association and the King Features Syndicate.

The action of the serial starts in an Eastern college town on the seacoast and then shifts to the Western country where the star proves that he is as much at home in the saddle as on the football field, or in the prize ring. It is stated by the authors that there is not one violent death in the entire serial. It is lacking in the blood-and-thunder element and is a straightaway, logical story of action. Many of the incidents are taken directly from the life of Jack Dempsey, and is will show the champion as his friends and relatives know him, not as he is popularly known by prizefight followers.

Republic Announces Principals in Edith Hallor's First Production

THE principals in the cast of "Children of Destiny," which is to be one of the first of a series of twelve Edith Hallor productions being made by Weber Productions for Republic release, were announced this week by Republic Distributing Corporation.

Appearing with Edith Hallor, who has the leading feminine role, or rather the leading dual role, as she has two parts, are William Courtleigh, Arthur Carewe and Elmer Johnson. All of these are well-known players of the calibre so commonly termed all-star in the making of pictures. Their following throughout the country is very large and exhibitors are assured of unusual box office value as a result.

William Courtleigh, who has appeared on the stage for years in addition to his screen activities, is probably one of the best known players in America. He was born at Guelph, Ont., and was educated at St. Louis. His first stage appearance was in "Brother and Sister," under the management of John Dillon, but he did not register a hit until he played with Fanny Davenport in "Las Tosca" and "Cleopatra." A list of his successes would take up a whole page of type.

The scenario for "Children of Destiny," which is being produced in California, is by Edward J. Montague, who has contributed "Out Yonder" and "The Woman Game" to the Selznick list of features.

Grace Davison and Montague Love Star in Film Bought by Republic

AN announcement of importance from the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, contains the information that Republic has purchased one of the big pictures of the year from the J. G. Pictures, Inc., starring Grace Davison and Montague Love, who are supported by Stuart Holmes.

Its working title is "The Convert of Revenge," but it is understood that this is to be changed before its release date. The picture was written and directed by Charles P. Horan, who is responsible for several orginal screen stories, besides having directed several big productions including Mary Miles Minter and other stars.

Now Cutting Picture.

"The Convert of Revenge" is a big city drama and gives Miss Davison and Mr. Love some excellent opportunities. The star is best known for her work in Tolstoi's "Atonement," in which she played the lead, supported by Conway Tearle; "The Hidden Code" and "Wives of Men." Miss Davison is a society girl who found a place on the screen and proceeded to make good. Mr. Love starred for the World and other companies in some of their biggest productions. Stuart Holmes has numerous important roles to his credit.

The picture is now being cut by Mr. Horan and its release date will soon be announced by Republic.

Many newspapers are now using criticisms of photoplays the day after they are first seen at your theatre. Reviews written by Moving Picture World reviewers may be cut out or copied and handed to your local newspaper. They are written by qualified reviewers and deal with salient points in both story and production.

Louise Glaum's Next Starring Role Is Victorien Sardou's "Theodora"

J. PARKER READ, JR., manager and director of Louise Glaum, has arranged with A. Lincoln and Thomas R. Hart, owners of the rights of the plays by Victorien Sardou, for screen rights to the classic drama "Theodora," considered to be the best play in the Sardou library, as a vehicle for the next Louise Glaum production.

J. Parker Read was influenced in choosing Sardou's great play because he regards the character of Theodora, the historical siren, as eminently fitted to Louise Glaum's powers of delineation, and he thinks the play will give her the opportunity of creating one of the best and most striking film characterizations of her career.

Preparations are being made to produce "Theodora" on a lavish scale. The story abounds in oportunities for gorgeous costuming and big stage settings. The pagan splendor of the courts of Rome, the great feasts and assemblies of the nobles of the court will be reproduced in detail. Raymond Bartlett, who is now in London, will go from there to Italy as a representative of J. Parker Read to gather data for the scenic atmosphere of the story.

Six Months' Work.

A. Lincoln Hart, who produced "Theodora" on the American stage, will be consulted in the matter of costuming and as to the details of the Justinian period, at which time the incidents around which the story was woven took place. According to Mr. Read, no time or expense will be spared to make the film a striking and spectacular production of the best type, and one that will be as much of a classic to the screen as it was to the regular stage when it was presented by Sarah Bernhardt with Lou Tellegen in the part of Andreas, lover to Theodora.

It is expected that six months will be required to finish the production. The cast is now being selected and work will begin as soon as Miss Glaum has finished with "Love Madness," her current production.

Distribution by Republic to Aid Community Motion Picture Bureau

A STATEMENT by Republic Distributing Offices lays stress upon the fact that the joining of the forces of the Republic Distributing Corporation and the Community Motion Picture Bureau insures a facility of service of distribution for the non-theatrical public that it has never had before.

The bureau was formed some time ago for the purpose of distributing motion pictures in colleges, schools, churches, lodges, etc., and its growth has been rapid.

The more the proposed arrangement between the Republic organization, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch is president, is studied, the more the peculiar significance of the arrangement is evident. Mr. Selznick and Mr. Busch have always been in sympathy with the plans and purposes of the C. M. P. B. activities.

Concentrating Energies.

The increase of the activity in the non-theatrical field and the feeling which exists between the Republic and the bureau suggested the arrangement which will aid the bureau in carrying out its growing work.

That the principal of selection is the basis of the bureau's work is recognized by the Republic organization, and it never has questioned that right or suggested a change in that policy. It is going to, however, place the physical resources it has at the disposition of the bureau so that the entire energy of the bureau may from now on be concentrated on the selective service part of the work.

Lois Wilson Has Charming Role in New Robertson-Cole Special

WHEN Julian Johnson, the writer and film critic, conceived the idea of "Who's Your Servant?" the film drama to be released as a Robertson-Cole Special, he had in mind the production of a picture which would live long in the memory of the exhibitor as a dollar and cent proposition and a theme that would prove interesting and instructive. That he has accomplished his purpose is attested by the criticisms of those who have had a preview of the picture.

After he had written his plot and completed details which should prove a boomerang for the exhibitor, the producer set about to secure a star capable of displaying for the screen the leading feminine role of "Who's Your Servant?" It was decided that pretty Lois Wilson, the girl who gave up teaching for the silver sheet, was just the one to put over the part in dramatic fashion. So tense are the scenes of this production of a hundred exploitation possibilities, that the producer had to favor a star whose work was in keeping with the role assigned her.

Has an All-Star Cast.

Miss Wilson has a part in "Who's Your Servant?" which should boost her stock to the sky. Fresh from her success in the Paramount Artcraft release, "Too Much Johnson," this rising young star modestly declares that her part in "Who's Your Servant?" is the best she has ever portrayed.

This film brings home the advantage which a certain plotting servant has over his trusting master and shows the lengths to which the servant, bent on accomplishing an illegal end at any cost, will go.

New York Houses Double Runs on Lloyd Comedies

THE drawing power of the new series of two reel $100,000 Harold Lloyd comedies, distributed by Pathe, has been more than proved in New York City, judging by the number of exhibitors who have doubled or tripled the number of days they originally booked on the multiple reelers.

In the confined territory of the Union Square District (New York City) alone, virtually every theatre is playing the Lloyds. For instance, the New Fourteenth Street Theatre, which originally booked the Lloyd series for a single day run, immediately doubled its time after the showing of "Bumping Into Broadway." The New Fourteenth Street Theatre's opposition, directly across the street, plays the Lloyd's for four days.

In the same territory the Sunshine, Clinton, and New Law Theatres, have doubled their time on the Lloyds.

Build Big Three-Room Set for Juanita Hansen Serial

PRACTICALLY the entire floor space of the George B. Seitz studio has been converted into a three-room set for Juanita Hansen's first Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon," which is being directed by Bertram Millhauser.

In order to construct the set according to the specifications of Mr. Seitz and Mr. Millhauser, the force of studio carpenters had to build a platform five feet high covering the studio floor. On this platform the set was constructed, and three weeks were required for the work. The set includes a large ballroom, a drawing room and a study, all in the Italian Renaissance style. The ballroom is approached by a grand staircase and the walls are hung with costly tapestries.

Because of the size of the set and the expense of its construction, it will be necessary to shoot all the scenes that are laid in it before any other sets are built in the studio. This means that the structure will not be "struck" until the 200 scenes have been photographed.

Shallenberger Praises Hank Manns.

The first three of the series of two-reel comedies starring Hank Mann were screened for W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, upon his arrival at the Hank Mann studios in Los Angeles, and Dr. Shallenberger sent an excellent report on them to headquarters in New York.

Arrow Film Corporation announces that the Canadian rights to this series of twenty-six two-reelers have been sold to Basil Horsfall, managing director of the Horsfall Productions, Ltd., of Montreal, and that there comedies are playing five of the seven leading houses on the main amusement street in Montreal.

Pioneer Film Corporation Opens Exchange in London

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has turned its attention to foreign fields, and has opened an office in London at Chatham House, George street and Hanover Square, W. E.

Lee Ephraim will represent Pioneer in England and the continent, and the first consignment of features are now on their way to London. As soon as the office is running smoothly it is expected that M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, will visit London in order to study the foreign fields at first hand.

The first act of the London office was the signing up of Marie Doro. Whether or not London will be made an exchange centre by the Pioneer will not be decided until Mr. Hoffman returns.

Boom Gives Impetus to Industry in Akron and Theatres Spring Up

AKRON, OHIO, has become one of the biggest boom towns in the United States within the last two years, and is growing faster since the termination of the war than during it. The boom has given such impetus to the motion picture business that theatre builders and equipment men are having trouble keeping up with the fast pace.

This is the situation reported by supply salesmen and film exchange men coming in from Akron to Cleveland every week. A personal investigation of the writer confirms all this. All of the theatres are doing well, and 35 cents admission for a production is no uncommon thing.

At the present time there are about four big theatres nearing completion or well under way, and plans have been drawn for as many more. The new Rialto, near the Goodrich Rubber Company plant, will be the first to open. It will be operated by the Horwitz interests of Cleveland, which also own the Olympia in Cleveland. Then there is the Allen Theatre, which will be operated by local people headed by A. T. Simmons. Another big theatre, which is also called the Rialto, is being erected by the Dietz Lumber Company. It will have vaudeville and pictures, and it is very likely it will bear a different name when completed and opened. However, that seems to be the "working title."

Another combined hotel and theatre building will go up soon in the heart of the business district. The plans are drawn for this and the company incorporated. Besides these there are two or three other neighborhood houses in the process of construction. The big draw-back to progress of theatre construction in Akron is the shortage of labor, and housing conditions are such that it is well nigh impossible to import labor. To even get a room in a hotel there one has to wire in reservations two weeks in advance and then fight for accommodations after arrival.

The motion picture theatres now in operation in Akron number about thirty. The largest has 1,000 seats, and is about twice as large as the next largest. Most of the theatres are between 200 and 400 seats. The houses now building, however, will seat from 1,000 to 2,000.

There is a well-founded rumor that Marcus Loew has his eye on Akron and plans to build a theatre big enough to seat 4,000.

Elkus and Montgomery in Serial.

Frank Montgomery, who appeared with Ethel Barrymore in Metro pictures, also with Lionel Barrymore, has been engaged for a special role in one of the episodes of the Supreme Serial "The Mystery Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline. Edward Elkus is also cast in a prominent role in this serial.

Kane Presides at College Reunion.

Arthur S. Kane paused from the business of nourishing an infant picture business long enough last week to preside at the annual dinner of the Washburn College Club of New York City, of which he is president. The affair was held at Shanley's. In his student days Mr. Kane gained college fame on the football field and it is said that he learned the benefits of perseverance from the rugged American sport.

"The Strongest" to Get World Wide Exploitation

THE Fox company announces the release in February of the one and only drama from the pen of Clemenceau. A print of the production, titled in French, has been sent to Clemenceau for his approval. The jury of executives and exhibitors selected to choose various scenes of the photoplay from several differing sets made have made their final selection, and when the finished product is released it promises to be a screen sensation.

Special advertising material has been issued, and the owners and managers of picture theatres will have the hearty co-operation of all of the branch offices of Fox Film Corporation. This is true not only of the United States, but of all countries because the release of "The Strongest" will have an international flavor.

Special campaigns have been arranged in all the principal cities of the country for the proper exploitation of the picture. The release of "The Strongest" will mark the beginning of the special releases which the Fox Corporation will make during the year. It is in no sense a regular program picture, and in keeping with the policy of the Fox organization it will be specially exploited so that exhibitors all over the world can get their full measure of success from it. Not only in the trade papers, but in the national magazines, on billboards and through specially trained publicity and advertising men attached to the Fox branches throughout the world will pictures like "The Strongest" be advertised. No matter in what town or city in the world an exhibitor may be showing the picture, there is a campaign specially prepared for him that will deal with both the picture and the stars concerned in its making.

REALART has four men on the road making special arrangements for insuring co-operation with the federal government in its plan to obtain recognition by the theatres of Lincoln's Birthday as an occasion for promoting the Americanization movement.

The matter is having the personal attention of J. C. Ragland, Realart's general sales manager, who has left New York to visit branch offices in the central and eastern parts of the country and make certain that all of them are prepared to assist exhibitors promptly in carrying out plans for special exercises during the week of February 12.

Mr. Ragland's itinerary includes Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Atlanta, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. Other Realart offices throughout the country will be advised by the company's special representatives, Melville E. Maxwell, E. S. Flynn and J. E. Hennessy.

Realart's desire, according to J. S. Woody, general manager, is to assist exhibitors in every way posible to make the Americanization campaign a success. Mr. Woody suggests that the entire week of February 8 to 14 be featured as Americanization Week and that there be special exercises each afternoon and evening.

A Practical Program Suggestion.

There should be no difficulty, he believes, in arranging really interesting programs. The music, of course, should comprise compositions exclusively of American authorship. The southern melodies which lately have been so strongly featured in concert singers' repertoires are suggested for use, and with these should be played patriotic songs. Much can be added to the value of the musical program, it is suggested, by having the orchestra leader invite the audience to sing several of the numbers. Emphasis is laid on the fact that the music should include only American numbers that are valuable from a standpoint of patriotism or quality.

With this special music Mr. Woody suggests that there should be provided short addresses by speakers of recognized ability. It is not the opinion of the Realart general manager that it will be worth the trouble involved unless the addresses are short and snappy. Warning also is given against the possible danger of remarks that might be offensive to certain classes of audiences.

Realart Eager to Help.

"Realart is not suggesting pictures to be utilized on the program," says Mr. Woody. "We believe exhibitors who are sufficiently interested to make Americanization Week an event in their theatres are quite competent to select the productions best suited to their plans. As a matter of fact, Realart has only one production which exactly meets Secretary Lane's idea, and this was being exploited on patriotic and Americanization lines several weeks before the Lane appeal was issued.

"Our principal desire is to do all that we can to interest exhibitors in the Lincoln's Birthday and Americanization Week idea. If our managers can be of service to exhibitors by making suggestions or otherwise, we trust they will be freely called upon."

Eastman Company Plans Big Building Operations

THERE seems to be no limit to which the Eastman Kodak Company will extend its building interests in Rochester. Last week a permit for another mammoth reinforced concerete structure was granted the company by Fire Marshall Fennell, a preliminary permit for the excavation having been granted several weeks ago.

The new structure, which will be used as a factory at Kodak Park, is just the beginning of a series of building operations planned by the company for the current year. The ground dimensions of the building are 300 and 411 feet and it will vary in height from 29 to 76 feet.

The total building operations which will be carried out during the ensuing year, according to current report in contracting circles, will amount to several millions of dollars. It is estimated that the cost of this new structure will exceed $595,000.

Realart's "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" Is Ready for Release This Month

"JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR," the second Realart production featuring Mary Miles Minter, will be released in February, according to an announcement just made. All of the advertising accessories have been completed and prints of the picture now are being shipped to branch offices.

The story is based on the book by Grace Miller White and the picture was made under the direction of William Desmond Taylor, who also directed "Anne of Green Gables." Clara Beranger's scenario is said to follow the book very closely, differing principally in the fact that the pro-German society of the original story has been made an organization of Bolsheviki.

"Citizens of the World," the anti-Americans call themselves and much of the action of the story is said to revolve around their activities. An attack on the governor of the state and the raiding of the "Citizens'" meeting place furnish two of the most tensely dramatic moments of the play.

Twelve-Page Press Book.

The love theme is said to be strongly emphasized by the contrast between the two suitors for Judy's hand. One of these is a crude young countryman who not only determines to win Judy but to marry her whether he wins her or not. Some of the situations developing from this man's insistence are among the best of the picture and are said to afford Miss Minter an opportunity for strongly dramatic, and at times emotional, acting.

A twelve-page press book, with a cover printed in two colors, has been provided. Heart interest is suggested as the big seat-selling factor of the production, but considerable emphasis is laid on the desirability of featuring "the Lady of the Roses," who eventually proves to be Judy's mother, and of making tie-ups with florists for co-operative advertising.

Teaser advertising, to be done through the classified columns of newspapers, is advised. The theme of the advertising, as outlined in the press book, is an appeal for a young man who is proof against love. This, of course, leads gradually through a six-day campaign, to an announcement of the showing in a local theatre of "Judy of Rogues' Harbor."

Realart executives express themselves as believing that this latest Minter production will be decidedly the most popular picture she has made. They consider that it has a broader appeal than any previous Minter photoplay owing to the strong love interest and the unusual dramatic situations.

Louis Mayer Plans Early Release of Feature Film, "Inferior Sex"

LOUIS B. MAYER has definitely announced by wire from the West Coast that his first Mildred Harris Chaplin production to be released through First National Exhibitors Circuit will be "The Inferior Sex." The shooting of the production was completed some time ago, but Mr. Mayer was determined that every possible attention be given to the cutting and assembling. Several strenuous weeks were devoted to this process alone. All told, it has required nearly three months to make "The Inferior Sex" and during that time not a single moment has been wasted nor a dollar of expense spared.

To support the dainty little star Mr. Mayer secured featured players well known to motion picture fans. Among them are Milton Sills, Mary Alden, John Steppling, Bertram Grasby and James O. Barrows. The picture was directed by Joseph W. Henabery, who has already attracted attention through his direction of several Douglas Fairbanks pictures and his association with D. W. Griffith in the direction of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance." The scenaro and continuity were prepared by Keene Thompson.

Publicity Shows Results.

Few productions of recent years have aroused greater interest among exhibitors than this First National release of Mrs. Chaplin, because of the extensive publicity and exploitation campaign which Mr. Mayer started several months ago. The outstanding feature of this campaign is a country-wide contest around the question, "Which is the Inferior Sex?" Hundreds of letters daily are being received at Mayer's New York office. Women demand that the female shall not longer be termed "the inferior."

It has been arranged to tie up this contest with the showing of the picture in all the leading theatres of the country, thereby giving it a local atmosphere in each community and affording the exhibitor the full benefit of the campaign.

Mayer Policy Vindicated.

Another reason why "The Inferior Sex" is attracting a great deal of attention is due to the curiosity of exhibitors generally, to learn how effectively the Mayer policy of big star, big play, big director and big cast has been applied in the case of Mildred Harris Chaplin.

A pre-view of the picture on the West Coast before the print left for the East convinced Mr. Mayer as well as others who were afforded a view, that the combination of play, star, director and cast which was assembled in the production, will gain the hearty support of all lovers of the best in motion pictures.

Burston Coming East.

President Louis Burston of Burston Films, Inc., wired the New York Office in the Longacre Building, from the coast where he has just completed his third serial thriller "The Hawk's Trail" that he will soon be on his way to New York.

Mr. Burston is now working on another serial, which is nearing completion. He will probably arrive in New York about the middle of February.

Mrs. Briggs Has Managed Jefferson Seven Years

WOMEN exhibitors are by no means new or novel these days, but still there are a lot of people, including film salesmen, who are not apt to take them as sure things, like exhibitors of "the crankier sex." In Rochester, Mrs. Catherine Briggs has been doing business at the Jefferson Theatre for seven years and film salesmen about six years and eleven months ago decided that Mrs. Briggs acted as if she was in the business to stay. Now she is celebrating her seventh anniversary as the pilot of the Jefferson, and there is no indication that she will retire from the business in which she has been so successful.

The Jefferson is one of the big, substantial neighborhood houses in Rochester. Before Mrs. Briggs took over the house somebody else had taken a crack at managing it, but without much success. After she gathered in the reins things began to go differently. In those days a woman manager was rare enough to be a curiosity, so a lot of people tried the Jefferson just to see how a woman conducted a picture house. No matter what opinions were formed by those who came out of curiosity, they had to admit that Mrs. Briggs had rather fine taste when it came to selecting and arranging a bill of pictures, so they kept on coming.

For seven years the Jefferson has been doing a business of which any man manager might be proud. Even among film salesmen it is admitted that she has a little finer sense of pictures values than most men—that is, picture values judged by the standards of the neighborhood audience to which she caters. The Jefferson is not a small house, and to keep it filled and the cash register jangling is necessary in these days of high prices, when too many vacant seats spell disaster. But every night the Jefferson is filled to capacity and as often as not there is a line at the box office.

Garsson Completing Sales on "Blindness of Youth"

PRACTICALLY all of the territory has been sold on "The Blindness of Youth," is the announcement by Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation.

A great variety of distinct exploitation material has been prepared for the production and the demand for the picture by state right buyers indicates that the compaign now being conducted is proving popular.

A twenty-page press book, containing all possible kinds of publicity and exploitation suggestion, is available for exhibitors booking the production. A wide variety of distinct and attractive lobby display cards also have been prepared, in addition to posters, of unusual attractiveness, including two styles of one sheets, a three sheet, six sheet and twenty-four sheet.

It is further announced that Gail H. McMillin has joined the staff of the Foundation Film Corporation and will continue his work in the production of scenic, educational and industrial pictures.

Gladys Hulette in Hallmark Release.

Gladys Hulette is starring in Frank G. Hall's late release on the Famous Directors' series, "High Speed," released this month through United Picture Producers, Inc. W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager, Hallmark, states that the screen version of Clinton H. Stagg's automobile story is surpassing all previous releases on this series in number and class of bookings.

Kohn Says Trade Papers Are Big Exploitation Aid

SUCCESSFUL exploitation methods are more contagious than the "flu," according to Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, who cites the present profitable vogue of "fashion revues" following the one put on at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, as an illustration.

Even advertisements and single catch lines that have demonstrated their power to appeal to the public will be picked up quickly by exhibitors, Mr. Kohn says. The credit for this he gives to trade journals.

"When I first engaged in the motion picture business," he explains, "exhibitors were dependent almost entirely upon their own resources; now, nothing is news for more than a week. An exhibitor develops an idea Sunday, utilizes it Monday, and by Tuesday an enterprising trade paper correspondent has written a story giving the information to every other exhibitor in the country.

"The thought comes to me in looking over the reports on 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' although it is only one instance in hundreds. When we showed this Emile Chautard picture in New York we invited city detectives to view the production and undertake to solve it without seeing the last reel. They didn't succeed.

What a Toledo Showman Did.

"Then an exhibitor in Pennsylvania held a special showing for the police force, stopping the picture at the end of the fourth reel and offering a prize of $50 for a correct solution. No one claimed the money. Other exhibitors tried similar plans. In some cases it was contended that if the detectives failed they would be held up to ridicule by the newspapers. This difficulty was met by inviting the newspaper men also. There has been a gradual evolution of the plan, until now nearly every exhibitor who shows the production stops it at the end of the fourth reel and asks his patrons to guess the solution.

"A Toledo exhibitor has amplified this idea by putting on what he calls a prologue. Tom Moore did this in Washington, but the Toledo exhibitor introduces the prologue or interlude just before the fifth reel, instead of at the beginning of the play. In some instances the picture is stopped and slides are run, but in almost every case the original idea of inviting guesses as to the solution of the mystery has been adopted in some form.

"Now, how could this have been possible except for the trade journals' policy of co-operation with the exhibitor? The plan of exploitation in New York, Washington and two or three other places has been outlined in the trade journals, with the result that mystery contests have become almost as much a part of 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' as the action of the drama itself."

Fox News Plans Big Developments Now That It Is In Its New Home

WITH the consolidation of all its New York activities under one roof in the new William Fox building in West Fifty-fifth street, Fox News announces that its increased facilities will enable it to provide its patrons with even greater news reels than it has put out since its inception last October. Despite the fact that its offices were scattered, and there were other handicaps that beset a new organization of the size of Fox News, the reel has forged steadily ahead.

In the opinion of William Fox a news reel, like a newspaper, should be conducted as nearly as possible in one large office, because of the need for rapid communication among the men and women who make the product. Therefore, the News now is installed, so far as the directorial, editorial, camera and business branches are concerned, in a large room on the second floor of the new building.

The cutting room and the vaults are on the ground floor below the administration office, and a special projection room has been set aside where the reel will be made up twice a week. In a short time the new laboratory machinery devised for Fox Film Corporation will be in operation and utilized by Fox News. This machinery will speed up the development and printing of film —a gain in time that naturally will be appreciated by those responsible for the make-up of the news reels.

Fire Alarm Installed.

In the editorial offices a fire alarm is being installed so that the Fox News editor will be informed at all times as to fires occurring in the city. Motorcycles are to be provided to enable the cameramen to get about New York and vicinity speedily to "cover" news events of screen value. These motorcycles are to have special carriers attached to take care of the camera and tripod while the cameraman is driving.

Plans also are being made for the construction of a motor truck that will carry with it an emergency development plant. When news events of importance are "shot" close to the "deadline" on make-up days this special motor will bear the cameraman on his assignment and develop his film on the way back so that the negative may be speedily viewed in the projection room.

New Riviera Opens in Milwaukee; Two More Are Planned for Toledo

THE new Riviera Theatre, Lincoln and Fifth avenues, Milwaukee, opened last week with Wallace Reid in "The Lottery Man" and Harold Lloyd in "Bumping Into Broadway." The house seats 1,400 and has a stage arranged for vaudeville and dramatic performances as well as for screen use. It is owned by Joseph Schwartz and Earl Rice and will be managed by the latter, who was formerly manager of the Downer and State theatres in the same city. A ten-piece orchestra will furnish the music.

One feature of the Riviera Theatre will be a modern blast system whereby fresh warmed air will be forced into the auditorium at the rate of 30,000 cubic feet a minute. The auditorium is furnished in old rose, ivory and marble. A women's retiring room is finished in blue.

Two More for Toledo.

The third Community theatre to be built by the Community Amusement Company will be located at the corner of Monroe street and Lawrence avenue, Toledo, it is announced by President A. Horwitz. It will have a seating capacity of 1,400. Work will be started at once. The company plans to erect eight modern motion picture theatres in different sections of Toledo.

St. Clair street, Toledo, will also have another theatre, which will open in April. George E. Dixon, H. G. Heywood and N. B. Voorhees have leased for ten years the property at 337 St. Clair street for the consideration of $75,000. The remodeling will cost $25,000 and the house, which has not yet been named, will seat 600.

The Marlowe Theatre, Jackson, Tenn., reopened on February 8 with a motion picture show, meeting a great local demand for screen entertainment. It will be controlled by the management of the Lyric Theatre, which has been doing a big business.

The Dixie Theatre, Newbern, Tenn., under the management of William J. Houstin, has moved into its new quarters in the Masonic building on West Main street.

Dr. T. A. Sparks has bought the King Theatre, Dierks, Ark., from A. J. King, and has assumed active charge of the playhouse.

Western Capital Backs Special Pictures on Coast

Los Angeles, February 4, 1920.

Moving Picture World.

The Special Pictures Corporation, capitalized for $250,000, was organized in Los Angeles on February 3, with Louis J. Thompson, its president; Ward Lascalle, its director general; Earl Shanks, its business manager, and H. J. Roberts, its sales manager.

The new company is financed through Aronson and Company, the A. Hellman interests and the largest bonding house in the West. President Thompson says the formation of the company marks the first serious move on the part of western capital to enter the field of film production in big way. Marco Hellman, of the Hellman banking institution, the biggest financial concern of the West Coast, is president of Aronson and Company.

The company will specialize in comedy and will begin releasing on March 1. Exchanges will be opened in twenty-six cities. Louis D. Thompson was formerly special representative for Mary Pickford in the United Artists Corporation office, New York.

Canada Conceives Brilliant Idea of Censoring Theatre Advertising

OTTAWA exhibitors received official notification from the new Ontario government on January 26, that an order-in-council had been passed by the provincial authorities which provides for the censorship of all newspaper advertising for moving picture theatres.

The exhibitors were also advised that they would be charged an annual license fee of $10 for the pleasure of having their newspaper spreads passed upon by the new advertising censorship bureau which has been established at Toronto. It was pointed out that copies of newspaper advertisements would have to be mailed to Toronto, 280 miles away, and the approved copy received from the censors before the display could be used in the papers as desired or scheduled.

The official order caused consternation in both moving picture and newspaper circles of the Canadian capital. It was at first believed that the regulation would affect the exchanges far more than it would hinder the exhibitors.

Blame Farmer's Party.

It was also believed that if it was the intention to examine every film advertisement published, the government would surely establish branch censorship offices in the leading city of each district of the province. When it was discovered that all proofs or copy must be approved by the Toronto censor board, the declaration was made that it was the apparent purpose of the Farmers' Party to kill the moving picture business by degrees.

"The new order means that we will be unable to do any newspaper advertising at all," declared one prominent Ottawa exhibitor. "By the time that advertising copy is submitted to Toronto, is examined by the censors and is mailed back to the exhibitor in Ottawa, the purpose for which the advertisement was intended would have passed and probably an entirely new picture would have become the current attraction at the theatre."

Papers and Film Men to Fight.

Immediately after the Ottawa exhibitors received the official advice from the Ontario capital one of the newspaper publishers proceeded to get into touch with all other newspapers of the province with a view to securing concerted action in the matter. Judging by the attitude of the Ottawa newspaper, practically every daily in the province will now use its influence against the powers-that-are-supposed-to-be. The opinion was expressed that, if every newspaper took up a campaign against the Farmers' government and if the exhibitors used the power of the screen along similar lines, the present regime would be short-lived.

Big developments, or a back-down by the government, are expected in the near future.

Felix Feist at Denver Meets Many Exhibitors

DURING his two days' stay in Denver, Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, occupied most of his time visiting theatres and conferring with exhibitors. A number of managers from out of town visited Denver in order to meet Mr. Feist, among others, J. E. Tompkins of the Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs.

Mr. Feist had an interesting interview with A. G. Talbot, managing director of the American Theatre. Mr. Feist said: "It is gratifying to find that Mr. Talbot has the thorough confidence of a large clientele, having never abused the confidence of his patrons. It is therefore not surprising that the American Theatre had 9,040 paid admissions to 'Pinto' on the opening day, Sunday, January 18. This compares favorably with the opening day of 'Mickey,' one year ago, when there were 9,167 paid admissions. Receipts came within $12 of the house's biggest day when 'Broken Blossoms' was shown at advanced prices."

Infused "Pep."

Mr. Feist renewed his acquaintance with Charles Wertz, manager of the Rivoli, Strand, Plaza and Isis Theatres.

One of the most inspiring incidents of the two days was the gathering of the sales and office force at a dinner given by Mr. Feist, who spoke in enthusiastic terms of what may be expected from Goldwyn during the twelve months to come.

That Mr. Feist's forceful personality was responsible for infusing additional "pep" into the local sales force was evidenced by the success of Jules Wolf at Trinidad on Tuesday, January 20. Prior to leaving Denver, Mr. Wolf and Mr. Feist had agreed that it would be difficult to close a satisfactory contract in that city, but Mr. Wolf wired the Denver office on Tuesday: "Secured contract with Strand Theatre here on Moore, Rogers, Kennedy, Pinto and new Ford series. Have assurance that other contracts will follow."

Ascher Arrives in Snowstorm.

E. M. Ascher, personal representative for Mack Sennett Comedies, arrived in New York on February 4 for a short stay. He said he left the "Land of Flowers and Sunshine" for the "Land of Snow and Slush" with the expectation of transacting a little business and then returning on the fastest train available. Mr. Ascher is a Californian.

Grace Miller White Likes Film Version of Her Tale

GRACE MILLER WHITE, author of "Polly of the Storm Country," Mildred Harris Chaplin's second Mayer-made First National attraction, was a visitor at the studio preview of the picture in Los Angeles a few days ago. She was highly pleased with the production and particularly with Mrs. Chaplin's interpretation of her dream-heroine.

"I believe," she said, "that 'Polly of Storm Country' will be my greatest success, and I further believe that Mrs. Chaplin is one of the very best types to interpret the role of Polly. I am positive it will prove such a starring vehicle for her as my 'Tess of the Storm Country' proved for Mary Pickford and 'The Secret of the Storm Country' for Norma Talmadge'."

The production has been cut and titled and is now en route to the East, where prints will be made for early First National release. The picture was directed by Arthur Rosson and photographed by Hal Rosson.

Dean Becomes Director of Photoplay Company

THE United States Photoplay Corporation of Washington, D. C., announces that E. B. Dean, Sr., a well known capitalist of Scranton, Pa., has been elected director and second vice president of the corporation. Mr. Dean has become one of the heaviest stockholders in the corporation, which is producing the film epic "Determination" and others of equal magnitude.

The balance of the personnel of the officers and directors includes Capt. F. F. Stoll, president and acting treasurer, who was general superintendent of free delivery in the Chicago post office for years and is author of "Determination"; Dr. George L. Carder, first vice-president, a prominent surgeon of the Cumberland Valley; C. L. Wakeman, secretary, for six years secretary to James A. Paisley, president of the Valley Camp Coal Company, of Cleveland, and active in the organization of the United States Fuel Administration during the war; H. H. Prentice, director; a prominent chiropractor of Cleveland, and Wm. P. Doing, Jr., director, vice-president and treasurer of the Doing Printing Company, of Washington, D. C.

New Child Labor Bill Introduced.

A new child labor and compulsory education bill for the District of Columbia was introduced in the House by Representative Warren Gard, of Ohio, on behalf of the Consumers' League, under the terms of which exhibitors would be prohibited from employing girls under eighteen years of age in their theatres. Boys between the ages of 16 and 18 years would come under the provisions of the eight-hour law. At the present time, a number of the theatres utilize the services of young women as ushers; all use women as cashiers. If the new bill is adopted by Congress, they would be compelled to make certain that none of their girl employes are under eighteen.

Harry Rice.
Resigns as Universal publicity director; says Chicago is the "village" for him.

New York Mourns But Harry Rice Does Not

THERE is one man in a thousand who cannot "stand" New York. Harry Rice is that person. Years ago Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, left Chicago to come to the Metropolis. He stayed. R. H. Cochrane followed. He too liked the Knickerbocker town and remained there. Phil Cochrane came, and saw, and lingered, and countless numbers have done the same.

When Harry Rice unbuckled his khaki armor of war he settled down to a short stay in Chicago. It was only a short stay however, and then Carl Laemmle spoke—and the words he uttered were such that Rice hopped the Twentieth Century Limited, wife, baggage and all, to answer the summons. The answer to the summons was the directorship of Universal's publicity department.

Now, he is tired of the subway and the moon-rubbing skyscrapers. The western breezes have called him. He has decided the charms of Fifth avenue are nothing to him compared to those of Michigan boulevard. He wants to get back to the "folks" and renew old acquaintances in his adopted home town. So he has kicked the traces and resigned his position.

No amount of urging on the part of Universal officials could break his determination to do this. So, while Chicago will welcome the return of the prodigal p.a., Universal's New York office will mourn his going. It is believed that Joe Mayer, New York district publicity manager, will succeed him as he has done excellent work and Rice has recommended him for the place.

Rice's going is marked by the friendliest feelings on both sides. His reasons for leaving are purely personal and a desire to get back to his favorite city. He has not made any definite plans as yet, but has announced that he intends to remain in the publicity game. His resignation takes effect on February 15.

F. & R. Theatre Chain Books Hodkinson's "Desert Gold"

THE Finkelstein & Ruben chain of theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth has booked for immediate play dates for first runs and subsequent runs Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. For three months while this big exhibitor organization was striving to find open time in their congested schedules, "Desert Gold" has played the other local cities in Minnesota and the Dakotas, while the Hodkinson organization refrained from booking it anywhere close to the Twin Cities. This booking for their three cities by Finkelstein & Ruben gives Mr. Hampton's production a clean sweep record of having been bought in every city in the entire territory.

Another first run house, the Strand, Providence, R. I., long and ably managed by Charles H. Williams, has booked the picture for immediate presentation, which closes the last important New England city that was open on this production; first runs having been played in Boston at the Waldorf, in Hartford at the Strand, in Springfield at the Broadway, in Portland, Me., at the Empire.

IT IS announced by the management of the Douglas Fairbanks productions, through the United Artists Corporation, that reports giving credit to anyone outside of the star and Tom Geraghty, editor of production, as collaborator in the story or screen adaptation of "When the Clouds Roll By," are false.

The story was the original idea of Douglas Fairbanks and the scenario was written by Tom Geraghty. Numerous articles have been published giving Louis Weadock mention as part author and as assistant in the screen preparation.

Weadock, it is declared, was engaged by the Fairbanks organization as an apprentice at a weekly salary, and was present at the studio during the making of the story. His ideas, however, did not come up to the standard required by Fairbanks and before the completion of the production he was removed from all affiliation with the company. He was not placed under a long term contract, as has been announced, and is not affiliated in any capacity with the Douglas Fairbanks organization.

Mastbaum to Aid Lane's Plan.

That the Americanization committee, of which Franklin H. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, is chairman, will receive strong support in its campaign to make better citizens throughout the United States by means of educational propaganda through motion pictures was evinced when Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, with headquarters in Philadelphia, sent a telegram to Secretary Lane, offering to the committee the use of the screen in every theatre under the direction of that company for the display of films and slides on the work of Americanization.

President Mastbaum also wired that his company would have films and slides made and begin the work of aiding this cause at once.

MARCUS LOEW on January 31 completed a thorough inspection of the new million dollar Metro studios at Hollywood. It was Mr. Leow's first view of the immense plant and the survey required the better part of two days. During this time every shop, stage and setting came under the close scrutiny of the head of Loew's, Inc., which recently became co-partner with Metro in an important business merger for their mutual expansion.

On his tour of inspection of the studios Mr. Loew was accompanied by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation; Joseph W. Engel, Metro treasurer; Irving Ackerman and Samuel Harris, of Ackerman and Harris, who are general managers for Loew's vaudeville interests in the West, and C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., holder of the rights to several Jack London stories which Metro will make and distribute, with Mitchell Lewis as the star.

Loew Promises Surprise.

"This looks like the immense industrial plant that it is," was Mr. Loew's comment after he had gone over the studios, figuratively, with a fine-tooth comb. "I had received glowing reports about the Metro studios, but I am frank to say that I had not pictured them as being so splendidly equipped, so extensive nor so modern as I found them to be. My tour of inspection has been a delightful surprise.

"Expansion of Metro activities will be on the largest possible scale; on a scale great enough to astonish the entire industry."

Incidentally, it was made known that Ackerman and Harris are to start work immediately upon the construction of two new theatres in Los Angeles. One of these will be for vaudeville and one for Metro pictures. Both of them will be large and costly houses.

After a series of conferences to be held here between Mr. Loew, Mr. Rowland and other Metro executives, further announcements of the Loew-Metro expansion policy will be made.

Saw Lytell Picture.

Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel made a brief stop-off at Chicago to see a print of "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, shown in the projection room of Metro's Chicago exchange. They were met at the Los Angeles station by William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, and Clifford Butler, general superintendent of the studios.

The party motored out to the studios, to be welcomed by Maxwell Karger, director general. They found it to be a veritable hive of activity, with several productions under way. The stars engaged were Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, May Allison, Alice Lake and Emma Dunn, with an all-star cast staging "The Hope," one of the five great Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Metro.

Canadian Club to View Neilan's "River's End"

WHAT is anticipated to be one of the most auspicious presentations ever given a photoplay is now being arranged for Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," an adaptation by Marion Fairfax of James Oliver Curwood's big seller. In view of the fact that the Neilan picture discloses a tale of the Canadian Northwest and shows the beauties of "God's Country," it is fitting that it will receive its premiere before over 1,000 members of the Canadian Club of New York City.

On Monday evening, February 16, at the grand ball room of the Hotel Biltmore, this film will be shown in private before many well known persons in the civic and social life of the metropolis. The film will be presented in a most elaborate manner with an attractive prelude in which the song, "The River's End," inspired by the picture, will be rendered by a famous singer. A special orchestra has been engaged.

The affair will be formal and a dinner will follow the showing of the picture. Various men famous in national politics are expected to be present, including several persons who will be particularly interested in the theme of the story. The members of the trade press will be invited to the affair to obtain a pre-review of the production.

If other plans do not prevent it, Marshall Neilan will make the trip from California to New York in order to be present, as will James Oliver Curwood, author of the story.

Hall Assisting Leonard.

"Chains of Evidence," co-starring Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell and Anna Lehr, is now assisting in the direction of Frank G. Hall and Ascher Enterprises, Inc.'s, fifteen episode serial production, "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell and starring Benny Leonard with Stuart Holmes, Marie Shotwell, Ruth Dwyer and Mme. Marstini in chief support.

Ethel Clayton Begins on New Play.

Ethel Clayton began work on a new picture that is expected to be a fitting successor to "The Thirteenth Commandment" and "The Young Mrs. Winthrop," two of her latest Paramount Artcraft pictures. The new picture is a screen adaptation of "The Ladder," a short story by Harold Vickers which was published in Snappy Stories. Miss Clayton has just completed "A Lady in Love," under the direction of Walter Edwards, who is taking a well-earned vacation. The new picture will be directed by Tom Forman.

Mabel Normand to Star in "The Slim Princess"

CLOSELY following the announcement that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased "The Slim Princess," the stage success by George Ade and Henry Blossom, comes the news that it is being used as a starring vehicle for Mabel Normand, who recently returned to Goldwyn's Culver City Studios. Miss Normand has started work under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, in the title role made famous on the stage by Elsie Janis.

The cast to support the Goldwyn comedienne has not been completed, but thus far Tully Marshall, Hugh Thompson, Russ Powell and Harry Laramie have been named. The story is rich in opportunity for humorous characterizations in addition to that of the central figure, the young Turkish princess whose problems in life are seriously complicated because she does not fulfil her country's standard of beauty that demands plumpness above all things.

The Ade-Blossom play may be expected to come through on the screen as a combination of farce and comedy against a colorful Oriental background. The script calls for a number of elaborate sets and some scenes of a spectacular nature requiring many players.

Ruth Roland Names Cast for Her Next Pathe Serial

RUTH ROLAND has completed the selection of the cast for her next Pathe serial, "Broadway Bab," work on which is progressing rapidly at the Astra studios in Glendale. The cast contains a number of faces familiar to followers of Miss Roland's Pathe serials.

The leading man is Herbert Heyes, who played the male lead with Miss Roland in her current Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Ruth"; Thomas G. Lingham, who played the role of "the Hound' in "The Adventures of Ruth," is again seen in the heavy role. The juvenile heavy is Jack Rollens; comedy, Fred Burns and William Gillis; character, Gilbert Holmes.

George Marshall is directing, and Al Cawood is chief cameraman, having officiated in the same capacity in Miss Roland's previous serial. Art Director Frank Ormston, of the Lew Cody Company, which is also producing on the Astra lot, has been loaned to Miss Roland for this serial. The story of the serial is by Johnston McCulley and ran in the All Story Magazine. The scenario is by Frances Guihan, supervised by Gilson Willetts, manager of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Film Corporation Moves Into Its New Building; Has Many Features

THE various activities of Fox Film Corporation in and about New York City were completely moved by January 31 to the new Fox building in West Fifty-fifth street. The New York Exchange, however, remains at 130 West Forty-sixth street, where it now occupies the entire tenth floor.

Satisfaction was expressed by the heads of departments over their new quarters, which afford much needed relief from the crowded conditions that prevailed in the old building—the rapidly growing business of the corporation having long ago made the offices in Forty-sixth street too small.

The new building was opened for business without ceremony, Mr. Fox having in mind an elaborate celebration at a later date. Moving in the midst of its most flourishing season, Fox Film Corporation finds it necessary to devote undivided attention to the actual business at hand; therefore, exercises that have been discussed for some time have been postponed until some time in May. At the time of the formal opening, the public will have an opportunity to inspect the building which embodies many new ideas in the production of motion pictures.

TAKE the Capitol Theatre for instance. Reams of advertising copy have been written around it by producers who wanted to get across the fact their films had been booked by this temple of the silent drama.

And of course the new Fox studio will likewise be the mecca of the advertising men of the various companies who have equipped this mammoth plant with everything from window glass for the skylights to roller skates for the office boys.

Nicholas Power Company is especially proud of the fact that ten Cameragraphs have been sold to Fox Film Corporation for use in this $2,500,000 plant, and that the studio will be equipped exclusively with the Power's machines.

Two of the ten Cameragraphs are of the 6B type and will be installed in Mr. Fox's private projection room, where, with the assistance of these machines, he will see his stars entertain as they entertain for millions.

Will C. Smith, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, considers it quite a feather in his organization's cap to be exclusively represented in this production center which stands as the most up-to-date illustration of the phenomenal growth of the industry.

Arrangements Please Directors.

The business officers were the first to make themselves at home in the building, and the various Fox companies now working in the East are being installed as rapidly as the state of the interior work in the various other Fox studios in New York permit.

Directors were enthusiastic in their praise of the arrangements. Twenty companies can act simultaneously on the stage floor on the third story, and the ample supply of dressing rooms, the large carpenter shops, wardrobe room, scene loft and other appurtenances afford every facility for the making of big features.

Besides well-appointed dressing rooms, there are rest rooms for the women and a gymnasium for the men. Similar rooms are provided for the other employes, also a restaurant which furnishes to all workers wholesome food at reasonable prices.

Fox News has been well cared for. There are extensive offices for the administrative branches and splendid darkrooms and quarters for the staff of cameramen daily engaged in filming important news events for the screen.

Laboratory a Feature.

Another feature is the large laboratory that has been already put in operation. This branch boasts the very latest in film devices and will enable the organization to turn out 3,000,000 feet of film a week—having, in addition, several secret processes that will be a revelation to the industry.

Exhibitors have referred with pleasure to the comfort of the projection rooms, which are built along the lines of the best Broadway motion picture theatres. The floors are sloped, the seats are upholstered, and the length of the rooms admits of long shots and consequent big images that display the pictures to the best advantage. Music is played at each showing. In conjunction with the projection rooms are numerous vaults for film storage, large enough to contain the output of Fox Films for generations.

The scenario department, besides having comfortable offices, is equipped with a library of 2,000 volumes, including works of reference and popular novels. The newest works will be constantly added, and there will be at all times a complete supply of periodicals in every language.

To assist all departments in facilitating business, there is a telegraph office in the new building, from which messages can be sent directly, and where they can be received from out of town.

Washburn Working on New Picture.

Bryant Washburn has started work on "The Sins of St. Anthony," a Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Collins, according to word from the Lasky studio at Hollywood. The scenario was written by Elmer Harris and James Cruze is directing. This picture is said to afford Mr. Washburn a role considerably different from those which he has previously appeared in, and is one which suits him exceedingly well.

Bennett Writing for Hank Mann.

Frederick Bennett, author of "The Radium Mystery," "The Lost Express" and several comedies, will co-operate with Hank Mann in writing stories for his series of fun films.

Frank Rembusch States Case of National Body on Advertising

IN contributing further to the "screen advertising" controversy, Frank Rembusch, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., sends to Moving Picture World copy beyond the capacity of our space to admit in full. We condense and quote in part from an article that interested picture showmen can probably get from Mr. Rembusch in full.

Citing the old Japanese proverb "One look is better than a thousand words," Mr. Rembusch states that the screen would be worth a million to any national advertiser who could show one 100 foot reel one week on every screen in the United States. No exhibitor, says Mr. Rembusch, should sign away the exclusive advertising rights to his screen.

He asserts that a group of New York exhibitors are asking exhibitors for these exclusive rights plus the right to censor all industrial pictures. Mr. Rembusch is for "an open market" on the advertising proposition.

National advertisers are willing to use screens, and Mr. Rembusch deplores "direct action" by the individual exhibitor. "They are not a party to the present controversy and should be encouraged," says Mr. Rembusch. "Their sense of appreciation and confidence in the screen equals the same spirit in which they pay millions for billboard advertising."

Concerning Universal's Industrials.

Asserting that the exhibitor should be paid, Mr. Rembusch goes on to speak for his organization as best competent to handle the situation. In part he says:

"In line with the action of the National convention in St. Louis the Natioal officers have been working to find the best solution to cure the abuse of concealed advertising without in any way discouraging the showing of industrial pictures. Mr. Black, National president, laid before Universal the screen rights of the exhibitor and asked that Universal pay the exhibitors a nominal sum for showing these pictures.

"The Universal Film agreed to give their industrial pictures free and pay exhibitors a nominal sum for showing them. We gave no exclusive contract to Universal.

Showmen Free to Act.

"No exhibitor is forced to use Universal pictures. We recommend that all other industrial picture producers give exhibitors the same consideration. We have viewed the Boy Scout picture and recommend that exhibitors use it because it is a very pretty picture, encouraging a very popular movement.

"The National officers thoroughly investigated the contract Mr. Black made with Universal and approved of it. We also investigated the movement of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and disapprove of their plan.

"They ask that all industrial pictures shall pass their committee of New York exhibitors and that exhibitors give this committee exclusive right of their screens and that all pictures pass their censor.

Questions M. P. T. O. Motives.

"We believe that this committee has no right to an exclusive contract for the screens of all exhibitors. Since the national organization does not approve of their action they are attempting to start another National organization and we hope they will not be successful.

"If they are going into the industrial business let them say so, and we will be glad to play all of their good pictures free of rental cost and receive a nominal sum for showing same. The Universal is paying this money to exhibitors whether they are members of the Motion Picture Exhibtors of America or not.

"One National exhibitors organization is sufficient. The National officers have plenty to do to interest the exhibitors in one organization without someone always starting something to keep exhibitors from affiliating and working together in harmony.

Makes Plea for Union.

"The National organization has always worked along broad, altruistic lines. Let us keep it so. No organization can succeed that lays set rules for its members as to how they must run their business.

"Our function is to bring out the truth and give the exhibitor the facts. We have no scheme by which a few exhibitors can make money through the National organization. Our purpose is to work for the best interest of the industry and assist the exhibtior through an exchange of ideas and a process of education.

"This whole controversy started at the National Convention last June and came about because the delegates from New York insisted that the convention follow their recommendation as to representation, etc. It so happened that all the rest of the delegates of the United States voted against the New York resolutions and New York walked out.

Favors Majority Rule.

"We believe that New York should stay in the National organization and that the majority should rule. Our advice to every exhibitor is: Do not give an exclusive contract to anyone for showing your industrial pictures.

"Do not destroy the future of the industrial field by hammering at the National advertiser.

"Your screen is your own good property. Keep it and use it for your own good. Don't let anyone be your censor.

"Stand by your National organization. It has stood by you in the past."

Radin Secures Several Productions on Coast

MATTHIAS RADIN, president of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., who was recently confined to his hotel in Los Angeles by an attack of the grippe, is out again, and it is expected that within the next week or ten days he will have completed final arrangements with several of the producing companies, signed, for the distribution of their products in America.

Beyond the fact that the art titles in one of these features were made by Ferdinand Pinney Earle and that it contains an all-star cast, no other information is obtaiable. These were the last titles made by Earle previous to the formation of his own company organized to produce spectacular subjects by the use of his patented process whereby massive settings, can be made in a short time and at practically no cost, by the use of paintings and the aid of the camera by a "double exposure" system.

Universal Buys More Novels.

Universal announces the purchase of "Sayonara," the story by Gwendolyn Logan, as a starring vehicle for Tsuru Aoki. The company has also acquired the screen rights for "False Colors," by Edwin Le Vin, which will serve Priscilla Dean as her next feature, while "Togs," a comedy of social life, has just been secured for the use of Edith Roberts, following her current production, "The Daring Duchess."

State Rights Contracts Closed for Garsson Film

IMMEDIATELY following the decision of the United States District Court, permitting M. W. Garsson, of the Foundation Film Corporation, to use the title, "The Blindness of Youth," contracts were closed for the state rights distribution of the picture in nearly half of the United States.

"All the territory in the United States would have been sold long ago," Mr. Garsson says, "if it were not for the injunction suit filed in an attempt to restrain me from using the title. We expect to have all states disposed of within the next ten days.

"As soon as the last contract is closed announcement will be made of the forthcoming release. We are going to continue to give the state rights buyer the best productions obtainable and to assist him in every way to make the picture a success from a financial standpoint. Even after all territory is disposed of we will continue the advertising campaign on "The Blindness of Youth," in order to prove good faith to the territorial buyers. Of course this campaign will be directed exclusively toward the exhibitor.

"We have negotiations under way for the state rights distribution of eight big productions and as soon as plans are consummated we will notify all state rights buyers."

Only Two Women in Cast of "The Law Bringers"

ALTHOUGH perhaps not the first time on record but nevertheless unusual and interesting is the statement from Selznick Pictures to the effect that there are to be only two women principals in the Ralph Ince production "The Law Bringers." These two parts are given over to Zena Keefe, who plays the part of Andree the half-breed dance hall girl, and to Anita Booth who has the part of the gentle wife of Ducane, the gambler and whiskey runner.

When Ralph Ince decided to play the leading role of Constable Dick Heriot in this G. B. Lancaster story he was confronted with the difficulty of obtaining a correct uniform for the part. As a member of the Northwest mounted police he needed a special uniform and for the sake of the picture it had to be a duplicate of the uniforms worn by the members of the mounted police.

From Thomas McGrand, who was a corporal in the M. P. during the rebellion of '85 in Canada and from Colonel William Donaldson, official with the Canadian Northwest Pacific, he obtained some photographs of the uniform and the two men described the coloring to him.

Salt Lake City Operators Walk Out When Managers Refuse Six-Hour Day

REFUSING to arbitrate their differences with the Salt Lake Theatre Managers Association, the union operators employed in the motion picture houses of the city walked out on a strike last week. Their places were immediately filled by non-union men, and, according to the managers of the several theatres, the shows are operating as usual with little inconvenience in the majority of cases.

In one or two of the theatres managers declared that the machines had been tampered with, lights removed and fuse plugs pulled. No great damage, however, was done, and officers of the association say that the theatres are again operating under normal conditions.

The strike resulted from the refusal of the managers to accede to the union's demand for a six-hour working day. The operators were granted the increase of wages for which they asked, and every other provision of the new contract which they submitted was accepted by the theatres. Under the old agreement they worked seven hours.

Two Theatres Signed.

A committee of the managers, including George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress Theatre; George Mayne, manager of the American, Gem and Strand theatres, and M. H. Hanauer, of the Broadway Theatre, met with a committee of the operators on January 31, at which time a proposition to arbitrate was offered. The committee maintained that this would do no good, since the members of the union, to a man, they said, had decided to stand by the six-hour day demand.

The managers' committee called a meeting of the association at 11 o'clock Saturday night, and at that time the managers of those theatres showing pictures exclusively decided to stand together and refuse the demand. It developed that the Orpheum Theatre had already signed the new agreement, and it was accepted by the Casino. Pantages Theatre made a temporary agreement pending the return of Manager Frank R. Newman, who was out of the city.

Advanced Salary Scale.

All houses agreed to the advanced salary scale requested by the union, an increase of from $37.50 to $40 a week for class A theatres, relief operators from 70 to 95 cents an hour and overtime to be computed at time and one-half. In class B theatres the scale of $37.50 for chief operators and 89 cents an hour for relief men was agreed to.

The operators, however, would not accept the increase without the six-hour day. They maintained that working conditions were such as to make it dangerous to health to work longer. Nevertheless, the managers maintain, a majority of the operators are holding two jobs and some are voluntarily working as much as eleven hours a day. The theatres affected by the strike are the Paramount-Empress, American, Gem, Broadway, Strand, Isis, Empire, Cozy and the Photoplay.

Julian Solomon's Father Dies.

In Philadelphia, on January 21, Julian Solomon, father of Julian Solomon, Jr., died of apoplexy while sitting at his desk. He was in conversation with his business partner, when, without warning, he was stricken dead.

His son, long asociated with Morosco and Famous Players-Lasky, was ill in bed with the grip, and was unable to attend the funeral. Deceased was in the commission business in Philadelphia, representing numerous New York accounts in merchandise sales.

Cleveland Salesmen Win Universal Prize Contest

UNIVERSAL'S big business drive is over. As was told in these columns last week, it was won by the Cleveland exchange salesmen under the direction of Manager E. J. Smith. They made an increase in business of more than 50 per cent. in the last three months over the three preceding months. As a result, the big end of the $6,000 prize, or $2,500, was awarded the Cleveland manager and salesmen.

The office in Cleveland has reached large proportions. Its output is popular in Ohio and the exchange has become a headquarters for Cleveland and Ohio exhibitors. The seven salesmen employed by Mr. Smith more than doubled their average sales during the run of the contest. They are H. J. Rogers, M. J. Glick, T. G. Colby, N. P. Fleisher, H. S. Brown, F. L. Davie and J. W. MacFarland. H. C. Rogers is Mr. Smith's assistant.

Gold King Screen Advances.

Announcement is made by the Gold King Screen Company, Altus, Okla., that, beginning March 1, the price of Gold King Screen will be raised to seventy five cents a square foot.

S. H. Jones, inventor of the screen and president of the concern, states that this raise in price is imperative as the cost of manufacturing materials has trebled in the last twelvemonth.

The Gold King Company has purchased a building site in Oklahoma City and plans to erect a three-story factory thereon.

William Bowman, Director, Ill.

Antonio Moreno is himself directing the fourteenth episode of "The Invisible Hand," his current Vitagraph serial, owing to the sudden illness of Director William Bowman. The episode includes some of the biggest scenes in the chapter play, one requiring the star to drive an automobile over a cliff for a sheer drop of more than fifty feet into a river. It is expected that Mr. Bowman will be recovered in time to direct the fifteenth and final episode.

DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" Picturizes Married Life of Today

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?" the forthcoming Cecil B. De Mille production to be released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount Artcraft special, is described by those who have seen it as being a companion picture to Mr. De Mille's other successful domestic dramas, "Don't Change Your Husband" and "For Better, For Worse," and as embodying the spectacular effects and the wealth of detail which characterized those two productions.

In "Why Change Your Wife?" which is expected to be released in the near future, Mr. De Mille, it is said, takes up another angle of the domestic problems which he handled in "Don't Change Your Husband" and "For Better, For Worse." The three pictures, however, are declared to be in no way related to one another, except in the fact that they treat of modern married life.

This grouping of productions is said to be something new in motion pictures, although the group of works has long been known in literature. Just as Balzac in his "Comedie Humaine" and Ibsen in his social dramas wrote a series of works built around the same general theme, so Cecil B. De Mille has produced a group of motion pictures developing various phases of married life of today.

Has Unusually Strong Cast.

In this picture, which is marked by the sumptuous settings and profusion of accurate detail of scene and action which have come to be associated with Mr. De Mille's name, the director shows how a husband, blinded to his wife's true worth by the monotony of existence, can neglect her and become enamored of a beautiful divorcee, only to realize his mistake after he has come to an open break with his wife.

Guy Empey Secures Scenes for "Oil" Despite Inhospitable Southern Sun

IT isn't the 'Sunny South' it's said to be," is the burden of the song which Guy Empey's press agent makes the telegraph wires sing in his dispatches to the New York offices since the arrival of Guy Empey, Florence Evelyn Martin, Director North and others of the company producing "Oil" at Shreveport, La.

The company had pinned its faith on Southern propaganda which gloried over the sunny smile which "nature always wears south of the Mason and Dixon line"—and landed in a sea of mud in Shreveport. Record rains had soaked the entire Northern end of Louisiana. Nevertheless, the author of "Over the Top," "The Undercurrent" and "Oil" managed to coax enough sunshine from the weather man to start filming the oil-land scenes which are necessary for the completion of his big special production. Last accounts had it that the Sunny South had redeemed itself.

Lake Caddo, a veritable valley devoted to the oil industry; Homer, a boom oil town; Shreveport and other places yielded many picturesque shots. Visiting these places Empey resorted to army tactics in moving his impedimenta. He mounted men and materials on high-wheeled, broad-tread transport wagons and helped push, as in old artillery days on the western front.

Many Picturesque Shots.

About a week or ten days more of picture-taking will conclude the filming of scenes for "Oil." Latest advices indicate that the company will go as far west as Tulsa, Okla. With production work three-quarters finished, "Oil" promises well as a production of considerable magnitude.

Besides the star and his leading woman, Director North and his assistant, Philip Quinn, Cameramen Malloy and Baker and Still Photographer Moran, the party includes Templar Saxe, William Eville, Denton Vane, Harry Lee and Harry Burkhart.

Pioneer's Wrestling Pictures Open to Capacity Houses at Cohan's Theatre

IF a succession of crowded houses on Broadway is an indication of success the pictures of the wrestling contest between Joe Stecher and Earl Caddock, owned by the Pioneer will be one of the greatest sensations of the year.

Joe Stecher, who appeared on the stage of the Cohan Theatre before several capacity houses, received a thunderous ovation, but smilingly declined to make a speech. As the pictures were shown on the screen he was perhaps the most interested spectator in the house.

Elaborate preparations had been made at the Madison Square Garden, New York, for the filming of the bout. Several batteries of arc lamps flooded the padded arena. Seventeen cameras and a photographic staff of over fifty were perched on the roof girders, balconies, platforms and ringside to catch the battle from every angle.

Quick Work on Positive.

Twelve hours after Stecher had won the world's championship, the first print of the contest was shown at the Pioneer offices.

That the public at large are interested in wrestling is proven by the large advance sale which has been reported by the Cohan Theatre. On Monday the pictures began a tour of the K. & E. time, beginning at the Nixon Theatre, Atlantic City, where the film was shown for three days.

Hodkinson Picture Sets New Record at Tally's Broadway in Los Angeles

LOUISE GLAUM, star of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance, played no small part both on the screen and in person in the success scored by the W. W. Hodkinson release at T. L. Tally's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, last week.

Miss Glaum made a personal appearance at the Broadway on Tuesday evening, the big Tally house proving all too small for the crowds that clamored for admittance. And the applause that greeted her appearance on the stage was only slightly more vigorous than the handclapping which followed the conclusion of the picture when Miss Glaum re-appeared and, in a neat speech, thanked the audience in behalf of the producer and her associates in the picture.

Los Angeles has seldom been the scene of so powerful a promotion campaign as was waged on the Louise Glaum production by Mr. Tally's organization.

Exploited Widely.

Quarter-page newspaper advertisements as forceful as the picture itself awakened interest four days before the opening presentation, and spreads of similar size along with word of mouth advertising attracted throngs at every performance during the engagement. Twenty-four sheets on the J. Parker Read, Jr., picture were everywhere in Los Angeles proper and along the highways leading into the city.

Famous Players Now Transferring Activities to Long Island Studio

THE immense work of transferring the activities of the Famous Players-Lasky productions from the five widely separated studios which have housed the productions in the East this winter, to the new $2,000,000 studio at Long Island City, has been begun by J. N. Naulty, general manager of the eastern studios.

Selecting and preparing his crew for the new studio is one of the most important tasks. Next to that comes the arrangement, cataloguing and indexing of the enormous amount of indispensible property which has been accumulated at the studios and in storage. In this, however, the system Mr. Naulty has already installed which provides a pictorial index of all this property, by which all articles desired may be selected from pictures and ordered by number, is of immense assistance.

"We have achieved splendid results with the organization working under the present difficulties," said Mr. Naulty, "but we shall eclipse past performances when in the Long Island studio we shall have every convenience cenceivable to help make the best pictures.

Praise for Art Department.

"The needs of each department have been thoroughly investigated, and accommodation for each in the new studio has been arranged to the best advantage. The art and decoration department will remain in charge of Robert M. Haas. Associated with him is Charles O. Seesel, decorator.

"The different departments have all been put in the charge of the best executives obtainable, who have in turn retained experts as their assistants. Due to the efforts of Frank Meyer the laboratory will soon be in working order, which will relieve the congestion in our own present inadequate laboratory and obviate our scattering much of our work in four separated laboratories about the city."

Prohibition Is Theme of Washburn's Artcraft Release for February 8

REPLETE with scintillating wit and with a farcical handling of an opportune theme in a manner that even the most carping critics would fail to take offense at, Holworthy Hall's story, "The Six Best Cellars," starring Bryant Washburn, is the Paramount Artcraft picture scheduled for release February 8.

"The Six Best Cellars" is probably the funniest story ever written dealing with Prohibition. First published in McClure's Magazine, it was so good that Bobbs-Merrill published it in book form and "The Six Best Cellars" actually became one of the six best sellers.

Much after the manner in which Admiral Farragut tackled the torpedo question, young Henry Carpenter, a newly married society idol, played by Bryant Washburn, says: "Darn the drought. Let's go." Henry and his wife, Millicent, belong to the elect half-dozen who are supposed to be the best entertainers in the suburban town which claims them on its census. They are credited with having a well-stocked cellar when the day comes for King Alcohol's abdication. As a matter of fact, Henry is struggling along on high with his supply reduced to the final quart.

A Lincoln Ehrgott
In charge of foreign department of C. B. Price Company.

A. L. Ehrgott Is a Man of Wide Picture Experience

A. LINCOLN EHRGOTT, who is in charge of the foreign department of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., has had a vast experience and has a wide acquaintance in the film industry. Mr. Ehrgott started as an executive with the General Film Company in 1912. In 1913 he started the first exchange in Bangor, Me., when motion pictures were eagerly sought in that virgin territory. He also opened the New Haven exchange for the General Film Company, and assumed its management until 1916.

From the General Film Company he went with the McClures Pictures Corporation, for whom he exploited "The Seven Deadly Sins." He was branch manager of the Triangle Corporation at Boston until its dissolution, and then became special representative for the Hallmark Distributing Organization.

He has had several flattering offers since then to affiliate with some of the prominent established distributing companies, but felt that the growing activities of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., presented greater opportunities and a broader field of operation.

Mr. Ehrgott is known to every exhibitor in New England, and has their respect and confidence, won by his fair dealings and the honest presentation of the products he has handled.

In assuming charge of the foreign department of C. B. Price Co., Inc., Mr. Ehrgott will keep in close touch with all foreign buyers, and has already put over some big deals in South America.

A. George Smith Leaves African Films To Be Goldwyn Representative Abroad

A. GEORGE SMITH, said to be perhaps the most widely-traveled man in the motion picture industry, has been appointed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as its general representative for Europe. Charles Lapworth, formerly on the London Daily Mail, and more recently associated with Charles Chaplin, will co-operate with Mr. Smith in the handling of Goldwyn advertising and publicity in the European field. In engaging Mr. Smith to represent the Goldwyn interests in Europe, this organization has secured a man finely equipped through years of experience in foreign markets to meet the changing conditions in the distribution of American films abroad.

Mr. Smith's active interest in pictures started in 1910 when, located at Cape Town, he became one of the first distributors of photoplays to exhibitors in Africa. At that time there were not more than twenty five exhibitors to be served, whereas today there are approximately three hundred.

Twice Around the World.

In 1911 he formed Smith Film Agency, Ltd., which was in 1913 incorporated in the African Films Trust, Ltd., six companies being merged in the new organization. Mr. Smith took an active part in the formation and was general manager for the company until October, 1918. He was also a director of the African Film Productions, Ltd., African Theatres Trust, Ltd., India Films, Ltd., Middle East Films, Ltd., International Variety and Theatrical Agency, London, and the International Variety and Theatrical Agency, New York. During the past three years his travels in connection with motion picture enterprises have taken him twice around the world.

Mr. Smith's first visit to America was in 1917, after he had made an exhaustive study of motion picture conditions in the Orient. At the time of his visit, 95 per cent. of the film business in Africa went to British firms in London. One of the objects of Mr. Smith's trip to this country was to see if the business could not be better handled here. The result of his investigations was the formation of the New York branch of the I. V. T. A., and since then conditions have changed so radically that 95 per cent. of Africa's business which went to London is today received direct by American producers.

Returning to Africa in 1918, Mr. Smith found conditions so altered that he was forced to visit New York again to arrange for the purchase of films. He came by way of the East, opening exchanges along his route of travel, and remained in New York as a representative of the I. V. T. A., until his recent resignation to take charge of Goldwyn's interests in Europe.

Ready to Step Out.

Buck Jones Makes Screen Debut in "The Last Straw"

IN "The Last Straw," William Fox presents for the first time a horseman cowboy actor of great promise —Buck Jones.

"The Last Straw" gives Jones every opportunity to display his wonderful horsemanship, being a veritable skyrocket of vigorous action, built around a love story in an untamed western setting. It is from the pen of Harold Titus, and abounds in stirring episodes of treachery, sacrifice and fights against odds. Denison Clift directed.

The staging called for a diversity of exterior scenes ranging from flat prairie stretches to the wildest mountain gorges, and brought to the screen hordes of cattle.

The question so often propounded by screen fans, "What has become of Vivian Rich?" is answered brilliantly by her appearance in this production where she is a foil for the cowpuncher star. At several points in the picture she is called upon to undertake scenes that involve genuine hazard—such as when she rides an untamed horse.

"Trimmed in Red" Is Madge Kennedy's Latest

GOLDWYN'S first production in the East with Madge Kennedy as the star is "Trimmed with Red." It is a story of New York society life, and Hugo Ballin is directing. Among the women in the cast are Helen Greene, Mrs. David Landau, Nellie Beaumont, Ada Shartle and Dorothy Millette. Madge Kennedy's new leading man is Joseph Striker, who has been in motion pictures for the last two years and played in the stage production of "Turn to the Right."

E. J. Radcliffe plays Mirlin, a wealthy society man. Mr. Radcliffe won considerable distinction as an actor when he played the part of Theodore Roosevelt in the screen biography of the great American. Sidney Vaunier is a young Englishman of French descent, to whom has been assigned the role of Prof. Syle, a radical leader.

Others in the cast are Roy Applegate as Alfonzo, Edward Barnard as Epstein, George DuBois as Tony, and J. L. Leonard as Odoroskavitch.

The story is based on the serial written by Wallace Erwin for the Saturday Evening Post. The first scenes are laid in the home of Rosamond Vallant, who believes that animals contain the souls of dead geniuses, but she is won by Finnessy to an interest in Bolshevism. One of the scenes concerns a week-end party of society women and parlor Bolshevists held at a beautiful Long Island home. The maids and other servants walk out on the guests, who, in turn, become unmanageable. It is only the quick wit and courage of Emily that brings the affair to a happy conclusion.

Sol L. Lesser Outlines Plans for Production

SOL. L. LESSER, president of the now operating on a national scale, All Star Features Distributors, Inc. who recently invaded the producing and exhibiting fields, arrived at San Francisco recently to confer with Fred Dahnken, president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, on matters pertaining to the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit holds the First National franchise for northern California and Mr. Lesser now has a similar interest in the southern part of the state, having taken over the Tally holdings there, the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles and an interest in the chain of theatres operated by Gore Bros., which houses automatically become First National theatres by the transaction.

In speaking of his producing activities Mr. Lesser stated that the Annette Kellerman picture is a comedy entitled "She Would and She Did." He is arranging to offer this in First National houses on the Pacific Coast, with the star appearing in person, but plans to present something out of the ordinary in the form of an act built especially for the occasion.

The same plan will be followed with the George Beban picture, "One Man in a Million," except that San Francisco will be the only coast city in which the star will appear. From this city both star and film will be taken direct to New York. Both the producer and the star claim San Francisco as their home and for this reason this city has been selected for the premiere presentation.

Government officials, including Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, composed an audience which on Wednesday, January 28, viewed in Washington "The Land of Opportunity," the first Americanization picture to be completed following the announcement that the entire picture industry had been mobilized to combat unrest and radicalism.

"The Land of Opportunity" was made at the suggestion of Secretary Lane by Lewis J. Selznick, head of Selznick Pictures, and stars Ralph Ince, who also directed the film.

Secretary of the Interior Lane said following the showing, in a statement that was used by the daily newspapers: "It certainly is far better than anything I had conceived possible."

Gets World Rights to Norris Novel.

Louis B. Mayer has purchased the world's motion picture right to "Harriet and the Piper," a novel by Kathleen Norris, running serially in Pictorial Review. Anita Stewart will be featured in the future. On completion of the story in its serial form it will be published in book form.

Loeb Affiliates with the Kane Organization

LOUIS E. LOEB, a film man of long experience, is the first prominent addition to the staff of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, organized two weeks ago at 452 Fifth avenue, New York, with Mr. Kane as president. Mr. Loeb will act as assistant to Mr. Kane.

Mr. Loeb has been an active worker in the industry for about ten years and has a thorough knowledge of many phases of the business, especially film distribution, in which he has had extensive experience.

When the General Film Company opened offices in San Francisco in 1910 Mr. Loeb was one of the first employes, acting in the capacity of assistant branch manager for almost five years. Coming to New York, he became connected with the home office of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which was later absorbed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

When the Artcraft Pictures Corporation was organized, Mr. Loeb became assistant general manager, and perfected and installed the routine of the twenty-eight branches as well as the home office. With the consolidation of Paramount and Artcraft, Mr. Loeb was given complete charge of accounting in the department of distribution.

In the course of his exchange activities he had made five extensive tours of the country, thereby securing an intimate knowledge of national conditions.

Mr. Loeb was with Famous Players-Lasky for five years prior to his present connections. He left the latter concern to join Mr. Kane in his new enterprise.

Randolph Bartlett Back With Selznick.

Every once in a while Randolph Bartlett gets away from Selznick. Years ago he left to become eastern representative of Photoplay Magazine. Then he went back to Selznick when Myron began "on his own."

Photoplay Magazine took him away a few months ago to become Pacific Coast representative of that publication. The score is now 3 to 2 in favor of Selznick—for Mr. Bartlett is back again, to do special publicity work for the Selznick stars.

First of Drew Two-Reel Comedies.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase," first of Mrs. Sidney Drew's "After Thirty" series of comedies has been scheduled by Pathé for release February 22. These features have been adapted from the well known stories of Julian Street, in which John Cumberland, of bedroom farce fame, is starred. There will be eight of these modern comedies. The first is a typical Drew production with all the trials and tribulations of matrimonial bliss, after the glamor and romance has worn off. The comedies are two reels in length.

SUMMONED by the slogan "George is going to London" fifteen of the friends of A. George Smith gathered in the yacht room of the Astor at noon, January 29, to bid godspeed to the new European reperesentative of Goldwyn, who, it had been announced, was sailing for London, February 2. At the conclusion of a substantial luncheon Mr. Smith was presented with a handsome traveling bag, equipped with all the needful accessories.

In the course of the presentation speech Mr. Smith was praised as a man of few words and also as a man of his word; who knew what he wanted and who quickly decided what a production was worth to his company; who nominated the sum and was prepared to "plank it down;" who was returning to his old home on an important mission, the fulfilment of which was a certainty in the opinion of those who knew him best.

In his response Mr. Smith spoke feelingly of his relations with Americans during the past two and a half years. He referred to the warnings given him as to the rough treatment he might expect in the United States, but he declared he had found the fears of his anxious friends unfounded; that in spite of the pessimists his admiration for American business men steadily had broadened. While in fact London was his home, also he had learned to look upon New York in the same light, and he wanted to feel he was coming back.

English Pictures for England Only.

The former representative of South African Films referred at some length to the international film situation. Speaking of English productions Mr. Smith said he would talk with frankness and declared it his belief that one reason underlying the struggle English manufacturers experienced in selling their pictures on the American market was that English productions were made for showing on domestic screens, in other words, to please the English people.

In contrast, Mr. Smith called attention to the cosmopolitan character of the population of the United States, pointing out the advantage that gave to producers here. He said pictures that suited the American public were practically sure to please the peoples of other nations.

Mr. Smith quoted figures showing that England has exported in 1919, 140 per cent more pictures than it had in 1918 and predicted that in 1920 she would export three times the amount recorded in the past twelvemonth. As to how the United States would be represented in that bulk, he said, it would depend entirely on the character of the product—as to whether quality dominated rather than quantity.

Why Foreign Pictures Are Not Popular.

Following the talk by Mr. Smith there was a round table discussion as to why foreign pictures and English particularly had not proved popular in the United States. It was the consensus of opinion that apart from the question of quality, which it was pointed out had not been on a par with that of American productions, the handicap chiefly lay in the prejudice of exhibitors against a picture in which the star was not known to his clientele. Another complaint was that in many instances the players were miscast, that insufficient attention was given to types as well as to securing men and women of screen presence and then attiring them in attractive garb.

Fox Building Big Stage in Los Angeles for Interiors

THE producing industry in Los Angeles and its environs will boast a stage larger than any it now possesses when the one under construction at the William Fox studios at North Western avenue and Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, is finished, which will be in a few weeks. No fewer than five dramatic groups will begin shooting pictures there as soon as the place is available.

The stage is 220 feet long, 70 feet wide and 25 feet high in the clear. As it is the experience of Hollywood directors that glass and open stages are difficult and expensive, this has been built as a dark stage, on which only interiors will be taken.

The building of the stage is under the direction of the general superintendent of the Fox studios in Hollywood, Sol M. Wurtzel, with C. W. Teffeau, general manager, in immediate charge.

The space used for this stage was formerly the site of an open stage and is located on the dramatic or east side of the Fox studio plot.

Back to the Dark Ages for Dark Vamps

De Sacia Saville, the blonde vampire, whose fair charms may precipitate a blonde-brunette war.

Let the Dark, Wild Women Beware; the Blonde Comes

A RECENT issue of the New York Sunday American devotes a full page to a treatise on the question, "Can a Blonde Be a Vampire?" emphasizing the ambitious effort of De Sacia Saville, one of California's most striking blondes, who is reputed to be the heiress to the famous Yellow Aster Gold Mine and the leader of the younger millionaire set of Los Angeles and San Francisco, and who has forsaken her fashionable clubs and friends to become the "Blonde Vampire of the Screen."

The article compares the respective merits of the willowy, raven-haired, Theda Bara type of vampire, and the newest type of vampire with the golden hirsute adornment as represented by De Sacia Saville. The author of the articles indicates a preference for the latter type, "judging by the more wholesome impression to the eye, which Miss Saville presents in her recent screen appearances," some of which include "The Virtuous Model," "The Lure of Ambition," "A Lonely Heart" and "The Woman Gives," the last two not yet released.

Director John B. OBrien is credited with the discovery of this latest "find" during the filming of Edgar Selwyn's and Anthony Paul Kelly's play, "Lonely Heart," which he recently completed.

Mr. O'Brien discovered that in private life she was Mrs. Edwin Demarest Mooers, of Los Angeles, and that her husband was the owner of the Yellow Aster Mine and one of the richest men in the West. The name De Sacia Saville is Mrs. Mooers maiden name and the one by which she will be known in the films.

Miss Saville has accepted contracts from the Hearst and other newspapers to furnish them with a series of articles, over her signature, relating her experiences as a screen actress and keeping step with her progress in the films.

Lynch Sells Famous Players-Lasky Holdings in Southern Enterprises

A DEAL involving millions of dollars, by which the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, with headquarters in Atlanta, disposes of its 50 per cent. holdings in the Southern Enterprises, Inc., to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporaiton, was officially announced for the first time on Thursday, January 29, to the Atlanta representative of the Moving Picture Word, by officials of the Lynch firm.

It had not been intended to make this announcement at this early date, but a statement published in a New York theatrical magazine was in some respects misleading, and it is to correct any wrong impression that the official announcement of the transaction is made to Moving Picture World, it is explained.

By the terms of the deal the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the Lynch interests in Southern Enterprises, Inc., which promises an unprecedented development of the amusement field in southern and adjacent states. The Southern Enterprises was organized by S. A. Lynch in April, 1919, to develop theatres in the eleven southern states. The capitalization was $5,000,000, of which amount $2,000,000 was paid in as cash. The S. A. Lynch Enterprises and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were equal owners.

Lynch Virtually Withdraws.

The Lynch Enterprises owned theatres and valuable amusement rights in many southern cities at the time Southern Enterprises was organized. An erroneous statement was published in the newspapers that the latter organization took over all of the Lynch theatres in the South at that time. This was not true, these remaining the property of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. However, the present deal disposes of these theatres at this time to the Southern Enterprises, thereby bringing them under the entire control of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

This virtually means the withdrawal of the Lynch Enterprises from the amusement field, though they will continue to distribute Paramount-Artcraft releases in the eleven southern states, at least temporarily. In reality, though, it means merely the withdrawal of the name, for the present officers of the Southern Enterprises will continue to direct its management. In no wise will the deal affect the individual employes of the company nor the theatres that were owned by the Lynch people. What it does mean, though, is the broad development of the amusement field throughout all of the southern states and adjacent territory as well.

Give Up Triangle Exchanges.

Officers of the Southern Enterprises are S. A. Lynch, president; C. E. Holcomb, vice president; Y. Frank Freeman, secretary and general manager, and Fred Kent, treasurer.

Besides affecting about 150 theatres in the South, the deal means the relinquishment by the Lynch interests of six Triangle film exchanges in Atlanta, Dallas, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis and New Orleans. This deal alone is understood to have involved over $500,000, and was separately announced several days ago.

Atlanta officials of the company stated that Famous Players-Lasky will continue to invest capital in its organization until it is the largest of its kind in the field. The purchase of the Lynch holdings in the South means a step toward the establishment of a big circuit.

"Both the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the S. A. Lynch Enterprises are well pleased with the transaction," said Y. Frank Freeman, secretary and general manager of the latter concern. "It is the consummation of pleasant relation between us."

"Respectable by Proxy" Has Exploitation Aids

FOLLOWING the great success with which the recent Blackton productions, "Dawn" and "My Husband's Other Wife," starring Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, have been received by motion picture enthusiasts all over the country, Pathe has determined to surpass these remarkable records with the Blackton production about to be released, "Respectable by Proxy."

A picture may be a great picture, but there must be a certain amount of exploitation to aid the exhibitor in calling attention to his attraction, and nothing has been overlooked in this instance by Pathe. In addtion to the usual advertising material, a special star one-sheet and two styles of three-sheet are issued. The art department has combined every effort to make these innovations in display material.

"Respectable by Proxy" is a delicate story which J. Stuart Blackton has handled deftly and with just the proper touch. The action takes place in the South and the old Colonial mansion, garden and orchard not only look like Alabama, instead of New Jersey, but are the real things. The story revolves around a youg southern heir, who is wedded in haste to a third-rate actress, whose acting off-stage is far from third-rate.

The young stars, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, are supported by a splendid cast headed by Eulalie Jensen and William R. Dunn. Margaret Barry, Bessie Stinson and Morgan Thorpe complete the cast, and a large number of extras were used in the garden party.

Baker Praises New Stroheim Play.

Tarkington Baker, general manager of Universal, is evidently more than pleased with Stroheim's latest Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," which has just been completed. In this picture Sam de Grasse and Una Trevelyn are featured. Stroheim is responsible for the scenario as well as the direction.

Carl Laemmle has just received a telegram from Baker lauding the production. The message reads:

"Just saw Stroheim picture rough out to thirteen reels. Speaking on basis of my ten years' experience as critic, this is in my opinion one of the greatest pictures ever produced. Better than 'Blind Husbands.' Sure to be huge sensation and smashing success. Is in class by itself."

THE biggest event in motion picture circles of the Pacific Northwest in the past few months was the introduction to the public on January 23 of a new Robert Morgan organ at the American Theatre in Bellingham, Wash. Fred Walton, manager, has gained a reputation both as a progressive exhibitor and as a lavish entertainer in the three years since he took over Bellingham's big legitimate theatre and converted it into the leading motion picture theatre of the northwestern section of Washington.

When, after months of preparation, he was at last ready to let the people of Bellingham hear the magnificent instrument which had been installed in the theatre, he made it an event to be remembered in the annals of the city and of the motion picture industry. He invited all the film exchange managers, their wives and their assistant managers from Seattle, as well as a number of exhibitors from the surrounding territory, representatives of the motion picture trade papers and the local press and his business associates in Bellingham. He met the out-of-town guests at the train with taxi-cabs, taking them directly to the Leopold Hotel, where a banquet was served.

Winstock Is Toastmaster.

Melvin G. Winstock, one of the best known motion picture men of the Pacific Northwest and famous along the Coast as an orator, was toastmaster. During the banquet nearly every one present was given a chance to make a two-minute speech. Even Mrs. Walton accepted the challenge and made a corking little speech of welcome. At the suggestion of the toastmaster every one stood in honor of Mr. Walton's father and mother, who were present, and the father acknowledged the compliment in a few words of appreciation.

Among the other speakers, besides the film men, were J. R. Jukes, president of the Bellingham Rotary Club and also president of the First National Bank of Bellingham, the editors of two Bellingham papers, Miss S. E. Mobley, Northwest correspondent for the Exhibitor's Trade Review; S. J. Anderson, Northwest correspondent for Moving Picture World; C. R. Keplinger, one of Mr. Walton's two associates in the American Theatre, and Oscar Schinhan, well known organist of Los Angeles, whom Mr. Walton had imported to officiate at the keyboard of the big organ for the first few weeks. Chester Walton, brother of Fred, will be the regular organist.

During the banquet the diners were informed that there was a line three blocks long in front of the American, and when they arrived there at 8.30 o'clock, every seat in the house was taken, except the front row in the balcony, which had been reserved for them, and there was still a line.

Flowers in Profusion.

The house was beautifully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers. The upper and lower houses, which were high-priced seats when the American was a legitimate house, were used as backgrounds for these floral decorations. In the center each of the lower ones a small fountain played in varying colors and on either side of it stood a pedestal topped with cut flowers. In the rear of each a hanging basket of ferns and flowers bloomed, while over the edges of the balustrade hung ferns and potted verbenas. In each of the upper boxes there was a pedestal of flowers. The stage, orchestra pit and lobby were also gay with tall vases of flowers.

Mr. Walton made a brief address of welcome and presented Melvin Winstock, who told a few interesting facts about the organ. Then Chester Walton started to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and the audience began to think they were "seeing things," for the platform on which the keyboard was placed began rising until it was on a level with the stage, bringing into view a page gorgeously dressed in red velvet with his hand at salute and just above the keyboard an American flag waving in the breezes of an electric fan. It sent a thrill through the audience, and under the leadership of Mr. Walton from the stage, they sang with great spirit. Mr. Schinhan then took his seat at the organ and played a splendid program.

Out-of-Town Guests.

After the concert the picture program began. It was as follows: Paramount Drew Comedy, "Harold, the Last of the Saxons"; Gaumont Graphic; Literary Digest; Bryant Washburn in "It Pays to Advertise."

It was a pleasing program for the audience and a most pleasant evening for the invited guests, and Fred Walton was the most talked of man in Bellingham that night and for several days before and after the event, several long articles appearing about him and his theatre in the Bellingham papers.

Lynch Circuit Books "12:10."

As an example of the popularity of the Republic release "Twelve-Ten," it is cited that the S. A. Lynch circuit of fourteen theatres in the South has booked the production for sixteen days of showing during January and February. This production, which was directed by Herbert Brenon and which stars Marie Doro, has been booking solidly over the country and has been one of the most satisfying sellers Republic has ever had.

Mme. Marguerite Sylva

Belgian prima donna who makes her screen debut in American's "The Honey Bee."

Mme. Sylva Latest Diva to Enter Screen Work

MADAME MARGUERITA SYLVA, the noted Belgian opera singer, who appears on the screen in this country for the first time in American's adaptation of "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, is the latest diva to desert the song world for that where a golden voice is superfluous.

Madame Sylva, whose husband is a United States Marine Corps major, returned to this country when it entered the war. Prior to that time she realized from her personal observation that the American motion picture producers had largely invaded the continental field, supplying a large majority of the film exhibited in all continental countries. She saw clearly that America was leading the world in the motion picture industry, and determined to devote a part of her time, at least, to this branch of the amusement industry; and through the American Film Company she accepted her first contract as star in "The Honey Bee."

In the production of "The Honey Bee" Madame Sylva was directed by Rupert Julian, whose name immediately brings to mind the spectacular success, "The Beast of Berlin" and "The Fire Flingers." This latest "Flying A" super-drama is in the cutting and titling stage and will soon be ready for the first press showing.

Excellent Work on Photography.

The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, is putting out an excellent work by Paul L. Anderson entitled "The Fine Art of Photography." It has 310 pages and a number of reproductions of photographs; also several diagrams.

The work is exhaustive. It has chapters on "Suggestion and Mystery," "Composition," "Values," "Winter Work," "Landscapes," "Architectural Work," "Marine Work," and one on the "Motion Picture."

To professional or amateur the work will prove interesting and instructive. Anderson is a master of his craft; also he knows how to impart his knowledge to others by way of the printed page.

Pathe Erecting Twelve Story Building to Accommodate Business Increase

PAUL BRUNET, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that the rapidly increasing activities of the organization, especially after a record-breaking year, have made it imperative that Pathe occupy larger quarters, which immediately meet and anticipated for some time to come, the expansion of the business. Ground was recently broken on the lots occupying numbers 35, 37 and 39 West Forty-fifth street, adjoining the present home headquarters of Pathe Exchange in the Century Building at No. 25, and, by the coming fall, a twelve story structure, erected there will be the new home of the organization. The ground aera to be occupied by the building is 50 by 100 feet.

The design and arrangement of the structure is the last word in modernity. It is to be 100 per cent. fireproof, with sprinkling appliances throughout and will be equipped with every modern device for safeguarding the occupants. The eleventh floor will be given over entirely to the occupancy of Mr. Brunet and the board of officers of the company. There will be a commodious meeting room for the gathering of the directors.

Glass Studio for Art Department.

The art department, which now employs thirty odd artists and experts having long since outgrown its present quarters, will be housed in a commodious glass covered studio on the roof of the structure. It will, in effect, be a building upon a building, furnished with every technical equipment to aid in the production and handling of the large amount of art work produced by Pathe, both for its own attractions and those individually distributed through the Pathe Exchanges.

New Pathe Home

Whose twelve stories will house all home office organizations.

An entire floor will be devoted to the sales, publicity, exploitation and advertising departments; and the departments of accounting, supply and purchasing will also be located in commodious quarters. There is to be a special exhibition room on the floor occupied by the sales department for the sole use of that division and prospective buyers. In addition, there will be a projection hall for the routine use of the film committee and for special showings.

New Home for Pathe News.

After years of domicile in Jersey City, the Pathe News, upon the completion of the new building, will be transferred to New York. This will as indicated by Mr. Brunet vastly facilitate the production and distribution of this feature. The News will have a highly modernized developing plant for negatives, and the cutting room and vaults will have the benefit of the very latest improvements.

"It was increasingly evident during the year," commented Mr. Brunet, "that the growth of business handled and in the corresponding increase in office and executive forces, that the ever present need is, and would be for considerable time to come, more room. We have occupied the eleventh and twelfth floors in the Century Building, but in the last year we were compelled to extend our organization to the eighth floor.

Provides for New Developments.

"The arrangement of the new building has been planned, not only with the idea of thoroughly accommodating all of the established and growing processes of the home offices of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., but to make provision, also, for the things that will shortly develop in the future growing out of a wider expansion of the national activities of this organization and the accession of new and important factors.

"With the occupancy of this new twelve story building, much of a big problem will have been met, along with a largely increased efficiency of operation and a greater capacity for handling the vast business of Pathe Exchange, Inc."

Drama His Aspiration Comedy His Life Work

WHILE Roscoe Arbuckle, now appearing in George Melford's production, "The Round-Up," has let it become known that although he prefers the feature screen drama to the comedies that have made him famous, he is firm in the belief that the production of laughs for other people is his duty, privilege and life work. He adds that if he should appear in dramas in the future he will demand that many a laugh be tucked away in his roles.

Arbuckle has taken his first fling in the drama and a brilliantly successful fling it has been, too, if the unanimous opinion of officials and co-artists at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky is worth anything, and it ought to be.

When he was cast for the star role of the fat sheriff in "The Round-Up," George Melford's special production for Paramount-Artcraft, officials of the organization were certain they had made a fortunate choice. Suffice it to say that the funny fat man even exceeded expectations.

"A good laugh," says Arbuckle, "is the most worth-while thing in life. I'll tell you how I feel—I want a laugh in everything about me, I want everybody with whom I associate to be cheerful. When I pick anyone to aid me either at the studio or at my home, I find out first if he has a sense of humor and second, if he can do the work. A sense of humor, to my way of thinking, covers an all-fired multitude of sins and shortcomings.

"When I laugh, I want the whole world with me, and when I sigh—if I ever do—I'll want to sigh alone, away off by my lonesome, for I want no one else to see me in my shame."

Broadway Houses Book Americanization Picture

THE first Americanization picture production to be made by any producer following the suggestion of Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, has been booked by every Broadway motion picture theatre in New York, it was announced this week.

The production is "The Land of Opportunity," starring Ralph Ince, who also directed the picture. It was made by Lewis J. Selznick, who is chairman of the distributing committee appointed by Secretary of the Interior Lane to distribute suitable Americanization pictures throughout the country.

"The Land of Opportunity," which was announced for February 8 release, is declared to be one of the most forceful blows at "parlor Bolshevism." The film tells, in two reels, the story of how an American radical is converted to true American principals by the story of Abraham Lincoln's struggles and triumphs as recalled by an old man who knew Lincoln personally.

Ralph Ince has the part of Lincoln and also the role of the radical, the action taking place in a modern club room where the old man, a waiter, tells the story of Lincoln in his early years. The story is projected upon the screen in a series of scenes taken from actual events in the rise of the poor Illinois rail splitter to the chair of President of the United States.

Before this production goes to exhibitors it has had an unusual amount of exploitation matter prepared. The plan book turned out by Watt L. Parker, of the Selznick staff, is replete with helps and aids, and the lobby displays prepared by the service department are said to be complete in every way. The production was written and arranged for the screen by Lewis Allen Browne.

There is a saving of $4.80 to those who pay the annual subscription rate of $3 to Moving Picture World. The newsstand price is 15 cents.

King Baggot has signed with Metro to play Judah Llewellyn opposite May Allison in "The Cheater," an adaptation by Lois Zellner of Henry Arthur Jones' stage drama "Judah." King Baggot has the part in which E. S. Willard starred when "Judah" was first played in London in 1890 at the Shaftesbury Theatre and in New York the same year. "The Cheater" is now under production at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Samuel Goldwyn Buys Clyde Fitch's "Truth"

FOLLOWING the purchase of "The Christian" and various other classics, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces its acquisition of the screen rights of "The Truth," by the late Clyde Fitch, a play generally accepted as the greatest contribution to the drama yet made by an American. "The Truth," due to the nature of its plot and characterizations, is peculiarly adaptable to the screen and it is known that Goldwyn intends to utilize in every way the many dramatic and comic possibilities of the play.

Clyde Fitch, one of the few Americans to achieve an international reputation as a playwright, wrote "The Truth" when he was at the height of his powers as a dramatist. The first production of the play was given October, 1906, in Cleveland, Charles Frohman presenting it with a notable cast headed by Clara Bloodgood and including William J. Kelly, J. E. Dodson, George Spink, Hodgson Taylor, Mrs. Sam Sothern, Elene Fraser, Zelda Sears and Frederick Harrison. The play soon moved to the Criterion and subsequently the Lyceum Theatre, New York, William B. Mack taking Dodson's part, later being succeeded by John Emerson.

"The Truth" was produced in London in 1907 at the Comedy Theatre, with a cast headed by Marie Tempest. The London production began a European vogue for the play and it was a reigning success in Germany, Italy, Russia, Hungary and Scandinavia. Perhaps no play by any other American author has so stirred the imagination and applause of foreign audiences.

The intrinsic worth of "The Truth" as a drama of permanent qualities induced Winthrop Ames to successfully revive it in April, 1914, at the Little Theatre, New York, with an all-star cast which included Grace George, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Conway Tearle and Zelda Sears of the original cast of the play. "The Truth" has also been successful in book-form, and in the standard collected edition of the plays by Clyde Fitch is referred to as his masterpiece.

Prints of New Wilson Serial Coming.

Ben Wilson, now producing, on the coast, a second serial, "The Screaming Shadow," for distribution by Frank G. Hall, of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, writes the New York office that the first ten episodes of this serial have been completed and that prints of the first five have been sent. The first ten episodes already completed are titled "A Cry in the Dark," "The Virgin of Death," "The Fang of the Beast," "The Black Seven," "The Vapor of Death," "The Crawling Horror," "Into the Depths," "The White Terror," "The Prey of Mong" and "Liquid Fire."

Universal Has Breezy Exploitation on Romantic Story of Air Spaces

UNIVERSAL has planned the biggest exploitation drive ever attempted on any of its pictures for "The Great Air Robbery." This Jewel picture, which is a romance of the aerial mail and probably the first production to be staged in the clouds, is a revelation as to the extremes a daring pilot may go. It is a filmed prediction of the coming of the aerial highwayman and the trans-continental aerial mail. The film has a well knit love story.

Curtiss' Aid Enlisted.

Every aviator is talking about the picture and helping to boost it. One of the most important tie-ups was with the Curtiss Aeroplane Company. This company has agreed to loan to Universal, through their agents, airplanes, motors and models, the cost of which runs into thousands of dollars. Their agents have been instructed to help in the exploitation of the picture, as the Curtiss Company believes the production is good propaganda for the boosting of aviation in this country.

It is planned to have airplane flights simultaneous with the opening of the picture in a city where there are flying activities. When the aviation exhibiton opened in Chicago Miss Laura Bromwell, the first woman plot to win her license since the war, flew over and bombed the city with leaflets announcing the coming of the picture to that city. An elaborate exploitation campaign is already mapped out for that city. Newspaper editors who have never enjoyed a flight will be invited to fly and bomb the city for the "Great Air Robbery" picture.

New Minneapolis Theatre to Be the First of Chain

IMMEDIATE construction of an $850,000 theatre with a seating capacity 3,500, at Hennepin avenue and Ninth street, is announced today by George E. Raymond, manager of the Minneapolis Orpheum Theatre interests. The Orpheum company today made a lease with the Business Center Realty Company for 100 years on forty feet of ground, one block deep, at an average valuation of $570,000. The lease calls for $20,000 a year the first five years, $25,000 the next ten years and $35,000 the remaining period. The rent begins August 1.

The theatre will be modeled after the State Lake Theatre, Chicago, which plays to 7,700 people weekly, Mr. Raymond announced, and will have a seating capacity of 3,300. It will have a nursery and play room and will present motion pictures and vaudeville. There will be four shows daily and popular prices will prevail.

The old Orpheum will continue operation under the present system. Its location is two blocks farther out than any downtown theatre.

The new building is a part of a string of new buildings being financed by the sale of 109,923 shares of common stock of Orpheum Circuit, Inc., at $32.50 a share.

Other cities in the string to have new theatres are Kansas City, San Francisco, Memphis and Los Angeles.

Eminent Authors Keep Goldwyn Studios Busy

A TELEGRAM from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City gives a long list of the activities of Eminent Authors Pictures, for which five productions have been completed, one for each author. Gouverneur Morris has returned from San Francisco with Wallace Worseley, director, where they selected locations of Morris' first picture "The Penalty." The cast gives the leading feminine role of Barbara to Ethel Grey Terry, who will be supported by Lon Chaney, Kenneth Harlan and Charles Clary. The actor for the extraordinary role of Blizzard, the legless wizard, has not been named.

Wallace Worseley is a new director acquired by Goldwyn who directed Basil King's production of "The Street Called Straight," which has been favorably commented on in advance of its release. "Earthbound" by Basil King is now being made under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter. Goldwyn's new director, Sidney Olcott, will direct the Eminent Authors picture, "Scratch My Back," from the pen of Rupert Hughes, and T. Roy Barnes of vaudeville fame will play the leading male part. Opposite him will play Helene Chadwick, who leaped into prominence for her work in "The Cup of Fury."

Mary Roberts Rinehart has completed the editing of "Dangerous Days," directed by Reginald Barker, and announces that her second picture will be based on her story "Empire Builders." For the boy's part in "Empire Builders" Cullen Landis will be used.

Milton Sills
Popular leading man who plays opposite Viola Dana in Metro's "Eliza Comes to Stay."

Baker Made Associate Editor.

Graham Baker, who for some time has been assistant editor of Vitagraph productions, has been advanced to associate editor. George Randolph Chester is editor in chief. Mr. Baker has written several original plays and has also been exceedingly successful in preparing scenarios and continuties. Mr. Baker's new duties will include the selection of the stories for the stars and the handling of the continuities for them.

Niblo Makes Enviable Mark as Ince Director

WHEN Thomas H. Ince graduated Fred Niblo from the stage to his present capacity as director for the Ince productions starring Enid Bennett, the farsighted Mr. Ince had several good reasons to believe that his protege would soon develop into one of filmdom's ranking geniuses of screencraft. That Mr. Ince's judgment was well placed in this instance is evidenced by Mr. Niblo's record since joining the Thomas H. Ince forces less than two years ago.

During a period of eighteen months, Mr. Niblo is credited with having made fourteen feature productions, two of which are special productions with all-star casts. This record, while in itself worthy of particular praise, is made all the more significant in view of the fact that every one of the fourteen pictures is conceded to be a success.

In the spring of 1918, Mr. Niblo was assigned by Mr. Ince to direct Enid Bennett in "The Marriage Ring." It was Mr. Niblo's first actual experience behind the megaphone and the spark of ambition and energy worked overtime in supplying the confidence and concentration necessary to the achievement of success.

Following "The Marriage Ring" he directed all successive Enid Bennett productions.

Mr. Niblo also directed the new Thomas H. Ince special production, "Dangerous Hours," and, by arrangement with Mr. Ince, the J. Parker Read, Jr., special attraction, "Sex," in which, Louise Glaum is starred.

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING was given a close-up view of the making of moving pictures during his visit to Los Angeles, January 26, as the guest of Abraham Lehr, vice president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

General Pershing spent two hours inspecting the Goldwyn studios at Culver City after being welcomed by former service men employed at the studio. He saw noted stars of the film world at work before the camera in scenes for forthcoming productions, inspected the many permanent sets on the lot and watched with interest the making of a big street scene for Gertrude Atherton's "Tower of Ivory," one of the Goldwyn Eminent Authors productions.

Gold Key for Pershing.

In the afternoon General Pershing was speaker at a mass meeting of former service men at Exposition Park. While making his address the Goldwyn airship flew over the speakers and dropped silk parachutes from which hung a bouquet of flowers and a solid gold key bearing the inscription: "General John J. Pershing Welcome to the Goldwyn Studio, January 26, 1920." One of the general's aides caught the parachute and presented the key to him.

Following the ceremony at the Park the general and his staff were escorted to the studios. American flags and bunting covering the entrance to the studios met Pershing's eye. He was taken into the administration building to Mr. Lehr's private office where Mary Roberts Rinehart and Mabel Normand assisted on the reception committee. When the visitors started on their inspection trip under the direction of Mr. Lehr the general found the Goldwyn former service men lined up near the administration building with the Goldwyn band of thirty-five pieces.

General Sees Scenes Made.

Pershing was taken to see Pauline Frederick, who, under the direction of Frank Lloyd, was making a scene for "Roads of Destiny," Channing Pollock's version of the O. Henry story. After the visitors had an opportunity to see the actress at work, the scene was stopped and Miss Frederick stepped out to meet the general and his staff. It was a touch of France that the General saw next. He smiled as he caught a glimpse of a narrow little street in a French town built for use in Geraldine Farrar's "The Woman and the Puppet."

Then the party was taken to see the all star cast headed by Wyndham Standing in a scene from "Earth Bound," and Eminent Authors Production from the pen of Basil King being made under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter.

Sees $40,000 Street.

The elaborate Russian street built at a cost of $40,000 was next shown, after which the general was taken to see how a ship sinks for moving pictures. This was the scene from "The Tower of Ivory." It had been "shot" some time before but was reacted to give Pershing an opportunity to studying the mechanical end of picture making.

Later the visitors inspected Nome Street for Alaskan scenes and were shown an exact reproduction of Lexington, Ky., in 1850, as it was built at a cost of $20,000 for the film production of John Fox's "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

Mail Four-Page Folders on "The Cinema Murder"

IN all the big publicity and advertising campaign which is now being carried on to focus the attention of exhibitors and public alike on Cosmopolitan Productions' latest release with Marion Davies, "The Cinema Murder," a Paramount Artcraft picture, one of the cleverest and most effective ideas is the attractive four-page folder.

One million of them are being used to circularize the country. Every exhibitor and theatre manager in the country has been sent at least one, and to make sure that he gets it a duplicate copy has been inserted between the pages of a recent number of Famous Players-Lasky's "Progress-Advance," which is sent to every theatre in the United States and Canada. A copy also has been sent to every newspaper and periodical in North America, and many papers have printed stories about the unusual advertising folder.

Done in Million Lots.

As a further stimulant, copies of the folder have been sent to every club, society, organization, etc., of which there is any record, and letters are coming in from them thanking Cosmopolitan Productions for bringing to their attention the value of "The Cinema Murder" as an entertainment. Because "The Cinema Murder" is an interesting and vital subject in the study of psychology, all the high schools, academies and colleges in the country have also been circularized.

The folder is nine inches by seven inches in size. It is of a good quality of coated stock. The front cover is devoted to a drawing showing a woman's arm holding a mirror. Underneath are the words: "The face in the mirror attracts thousands." The inside pages are devoted to a reproduction of Baron de Meyer's painting of Marion Davies as "Miss Cleopatra," which was published in Hearst's Magazine for January.

Splendid Work on Airplane Photography

The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, is putting out a really remarkable work on airplane photography by Herbert E. Ives, major, aviation section, Signal Officers' Reserve Section, United States Army. The book contains 422 pages and 208 illustrations. It is the most complete work of its kind we have ever seen and most certainly deserves a place in the library of anyone at all interested in the subject. The subject is dealt with exhaustively and in all its many phases. One of the many remarkably interesting photographs shown is that of an oil patch on the water indicating the success of a depth charge fired by the destroyer in the center of the aforesaid patch.

Gardner Hunting Tells Why Producers Change Titles of Books and Plays

THE question of "Why do producers of motion pictures change the title of the story or play when they produce it in picture form?" has been the cause of a great deal of comment in the daily newspapers.

An interview with Gardner Hunting, production editor of the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, throws some light on the problem and explains that it is a matter of much consideration rather than of whim or passing fancy.

"When an author selects a title for his story," said Mr. Hunting, "he does not necessarily select the best one to interest the mass. He selects the title best suited to the story. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has its entire organization work together on the matter of main titles. Their effort is concentrated upon selecting a title that will indicate to the mass the character of the story and at the same time catch their interest. The ideal title does not depart from the spirit of the original and wherever possible will be coupled with the original.

Why Titles Are Changed.

"The title of the play, 'The Copperhead' was retained in the picture version. This title was originally selected by Augustus Thomas when he made the adaptation of the play from the story written by Frederick Landis, which was called 'The Glory of His Country.' The title selected by Mr. Thomas is superior, mainly because it is shorter and better adapted to display in electric lights.

"Among the most recent changes made in titles was that of 'Billeted,' the play by F. Tennyson Jesse and H. M. Harwood, which was successfully presented in New York. This was changed to 'The Misleading Widow' for the reason that under the original title it might be considered a war play, which it was not, and it was released at the time war plays were going out of vogue. 'We Can't Be as Bad as All That' was the name of the original play by Henry Arthur Jones, which was changed to 'A Society Exile' for the reason that the name was too long for advertising in electric lights outside the theatre. 'The Malefactor' by E. Phillips Oppenheim was changed to 'The Test of Honor' because the original title would turn people away from the theatre. Who wants to see a malefactor as a hero and that was what the first title implied. 'The See Saw' by Sophie Kerr was changed to 'The Invisible Bond' because the latter was believed to be a more interesting name, and 'Miss Antique,' the novelette by Nalbro Bartley, was changed to 'The Amateur Wife' for the purpose of catching popular interest at once.

Process Reversed.

"An interesting sidelight was furnished recently when the usual process was reversed. A picture was produced with Billie Burke and titled 'Wanted—a Husband.' The adaptation was made from a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams, which had not as yet been published in book form. The title selected by him for the magazine story was 'Enter D'arcy.' Before the book went to press he decided that the title we chose for the picture, 'Wanted—a Husband,' would better fit the story, so he changed the name of the story to that of the motion picture." Thus, it will be observed, there are frequently good reasons for changes.

Larry Semon's New Comedy Contains a Logical Plot

LARRY SEMON has finished his first comedy under his new Vitagraph contract, and it typifies, in the opinion of W. S. Smith, manager of the Hollywood studios, the effort of his company to have all comedes founded on a logical theme, regardless of how much satire and burlesque are necessary to carry out the plot. It is called "The Grocery Clerk."

"The day of the aimless is over," says Mr. Smith. "A story, no matter how simple, if carried out naturally amid the comic situations, immeasurably adds to the production's value as a medium of entertainment. We are satisfied that better comedies can be produced by faithfully following a plot that is not overdrawn. Enough situations can happen naturally without attempting to force laughs through a meaningless idea. Therefore, Vitagraph has now adopted the plan with its three comedy companies of preparing their productions as carefully beforehand as is done with dramatic releases. The first results have fully warranted the extreme effort."

Mr. Semon is now busy on another comedy which involves many dangerous scenes on the top of tall building in Los Angeles.

"Temporary Wife" Prints Go to Hodkinson Branches

TRULY all star is the cast selected by Joseph Levering, a new and strong producing factor for the presentation of his initial feature, "His Temporary Wife," by Robert Ames Bennet, scheduled for release in mid-February by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and prints of which were shipped to all Hodkinson branches this week. Produced under the direction of Mr. Levering, "His Temporary Wife," boasts this array: Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong, W. T. Carleton and several other notables.

Miss De Remer, for years a prominent Ziegfeld Follies girl and later a star in musical comedies, has enjoyed pronounced success on the screen following her overnight triumph as the star of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block."

Few players of the stage and screen are as prominent in the public eye as Edmund Breese, an actor of countless successes.

Mary Boland, as popular in pictures as she is on the speaking stage, and now appearing in Booth Tarkington's stage success, "Clarence," is well cast in "His Temporary Wife."

Eugene Strong, one of the screen's popular leading men, has a role in the Levering production that gives his talents thorough test.

W. T. Carleton, for forty years a leading operatic baritone and now one of the best character actors in pictures, contributes a sparkling performance to the picture.

Goldwyn Secures Rights to Great Scotch Comedy

A FAMOUS play dealing with Scotch character, successful from an artistic and popular standpoint, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. For a number of years motion picture producers have sought the rights to this stage triumph, but without avail until last week. The amount paid for the photoplay rights is not disclosed, but the figure is said to be high.

The Shuberts and William A. Brady were associated in the stage production of "Bunty Pulls the Strings" at the Comedy Theatre, New York, October 10, 1911, and for many months thereafter the producers and Cleveland Moffat, the author, reaped large profits from a run that was one of the sensations of the season. Hailed as a unique contribution to the stage of this country, Mr. Moffat's play started a vogue of comedies, with Scotland as a background.

"Bunty Pulls the Strings" was received with equal acclaim in other large cities. The reputation of Molly Pearson was permanently established after her inimitable portrayal of Bunty, who was a past-mistress of the art of "pulling the strings," in other words, of directing the actions of those with whom she came in contact. Supporting Miss Pearson was a company of Scotch and English players.

While "Bunty Pulls the Strings" is essentially a play of character, and appeals by reason of its charm and simplicity, there is enough action to assure an interesting photoplay story of the highest artistic merit. It is not announced what star will be presented in the leading role.

Bessie Barriscale Film Enjoys Wide Publicity

ADDED impetus is given the great start which "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," Bessie Barriscale's new picture, is enjoying, through the wide publication over the country of the Kathleen Norris novel, upon which the production is based, in dozens of daily newspapers. When Miss Barriscale in her own studio produced this novel for Robertson-Cole, she felt sure of its great appeal to women, and first showings of the picture bear out her judgment.

"The Luck of Geraldine Laird" originally was published in the Pictorial Review serially. Then it appeared in book form, and now, coincident with the production of the film, the story is being given newspaper publication. The use of the story in so many different forms is proof of the soundness of its theme and of its appeal to women.

In this latest of a series of three Kathleen Norris novels which she picturized, Miss Barriscale employed a new director, Edwin Sloman, who took advantage of the many opportunities which the story furnishes.

Miss Barriscale is supported by a cast notable for its diversity and its numbers, including Niles Welch, Dorcas Matthews, William Mong, Mary Jane Irving, Theo-Alice Carpenter, child actresses; Rosetta Marstini, Nannine Wright, Boyd Irwin, Maggie Halloway Fisher, George Hall, Siska Swanson and Ashton Dearholt.

Burr McIntosh Returns.

After a year's absence from the screen, Burr McIntosh, well known as an actor, author and photographer, is now at work before the camera in Leah Baird's new starring vehicle, "Cinthia-of-the-Minute," by Louis Joseph Vance, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution. And he drew no simple assignment for his return to the screen, his part in the Vance story being second only to that of Miss Baird, whom he accompanied on her trip to Florida recently.

United Announces Its Schedule of Releases for Next Three Months

WITH the settling of all details relative to the recent United-Triangle-Lynch deals, the taking over of the Triangle and Lynch exchanges and the Triangle pictures by United, the organization now announces an elaborate releasing schedule for the next few months.

This schedule will see a United feature released about every second week, a Triangle recreated play every second week, and a two-reel recreated Keystone Comedy every second week. In addition, there will be released a two-reel Cuckoo Comedy every fourth week and a two-reel Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy every fourth week. Thus there will be released through the United Picture Exchanges a two-reel comedy every week and five features every six weeks.

This releasing schedule goes into effect on February 15, when "Tiger Girl," a recreated Triangle play with Lillian Gish and Roszika Dolly, is to be published together with "His Day of Doom," a one-reel Triangle comedy. On February 22 United's filmization of Alexander Dumas' "The Corsican Brothers," starring Dustin Farnum, will be released with "Bombs and Brides," a two-reel Keystone Comedy in which Charlie Murray, Mary Thruman and Louise Fazenda are the featured players.

A Dorothy Dalton Release.

February 29 is the date set for the releasing of "The Hick," a recreated Triangle play starring Charles Ray and Bessie Barriscale. "Ball Bearing But Hard Running," a Cuckoo Comedy with Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston, will be released on the same date. Following this, on March 7, "The Worst of Friends," a two-reel Keystone Comedy, starring Weber and Fields, will be issued.

On March 14, "Female of the Species," with Dorothy Dalton, a Triangle recreated play, and a two-reel Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy will be released. On March 21, "Women Men Forget," starring Mollie King, supported by Frank Mills and Edward Langford, will be the release, together with another two-reel Keystone Comedy.

"The Iron Strain," with Dustin Farnum and Louise Glaum, a Triangle recreated play, and a two-reel Cuckoo Comedy, title of which will be announced later, are to be released on March 28. April 4 a two-reel Keystone will be issued and on April 11 a Triangle recreated play and a two-reel Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy are scheduled to be released.

April 18 is the date set for the publication of "The Eternal Mother," in which Florence Reed, United's emotional star, will appear. A two-reel Keystone Comedy is to be released on the same date.

This gives United an impressive schedule of releases through February, March and April.

New Mutt and Jeff Cartoon.

Captain Bud Fisher, father of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, has scoured the country for telephonic comedy situations. The funniest of the wire experiences is included in "I'm Ringing Your Party," which will be released by William Fox this month.

Undoubtedly some of the most comical experiences of the day have occurred in calling a telephone number. It was the personal experiences of Captain Fisher that inspired him in the cartoon, "I'm Ringing Your Party."

From beginning to end this new cartoon is packed with hilarity, and even the confirmed grouch who tells all telephone operators it shouldn't take an hour to get a wrong number, will be compelled to laugh.

Selznick Reports Show Big January Business

THERE is every evidence from reports received in the Selznick home offices that the month of January was the banner month for the various Selznick enterprises. Every report indicated not only an increase in business but the prospects of even greater business for the remainder of the year. Every member of the Selznick organization is working at high speed, especially the salesmen.

"A Regular Girl" was the feature attraction of the Boston Theatre's Sixty-sixth anniversary and Boston newspapers devoted some seven columns during the week to the praise of the Elsie Janis production. In exploiting this picture in Syracuse the Select Buffalo exploitation department had a chance to give the Prizma productions a boost. Every theatre that ran "A Regular Girl" also showed a Prizma subject and a tie-up with the marine corps was effected by running a slide.

The Detroit branch office reports an increase in the sales of the Prizma subjects and points out that the two leading theatres of Detroit, the Broadway Strand and the Washington, both showed Prizma subjects last week.

Manager Siegel of the New York exchange states that the initial Americanization subject, "The Land of Opportunity," is booked solid in his territory.

Manager J. U. McCormick of the Washington Select exchange recently visited the smaller towns in his territory to verify the report that the Elaine Hammerstein production, "The Country Cousin," was making a record. He not only found this to be true but expresses the opinion that the Elaine Hammerstein productions will be among his best sellers from now on. Mr. McCormick also reports that "The Broken Melody" is meeting with unusual success.

Van Loan Sells Scenario to Tourneur.

H. H. Van Loan, who is well known as a scenario writer, has achieved a lifelong ambition in the sale of a scenario to Maurice Tourneur which will be produced as a Paramount Artcraft production. The name of the story is "The Great Redeemer."

The story has been described as a western with a plot entirely different from anything Maurice Tourneur has ever done. Production work will be commenced within a few weeks.

Loew Books "Chains of Evidence."

The Hallmark Pictures Corporation's late release on the Famous Directors Series, "Chains of Evidence," co-starring Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell and Anna Lehr, produced under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald, has been booked over the Loew Circuit of theatres in Greater New York, opening at Loew's New York Theatre, January 30. This is the second consecutive week that a Hallmark release has played in this theatre.

Will Rogers Triumphs Again in Latest Comedy

WILL ROGERS, in his latest Goldwyn comedy, "Water, Water, Everywhere," by W. R. Leighton, scored a triumph at the Strand Theatre, New York, last week. Box office reports during the early days of the week showed that the business attracted by this picture, the third of the Rogers' productions since he became a Goldwyn star, was far above normal and everything points to a record-breaking engagement.

The rise of Will Rogers during his comparatively brief career on the screen has been phenomenal, and the reception accorded "Water, Water, Everywhere" is another indication that he is destined soon to become one of the most popular players ever developed in motion pictures. Since the release of "Almost a Husband," and more recently "Jubilo," there has been a steady demand for the next Rogers' production.

Judging from the reviews in the New York dailies on the morning after the first showing at the Strand, and the enthusiasm of the audience, "Water, Water, Everywhere" will equal the record of the two earlier releases. Like "Almost a Husband" and "Jubilo" it is a combination of comedy and drama with the former predominating. The action is laid in a small western mining town and concerns the effect of prohibition on the life of the community.

Clarence Badger, who also directed the previous Rogers' pictures, is responsible for "Water, Water, Everywhere." In the cast are such well known players as Lydia Yeamans Titus and Lillian Langdon.

Prints of Dempsey Serial Arrive.

A print of the first episode of the new Pathe serial, "Dare Devil Jack," in which Jack Dempsey is starred, arrived at the New York office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and was screened at a special showing for officials of the concern.

After viewing the three reels which make up the intial chapter of the serial the heads of the various departments expressed the keenest satisfaction. To quote verbatim, the first episode of "Dare Devil Jack" in the opinion of the Pathe officials is a "knockout." The release date of "Dare Devil Jack" is set for February 15.

Sells Rights to "Blind Husbands."

Universal has just sold the United Kingdom rights to "Blind Husbands" to E. Wertheimer of London. The company has also sold the rights to Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay for "The Right to Happiness" to Mr. Gaede, of the American Products Exchange.

"Overland Red" Is First Release of Universal's "S. R. O. Twelve" Series

UNIVERSAL announces a new series of pictures to be known as the "S. R. O. 12." This is in keeping with its policy of having a regural release program made up of series of pictures. The present series, which will soon be exhausted, is called the "Big Money Twelve," and the series preceding that the "Big Twelve."

The first release on the new program is billed for March 22 and is "Overland Red," featuring Harry Carey in a story by H. H. Knibbs under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. The series is concluded on June 28 with "A Tokio Siren," from the story by Gwendolyn Logan entitled "Sayonara." Rolin Sturgeon directs Tsuru Aoki in this production.

"Burnt Wings" Comes Third.

The other ten productions on the list are as follows: March 29, "Burnt Wings," with Frank Mayo and Josephine Hill, from Bayard Veiller's story, "The Primrose Path"; direction of Christy Cabanne.

April 5, "The Road to Divorce," directed by Philip Rosen, starring Mary MacLaren in the story by J. G. Alexander.

April 19, Edith Roberts in "The Daring Duchess," supported by Kathleen Kirkham, Harold Miller, Rudolph Christians, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Leonard Clapham; direction of Harry Franklin.

April 26, Frank Mayo in "The Girl in No. 29," from the story, "The Girl in the Mirror" by Elizabeth Jordan, directed by Jack Ford and featuring Clair Anderson, Elinor Fair, Ray Ripley, Arthur Hoyt and Bull Montana.

May 24, Tsuru Aoki under direction of William C. Dowlen in "Locked Lips," a screen version of the story, "Blossom," written by Clifford Howard, featuring Stanhope Wheatcroft, Magda Lane and Jack Abbey.

May 31, a Jewel release featuring Edith Roberts, title of which has not as yet been announced.

June 14, a Harry Carey picture entited "Black Sheep."

June 21, the first of the Lyons and Moran five-reel productions, "Everything But the Truth," from the magazine story by Edgar Franklin, featuring Anna Cornwall and Katherine Lewis.

George to Direct "Prince of Pines."

An elaborate production is scheduled for Selznick Pictures in "Prince of Pines," a melodrama of the North Woods, which was purchased recently by Myron Selznick, announcement of which was made from the Selznick offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Burton George has been chosen to direct the production.

The interiors will be made at the Selznick Fort Lee studios, while the exteriors will be shot at various locations in the Northwest. The cast has not yet been selected, but it is announced that there are six important role in the story.

R. Cecil Smith, of the Selznick scenario department, adapted "The Prince of Pines" to the screen from the Willard Mack story and is also writing the continuity.

"Modern Salome" Shows Greenwich Village Life

GREENWICH VILLAGE, that nondescript, interesting and artistic community in New York City, has "broken into" several motion pictures recently, but seldom has it been so interestingly portrayed as in "A Modern Salome," Hope Hampton's initial independent production, which will be released through Metro Pictures Corporation in the near future.

At the start of this story, which is based on Oscar Wilde's famous dramatic poem, "Salome," which was written and directed by Leonce Perret, the heroine lives with her father, a talented, but improvident painter, in the village, and the scenes show one of the picturesque large ateliers of that district. Several interesting outdoor scenes are also shown, revealing the famous Washington Mews and the other picturesque alleys along which renowned artists have their studios.

At the same time "A Modern Salome" shows not only the Greenwich Village section of New York City, but includes shots of numerous interesting localities, among them the most fashionable section of Riverside Drive.

In "A Modern Salome," which was put on in lavish fashion by Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., Miss Hampton makes her bow as a star. Her supporting cast includes Wyndham and Percy Standing, Sidney L. Mason, Arthur Donaldson and Agnes Ayres.

Posters That Tell a Story.

The poster which best does the work for which it is intended is the one that faithfully carries with it the atmosphere of the photoplay, and a set of posters should give some easy clue to the exact nature of the story which has been adapted to the screen. This the American has successfully accomplished in "The Valley of Tomorrow." These posters show, first of all, a virile Western drama, action which required the height and depth of Lake Tahoe's setting in the High Sierras, where Emmett J. Flynn handled the megaphone. The six-sheet groups the principal actors in an emotional scene, and the one-sheet, featuring William Russell and Mary Thurman, gives a key to the love note.

Seadler with Kane Corporation.

Silas Frank Seadler has resigned from the Realart publicity staff to take over similar duties with the newly organized Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. Mr. Seadler has been active in various phases of publicity, especially exploitation. Prior to his Realart connections he was associated with Charles Reed Jones in a free lance publicity organization.

Tauszky Heads Art Department.

D. Anthony Tauszky has been installed in charge of the two-story building constructed at the Metro studios in Hollywood for the art title department. Five artists' studios, two lettering shops, and a number of storerooms are in the building.

Two Vitagraph Pictures on Broadway.

Two of Vitagraph's special two-reel subjects are being shown on Broadway this week at two of the biggest motion picture theatres. "A Call Loan," a stirring episode of the great West, based on the story of the same name by O. Henry, is at the Strand, and "The Grocery Clerk," Larry Semon's latest comedy, is at the Capitol.

Metro Awards Seven Exchange Men Bonuses for Making Sales Records

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro pictures Corporation, that one Metro district manager and six branch managers have been awarded cash bonuses for the best showing on volume of new business done during the year 1919. The seven individual prizes total up to a very substantial figure. The amounts of the awards were apportioned on a percentage of business done in each exchange.

The men to receive bonuses are H. Lustig, district manager in southern California, with offices in Los Angeles; W. C. Bachmeyer, who is both branch and district manager at Cincinnati; B. F. Rosenberg, now in Denver, but until recently in charge of the Metro exchage in Salt Lake City; Fred W. Voight, of San Francisco; H. L. Haldeman, of Kansas City; A. Fischer, of Minneapolis, and C. H. Kessnich, of Atlanta.

Atkinson Made Announcement.

Mr. Atkinson's duties bring him in the closest touch, perhaps, of all the Metro executives with the salesmen of the Metro distributing organization. At the yeearly convention of the company's branch managers, held at the Hotel Astor, New York, early last summer, Mr. Atkinson announced that Metro at the end of the year would pay bonuses on the largest percentage of increase in business piled up by six branch managers, and the best record by any one of the district managers. This announcement was made approximately at the time when Metro discontinued its program productions in favor of the policy of "fewer and better" pictures now in successful operation.

The preliminary statement showed the various managers only a small promise of what has since been accomplished. At that time "Lombardi, Ltd.," by the Hattons; "Fair and Warmer," by Avery Hopwood; "Please Get Married," by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne; five big Drury Lane melodramas and "The Right of Way" had been obtained for Metro-Screen Classic production.

Award Based on Three Films.

The purpose of the contest was to stimulate rivalry in putting over "fewer and better" pictures. Working on the quality of productions promised by more time, the perfection of facilities at the Hollywood studios and the big book and stage successes purchased, the various managers went to the job with a rush and the first round consisting of Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd.," May Allison in "Fair and Warmer" and Viola Dana in "Please Get Married" scored a clean-up for the exhibitors and the company.

It was substantially these three productions that brought in the percentage of increase upon which the bonus award was based. The second round of pictures, which included Alice Lake in "Should a Woman Tell," Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," May Allison in "The Walk-Offs," Viola Dana in "The Willow Tree" and the Taylor Holmes production, "Nothing But the Truth" were not ready until December or early in January, and did not figure in the award except as advance booking attractions which many exhibitors snapped up on the strength of their success with the first round.

To each of the seven men receiving the bonuses General Manager Atkinson sent a personal letter of thanks in addition to the check rewarding their business achievements. In each case he complimented the Metroites for their unvarying enthusiasm and spirit of perfect loyalty to Metro's best interests.

Tom Mix Makes Four-Story Plunge in "The Cyclone"

DESPITE the familiarity with realism of a high order which marks motion picture production today—there is one scene in particular in William Fox's latest Tom Mix picture, "The Cyclone," just released, the construction of which is deserving of special mention.

When Director Cliff Smith made arrangements for the filming of the production he consulted some of the best contractors in the vicinity of Mixville, Cal., regarding the erection of a building that was to house a Chinese den. Mix had to stage the biggest thrill of the picture in this building.

The "big scene" comes as a climax to the production, and depicts Tom Mix dashing into the building on horseback in search of his sweetheart. The horse gallops up four flights of stairs to the roof, and then suddenly reeling with Mix still on his back plunges first through the roof as this gives way under the weight, then through three floors as each floor gives way successively. Horse and rider finally crash into the basement where Mix rescues his sweetheart from a smuggler's chief.

Tom Mix has performed innumerable stunts of daring before the camera which have earned for him the title of "the daredevil of the screen," but he declares that the four-story plunge "was his biggest" yet. However, this is only one of a series of breath takers that make the progress of the story.

Continuity Writers Sign Contract with Selznick

A LONG term contract was signed this week by Myron Selznick, R. Cecil Smith and Ella Stuart Carson, which is said to involve the largest financial consideration ever made for the service of continuity writers on a staff and which assures the Selznick organization of the exclusive services of the Smiths for a long time.

Mr. Smith and Miss Carson have been matrimonial as well as business partners for a number of years, and are regarded as among the most brilliant writers of continuity in the business. They won their reputation on the West Coast, having been Thomas Ince's stars, afterward going with Ince to Triangle, and remaining with his forces when Ince left the Triangle organization.

When John Lynch, who also was formerly with Ince, came east last summer to head the Selznick scenario department, he brought Mr. Smith and Miss Carson with him. They always write together, signing their names separately on alternate scrips. Their work is notable for imagination, swift action and unusual situations.

Pathe to Release Harold Lloyd's "His Royal Slyness" February 8

"HIS Royal Slyness," the most pretentious of Harold Lloyd's new series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, is announced for release by Pathe on February 8. This is the fourth release of the new Lloyd series, its predecessors being "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids" and "From Hand to Mouth," the last of which has been hailed as the most fascinating of the trio.

In an effort to make the Lloyd comedies the peer of any on the market, Hal E. Roach, head of the Rolin Film Company, has been liberal in his expenditure on production. With "His Royal Slyness" he was even more generous, and the technical production was made on a scale that rivals the highest type of five-reel features. Sets costing many thousands of dollars were erected in the Rolin studio just for this one picture.

The same company that rendered Lloyd such admirable support in his last multiple reel release, "From Hand to Mouth," appears with him in "His Royal Slyness." "Snub" Pollard and Mildred Davis are the leading factors in the support.

Lloyd Has "Double."

A surprise is in store for exhibitors and public alike, in the fourth Lloyd picture, in the introduction of a player who so closely resembles the great young comedian as to be virtually his counterpart. There are some who will insist that Lloyd plays a dual role, but the "double" is none other than the star's own brother.

There is no doubt that Lloyd has met every expectation in his new series of two-reelers. Not a day passes that Pathe does not receive some unusual commendation of the young comedian's efforts. His pictures are playing in the finest theatres in the United States and pleasing audiences.

A typical criticism comes from B. W. Brentlinger, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Terre Haute, who recently wrote Pathe as follows: "I think the Lloyd comedies the best that have ever been in this house. His comedies keep the house roaring from beginning to end. There is no doubt that Lloyd is a clever comedian—in fact, the cleverest comedian on the screen to-day. We are anxiously looking forward to his next release."

Skouras Enthusiastic.

Spyros P. Skouras, of Skouras Brothers, owners of the West End Lyric, Lyric Skydome, Crystal Airdome, Shaw Theatre, Lyric Theatre, Olympic Theatre and the Arsenal, in St. Louis writes: "I have made arrangements to use the Harold Lloyd comedies in all of our houses. The first release, 'Bumping Into Broadway,' started its first run at the West End Lyric and went over in great shape. The picture pleased everybody and got us additional money at the box office. It is our intention to exploit the Lloyd comedies as much as possible."

Jack Levering, a veteran of the A. E. F., who was decorated by King George for bravery under fire, is cast as Joe, the eugenically perfect chauffeur, in the Taylor Holmes production "The Very Idea," an adaptation of the highly successful stage farce by William Le Baron. The company is now at Miami.

On his return from France, Lieut. Levering resumed his work before the camera, becoming leading man for Helen Holmes in her new serial, "The Fatal Fortune."

Taylor Holmes of course plays the role of Gilbert Goodhue. Virginia Valli is Mrs. Goodhue and Betty Ross Clarke, the maid Norah. Others in the cast are Jean Martindale, Jean Robb, Edward Lester, Fay Marbe and Beorge Cooper, S. E. V. Taylor scenarioized "The Very Idea" and it is being directed by Lawrence Windom. Metro will distribute it.

Kansas City Exchanges Hard Hit by Influenza

THE influenza epidemic in Kansas City has caused havoc among the film exchanges. In a number of offices half the force is home sick with the disease and in several instances the heads of the office are off duty for the same reason. In many cases temporary help was necessary to keep things moving until the recovery of regular employes.

F. F. Nine, branch manager of Vitagraph, Inc., was one of the victims, but he is improving and probably will be sufficiently recovered to resume his duties in a short time. In the same office, two stenographers, a bill clerk, bookkeeper, assistant booker, and three film inspectors were sick at the same time.

P. A. Block, branch manager of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, also is sick with the disease. His place is being filled temporarily by Felix Mendlessohn, home office representative.

Other offices have been affected to some extent by the epidemic, and there is scarcely an exchange that has escaped without a single member of the organization having the "flu."

Lesser Is Enthusiastic Over First Beban Film

SOL LESSER is confident that "One Man in a Million," the first George Beban picture to appear under his banner, will establish a high water mark in popular appeal. "It is an exquisite love story with a beautiful theme, and the women and children especially, are going to love the picture," says Mr. Lesser.

George Beban, Jr. (Bob White) and his great St. Bernard dog "Snookums" will score heavily with the children, while the double romance of George Beban, Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Whitlock and Irene Rich will strike a new note in screen love stories. There is not a suggestive note in the play.

"There are also many wonderful gowns, professional models wearing some costing thousands of dollars, in a number of scenes. There is also a beautiful theme of the love of a boy for a dog, and a dog for a boy. It is a drama of love and laughter, that is beautiful, sweet and wholesome.

"The Son of Wallingford" Coming.

"The Son of Wallingford," the novel which is now in the process of writing by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, and which will a little later be produced by Vitagraph as a photoplay feature, is considered by the authors to be the most important work of their busy career. The story of the conflict of heredities in the person of this son of a crooked father and an honest mother, has been in contemplation by the author of "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" for more than ten years.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester will first write the story of young Wallingford as a novel. It will be published as a serial in one of the important magazines and later put out in book form. Co-incident with the publication of the final instalment as a serial, it will be released as a special feature by Vitagraph.

Stuart Holmes in Leonard Serial.

Stuart Holmes, one of the best known villain types of the picture drama, is now working in chief support of Benny Leonard in the Champ's new serial, "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell and produced by Ascher Enterprises, Inc., and Frank G. Hall under the direction of J. Gordon Cooper and Wally Van. Mr. Holmes has the role of Denton Druce, profligate son of a banker.

Changes in Universal Field Staff.

Universal announces the following changes: J. H. Calvert has been appointed manager of Kansas City, replacing W. R. Wilkerson. H. F. Lefholtz has been appointed manager of Omaha, replacing J. H. Calvert. Edgar Haines has been appointed manager of our Des Moines office, replacing F. H. Frisch.

Goldwyn Leases Cincinnati Quarters

The lease of 3,300 square feet of space to the Goldwyn Corporation makes that organization another resident of the Film Building, Cincinnati. Goldwyn pays $4,200 annually, under their lease, for that much of the third floor. Other tenants include Paramount, Realart, First National, Universal, Select, Republic and United Theatres Equipment Company.

Must Inject Personality Into Your Theatre To Be Really Successful

By Edward L. Hyman

AN operating room minus machine-like precision irritates your patron, gives you nervous dyspepsia and often eventually ends in the theatre being remodelled into a garage.

You've got to have it!

But when you turn the job of managing your house into a cut and dried proposition and lock out individuality and personality you are going to hit the down grade so fast that efficiency can't avert the smash-up.

Brown of the X.... Theatre said to me:

"Ed, I've got my work systematized so that I can leave my house at eight o'clock every night and things will skate along fine. You kill the job, living at the place day and night."

Now Brown may be right, and understand that I am not trying to create the impression that I work harder than any other exhibitor. Yet, I do think that I study my theatre, patrons and the market more closely than hundreds of exhibitors who are wondering why they don't move up.

Why Theatres Run Down.

Machine-made amusement has been the cause of ninety per cent. of the failures among exhibitors.

And, the best machine in the world won't run along long with the engineer away.

Seeing that the house opens on time and closes O. K. with a few hours given now and then for booking, isn't going to keep the public agog over the original things you don't spring in the way of picture and musical novelties.

The physician and surgeon nowadays who heads up his profession is the one who doesn't bank entirely on his past experience—but is he who studies and studies and never lets up.

A theatre manager is the doctor who prescribes the amusement for minds that are wearied and sick with the crash and grind of work and worry. When h ceases studying his patient he loses his ability to prescribe correctly.

Must Develop Personality.

In addition to that, it is the doctor with the personality who often makes you feel better. The atmosphere he creates when he comes into the sick room generally does more to speed you along to health than the pills he doles out.

The same thing applies to the film theatre manager. If you haven't the ability to inject some warmth, some originality into your house and your program the show you offer can't be nearly half so effective. Machine-made amusement as a rule won't cure blues and a grouch.

The fellow who gives his job superficial attention just can't put it over. Passing the buck on those elemental things of showmanship to assistants rarely meets with success although I decry the one-man organization.

Human Nature Same All Over.

The basic principles of human nature, it seems to me from observation, are the same in every section of the country. I do not presume to be a know-all authority, but am merely citing my views as they accrue from my experience with the public as manager of theatres and groups of theatres in the south, north, east and west.

As I stated, the human element must be paramount in theatre entertainment, especially in houses featuring films and music.

When I took an appointment to a magnificent house with extremely large orchestra, fellow managers assured me that I would have easy sailing for the reason that the new large house would draw the crowds.

I disagreed with them and found that hadn't I rooted out the machine-like method of providing shows, that had been previously inaugurated I would have died there. The fashionable audiences able to pay a high admission fee wanted just as much of the homelike, personal contact atmosphere as did my patrons in the neighborhood house that I once managed.

Of course in a house like the Strand metropolitan ideas and metropolitan scope must be ever expressed. But the personality that is injected into the life of the Brooklyn Strand by its policy, its pictures, its music, its owners and to some extent perhaps by me, will go toward keeping it a leader among playhouses.

Trade Papers Give Ideas.

No theatre in the world is too magnificent or too large to be able to bar out the human element which has as its foundation your originality, personality, showmanship, as well as that of your colleagues.

And your staff won't carry the enthusiasm needed unless you yourself live it and exude it.

Many of the ideas that I have been given credit for by my patrons can be attributed to the trade paper from which I gleaned it. And the man who reads them won't have a machine-made plan of administration.

Universal Lists Mayo's "The Peddler of Lies"

UNIVERSAL announces the release of another Frank Mayo picture for March 1. "The Peddler of Lies" will be the title for his latest photoplay, in which he co-stars with Ora Carew. Special interest is attached to the production, which was directed by William C. Dowlan, as it is a screen version of Henry C. Rowland's story "The Pedlar," with which millions of readers became acquainted through the Saturday Evening Post.

The original story is followed closely and all the atmosphere of the printed novel is retained in the film. The plot centers about the theft of a great jewel.

In the role of Clamp, the peddler, Frank Mayo gives one of his clean cut characterizations, carrying out the illusion of the itinerant merchant with his quaint manner and jovial humor. Ora Carew, who shares the stellar honors, in the role of Diana Kirkland, first likes him, then despises him, and when the truth is revealed, learns to love him.

Picking Cast for "Determination."

The United States Photoplay Corporation on January 30 closed a contract with William H. Turner, one of America's foremost character actors, to be cast in "Determination" in the part of Hicks, the family butler. The author, Capt. F. F. Stoll, has had over 100 applications for this particular part.

Turner has been screened in 150 different releases. He is a member of New York's famous Green Room Club and in Hicks, the family butler, has one of the most important parts in the cast. The actual casting for this photoplay is now under way. The name of the director will be announced soon.

P. J. Swift Succeeds H. E. Coleman as Washington Managers Executive

P. J. SWIFT, manager of the Washington, D. C., branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been made secretary-treasurer of the Washington Exchange Managers Association and a member of its executive committee to succeed Henry E. Coleman, of the Seaboard Film Corporation. Sam Flax, of the Liberty Film Corporation, has also been made a member of the executive committee to represent the independents.

The association held a very important meeting in the Washington offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last week. Among other things the management discussed the reported non-delivery of large numbers of packages of posters and other advertising matter. These shipments are proving the most difficult of all and have occasioned a great deal of correspondence and other expense.

The managers were of the belief that paper shipments should not be made C. O. D. It was suggested that beginning February 2 this practice be discontinued. There were very few shipments being made C. O. D. up to that date, however, so that the adoption of such a ruling by the exchanges will not cause any inconvenience or result in anything particularly new.

Approve World's Bill.

The loss of packages of posters and other advertising matter will be minimized by the proposal to send them by registered or insured parcel post.

An interesting talk was made by Jack S. Connolly on pending legislation in Congress. He explained the bill desiged to put a stop to film thefts, introduced in Congress by Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, at the instigation of Moving Picture World. Following the discussion on this legislation, the managers adopted the following resolution, copies of which are to be sent to Mr. Rainey and to each member of the House committee on the judiciary.

"Whereas, the motion picture industry being subjected to heavy losses by reason of the thefts of motion picture films constantly occurring while the films are moving in interstate commerce, and

"Whereas, large losses are annually sustained by reason of the pirating of films and their exportation from the country, and

"Whereas, Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, has introduced a bill in Congress 'to punish the transportation of stolen motion picture films in interstate or foreign commerce.'

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the Washington Exchange Managers Association record its approbation of such legislation and urge upon the members of Congress that this bill be seriously considered with a view to the passage of a law that will effectively stop these unlawful practices."

Consider "Bicycling" of Films.

Mr. Connolly also reviewed the censorship situation, speaking of conditions in Massachusetts, Virginia and other states where legislation is pending. The managers were glad to learn that the Sunday closing bill for the District of Columbia, drawn up for presentation to Congress was so absurd that it was withdrawn for further consideration.

"Bicycling" or "automobiling" of films, as it is known now, with exhibitors holding out shows in order to play them at two or more theatres paying only one rental, was discussed at length, and the executive committee was directed to look into the legal aspect of this situation with a view to ascertaining what action should be taken. The managers have certain affidavits, sworn to by their makers, upon which they expect to be able to collect large sums of money from the exhibitors involved.

Buhler Praises "The Willow Tree."

That "The Willow Tree," the Screen Classics, Inc., "fewer and better" special, starring Viola Dana, is the most artistic production he has seen this season is the unsolicited testimonial of Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Stanley Booking Company in Philadelphia. Mr. Buhler's enthusiastic appreciation of "The Willow Tree" was expressed after he had seen a projection room showing of the production, on the strength of which he booked the Metro offering for the Stanley Theatre on Market street.

Blanche Sweet to Play Veiller's "Deadlier Sex"

"THE DEADLIER SEX," the third production starring Blanche Sweet made for distribution by Pathe as a special, has been completed and assembled in the Jesse D. Hampton studios and the first word from the West Coast is that it is one of the most unusual of the year. It was written for Miss Sweet by Bayard Veiller, whose remarkable play, "The Thirteenth Chair," proved one of the best money-making productions ever released by Pathe.

The popularity of Miss Sweet was voiced by exhibitors in every part of the country upon the release of "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy." With the determination to support this popularity with pictures of the highest quality, Mr. Veiller was commissioned to undertake the preparation of her third picture. In "The Deadlier Sex" he turned out an unusual story and one in which all of his charm as a playwright is evident. Somewhat unlike his previous writings, "The Deadlier Sex" carries a delicious thread of humor through it.

Mahlon Hamilton plays opposite Miss Sweet. The picture was directed by Robert Thornby and supporting Miss Sweet are Russell Simpson, who was also in the cast of "Fighting Cressy," Walter Perry, Boris Karloff, Winter Hall, the well-known Australian character actor, and Roy Laidlaw.

An exploitation campaign of considerable scope has been outlined for the production. A special campaign book filled with live suggestions has been prepared and there is also a strong line of accessories.

Laemmle Explains "Diploma System" for His Directors and Cameramen

CAN a film company successfully make short-reelers, comedies and westerns and also hope to be successful in putting out special attractions? Can it go above this field and turn out productions of the super-picture class at the same time? Universal officials point to their Jewel productions as the answer to these questions.

Carl Laemmle was emphatic in his affirmation.

"Universal," he said, "is turning out every variety of picture. The short one-reeler is the little sister of the big six-reel production. We are better equipped to turn out super-productions, not in spite of, but because of our activities in the other fields. When we turn out a serial our sets depict every corner of the globe. The action, which, of course, must be lively, calls for energetic work on the part of the director and the cameraman.

"When we turn out a western, the director has the problem of putting his plot over quickly and condensing it to two reels. Pathos, gaiety, surprise must all be registered artistically—but it must be done quickly. When we turn out a comedy, and the comedies of to-day have discarded the 'slap-stick' idea, our director depends on subtle situations to put over the laugh.

"Because of our enormous output, we must have great production facilities. Our property rooms could hold the whole works of many big film companies and still have room for more. Our various companies have stars of every variety, extras of all conceivable types, players for every special situation.

Directors Work Up to Jewels.

"Our directors and cameramen, and we only hire the most experienced, go through a new school when they join our organization. They have to work up from the one-reel pictures. Then they graduate to the serials and from there to the special attraction class. They are learning all the time. When they get in the special attraction class they have profited by their previous work. As a result, a Universal special attraction is not marred by a 'serial-ish' tone. The director has learned to do the serial and not to do the 'serial' stuff in a big picture.

"After the special attraction stage, the director and cameraman, if their work has shown them capable of the Universal top-mark, are put on a Jewel production—the finest product of our organization. So, too, with our players—they must pass through all the stages of our work and then only a few of the best are chosen for Jewel casts.

Essence of the Best.

"A Jewel production is the essence of everything that is 'best' at Universal City. A Jewel picture is the sum total of all the technical ability, directorial excellence, artistic superiority and perfection in photography of the Universal organization, coupled with its best screen talent. Money, efforts, or time are not figured in their making. A Jewel picture may take five months to make—but never less than three. The most expensive settings, the finest casts, the best directors, and only stars who have earned that title, figure in their production.

"Only the pick of plays and scenarios are selected for Jewel features. Every bit of film, every scene must be perfect. Sometimes certain scenes are retaken twelve times before the desired effect is secured. Th titles alone cost more than any ordinary production. A title which is both artistic and unique adds a distinctive touch to an otherwise fine picture and stamps it with the seal of perfection.

Booked by Trademark.

"Jewels are never made in haste. They are not turned out by the yard. Because of the great care in their making Universal can release but a scant half dozen each year. That is why an exhibitor books a Jewel picture by its trademark.

"The mere fact that Jewel pictures like "The Right to Happiness," "Blind Husbands," "Forbidden" and "The Great Air Robbery" have been produced by Universal proves what I claim in answer to your questions. It is true, Universal turns out something of everything. We have a variety of both short and long subjects, but we have but one 'best of all.' With Universal, the 'best' is Jewel, and if I do say it myself—I believe Jewel is best."

Mintz Manager of Hallmark Serials.

M. J. Mintz, formerly connected with Clark-Cornelius as filed manager in the handling the sales and exploitation of the series of twelve Chaplin Classics, and for many years prominent in the distributing and sales end of the industry, has been appointed by Frank G. Hall, president of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, as manager of serials for Hallmark.

Lasky Scenario Department Now in Its Own Building

A TWO story addition has been built for the home of the scenario department at the Lasky Studio, Hollywood. This has been caused entirely by the unprecedented rush of work resulting from the demand for Paramount Artcraft productions and the increased duties falling upon the scenario department because of this expanding output.

The research department under Elizabeth McQaffey has also grown to such proportions that it has been found necessary to move it into a larger building where its files of material can be accommodated.

The Lasky wardrobe department is now established in its three story concrete structure.

The publicity department, under the direction of Adam Hull Shirk, will be augmented by the advent of Barrett C. Kiesling, who begins work next week.

Names Third Kaufman Weekly.

"Puppy Love" is the title of the third picture for the Herbert Kaufman Weekly, which is being made by Selznick for release through Select. Work began on the picture recently at the Fort Lee studio under the direction of John Lopez, assisted by William Duffy.

The leading role is played by Albert Hackett, member of the well known theatrical family. Supporting him is Edna Murphy, William Frazier, Charles Edward, Mrs. Ford and Jay Strong.

The World's Classified advertising is a quick and low-priced means to business end. Buy, sell or exchange something? That's an effective method, as hundreds can testify.

Just by Way of Serving You a Little Racy Atmosphere from "The Sporting Duchess."
Alice Joyce, meanwhile, looks on and approves these views from her newest Vitagraph.

You See, Helene, "Respectable by Proxy" Means That Someone Else Must Buy Your Sugar.
Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are the foxy proxyists in this Blackton production for Pathe.

Republic Reports Changes.

It was announced this week by Republic Distributing Corporation that Fred Salinger, who has been located at the Pittsburgh office of the organization, has been called to New York as manager of the New York City exchange.

Coincident with this announcement it is made known that Norman Moray, who was in the New York office, has been appointed a special representative of Manager of Sales George Meeker.

Oriental Atmosphere in Brockwell Play Strong

THE sets and costumes in "The Mother of His Children," the new Gladys Brockwell picture now being screened for Wiliam Fox under direction of Edward J. LeSaint, is said to possess a realism that is remarkable in the production of Oriental photoplays. The Arabian salon of the Princess Yve, for example, is furnished with infinite care. Furniture, drapings and carpets have been selected not only to fit the Oriental story, but with a keen eye to photographic effects.

A beautiful fountain babbles and splashes all through the salon scenes, the light simmering through the water and the ferns making a remarkably artistic bit. It is in front of this fountain that Miss Brockwell makes her genuflections before the gods to whom the Arabians bow.

To put the actors in the proper frame of mind, a special orchestra of four pieces plays Oriental music as the scenes are shot—music soft and languid or brazenly tempestuous, as required by the action.

Florence Short in "The Smugglers."

Florence Short, well known motion picture and stage artists, is prominent in the cast of "The Smugglers," one of the series of eight William J. Flynn pictures being distributed by Republic Distributing Corporation. This is the series taken from interesting incidents in the career of Wm. J. Flynn, ex-chief of the United States Secret Service. Herbert Rawlinson has the leading male role in the pictures, which are in two reels each.

Ex-publicity Man Notes Progress Made in Planning of Press Matter

By Frank H. Williams.

HAVING served a considered term—"term" is good—as the main goat in the preparation of the press sheet issued by one of the leading picture manufacturers, I have always taken a considerable amount of interest in seeing just what sort of press material is most favored by newspapers, judging by the stuff that they run day in and day out.

Now that I'm out of the picture business and into the advertising business, I see a lot of newspapers every day and, while not losing my interest in picture press material, I'm able to view the proposition dispassionately and see just what's what in this matter.

The first thing that strikes me upon perusing the amusement pages of numerous dailies is the fact that any real novelty, anything out of the ordinary, anything that has a real news feature value, is used readily enough. Such things as the "Reviews in Rhyme" of the Goldwyn pictures prepared by Howard Dietz seem to make a big hit with the newspapers, judging by the way these reviews are used and played up.

Old Write-Ups Dying Out.

The second thing is the growing scarcity of the old-time "reading notices"—the write-ups that were printed by the papers whenever a theatre advertised, and only when a theatre advertised. These write-ups are becoming farther and farther between and apparently the day is coming when they will be eliminated entirely and the sole "reading notices" edging their way into the dailies will be those with real news or feature merit.

Third in the list of striking things is the preponderance of line cuts in the ads and the extensive use of the higher class ready-made ads issued by the larger companies. The reason for this is self-evident. Line cuts always print well. Half tones, on the other hand, print poorly with a too distressing frequency, no matter how carefully or expensively the electros are prepared.

Fourth—Newspaper advertising is being used more extensively than ever before by the theatres in putting over their pictures. Big space is the rule now where small space used to be all the vogue. The "legitimate" theatres are crowded into corners and out of the way places in all but the largest cities by the vast amount of picture advertising. And, judging by the past, more space will continually be used by the theatres.

Would Edit Press Sheet.

Now, if I was still concocting a press sheet and I had gained this information in an unbiased and dispassionate review of numerous newspapers, it seems to me I'd frame my press material accordingly. I'd edit my press sheet like a movie magazine. I'd fill it full of real feature material and practically eliminate the old time reading notices in which a brief summary of the film is given with blank spaces left for the theatre to fill in its name and the date of the showing. And I'd try mighty hard to find some new way of telling about the picture—a way so novel and interesting and fasinating that the newspapers would have to print it in spite of themselves. And in working up such novel write-ups I'd try not to pattern after anyone else, but I'd try to be entirely and utterly different.

Likewise I'd cut out the half tones and put in more line drawings, after convincing the boss that it was policy to do so.

Give More Space to Ads.

And, finally, I'd devote more space in the press sheet to ready-made ads and I'd make these ads so snappy and attractive that theatres would be mighty glad to buy extra space to run them in, because they'd know, instinctively, that my ads would bring throngs to see the picture.

Most of the progressive picture companies are conducting their press sheets on this plan nowadays, but, after talking with a number of theatre owners, I'm convinced that a lot of companies are still running their press sheets in the old-time, futile, valueless manner, which is sad.

FRANK KEENAN, whose productions are distributed by Pathe, is paying New York his first visit in nearly a year. After a strenuous season of production in California, during which he turned out "The World Aflame," "Brothers Divided" and "The False Code," Mr. Keenan decided he wanted a change. His trip East followed. He called upon Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., immediately upon his arrival in New York.

Just before starting eastward, the noted star put the finishing touches on "Smoldering Embers," his next feature, and he will be in New York for its premier on February 8, the date set for its release by Pathe. "Smoldering Embers" was known under the working title of "Enter—a Vagabond," and is marked by the same human, wholesome appeal which has established "Brothers Divided," his current release, as one of the most satisfying picture of the new year.

To Remain East Six Weeks.

Mr. Keenan intends to remain East five or six weeks. He is stopping at the home of his son-in-law, Ed Wynn, at Great Neck.

There is still no let down in the popularity of "The World Aflame," which Mr. Keenan looks upon as one of his most uplifting efforts before the camera. This is indicated by the following letter received by Pathe from B. J. Piazzo, manager of the Palace Theatre in New Orleans.

"In regard to 'The World Aflame' playing at the Palace, I am glad to state that not since the beginning of his illustrious career on stage or screen has Frank Keenan given to theatre patrons such a timely story or a finer characterization than that of Mayor Burr in 'The World Aflame.' It is the biggest thing ever screened at the Palace Theatre. The picture smashed all records for each day, and for a week showing I cheerfully recommend it to all exhibitors.

Mr. Keenan has declined to discuss a report that he will go to France to produce. For the next few weeks he will be too busy preparing his future activities to consider anything else. While in New York Mr. Keenan will further his advertising plans to take in almost every channel of publicity that might further the sale of his splendid screen attractions.

Jury Declares Non-Suit in Case of Wells Against Atlanta Theatre

A JURY in the Superior Court, Atlanta, returned a verdict in the case of Jake Wells against the Criterion Theatre Company, the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., et al., declaring a non-suit and refusing to grant Mr. Wells a permanent injunction restraining the Criterion from showing eight special Charlie Chaplin releases.

The case is the result of the alleged violation of a contract and it has been in the courts for some time. It was appealed to the State Supreme Court some time ago and the higher court reversed the decision of the lower court. Attorneys for Mr. Wells, following the court's declaring a non-suit, immediately instituted proceedings to again appeal the case to the Supreme Court.

Temporary Restraining Order.

When the first Chaplin release, "A Dog's Life," came out, it was shown exclusively in Atlanta by the Forsyth Theatre, which at that time was owned by Mr. Wells. When the second release, "Shoulder Arms," came out, it was also billed at the Criterion Theatre as well as the Forsyth.

Claiming that he had a contract with the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., giving him the exclusive right to show the Chaplin pictures in Atlanta, Mr. Wells started court proceedings to secure a temporary and permanent injunction against the Criterion, restraining that theatre from showing the picture. A temporary restraining order was issued by Judge Pendleton of the Superior Court, but it was provided that either theatre could show the picture by depositing bond in the sum of $10,000 as security against possible damages. The bond matter was later adjusted.

Replying to the charges, the Criterion Theatre management stated that the exhibitors' circuit had not granted Mr. Wells an exclusive contract.

The action was brought against the theatre, the exhibitors' company, Sig Samuels, president of the Criterion Theatre Company, and Willard Patterson, manager of the theatre.

Bessie Barriscale Has Congenial Role In "The Luck of Geraldine Laird"

BESSIE BARRISCALE, by her work in 1919 productions, earned additional plaudits to her long list of successes, and in the current release, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," she is given a part which, it is claimed, will make her a better bet for 1920.

Exhibitors throughout the country have taken advantage of the purchase by Robertson-Cole of Kathleen Norris' stories and are using the prestige obtained in exploiting the current Barriscale release.

Geraldine Laird is the central character of the production, which is founded upon Kathleen Norris' novel of the same name. Miss Barriscale plays the part of a woman who becomes a great success on the stage as the direct result of being deserted by her husband, and denounces him before a large company of her friends.

Then comes the reaction. Ashamed, she decides she must go to him at once, and the end finds the couple once more united.

Miss Barriscale is supported by Niles Welch, who was her leading man in "Beckoning Roads." He plays the humiliated husband. Dorcas Matthews has the role of a woman who leads the husband away from home at the story's beginning, and other parts of importance are taken by William Mong, Rosetta Marstini, George Hall and Boyd Irwin.

Statement on "U-35" Films by Fitzpatrick & McElroy

W. C. COOK, Eastern representative of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, who are the owners of "The Official Exploits of the German Submarine U-35," had this to say regarding the controversy existing between his firm and C. B. Price & Co., Inc., in connection with the distribution of submarine films:

"On January 26 I called our attorneys' attention to various trade paper articles. On Tuesday Justice Finch requested our attorney to notify B. F. DeWitt, counsel for C. B. Price, to appear in the Justice's chambers on Wednesday afternoon at 3.00 P. M. to receive instructions as to what statements they may make regarding his decision of January 24.

"In the above notification our attorney stated: 'Judge Finch states that the remarks contained therein are unauthorized, and that the defendants have won the motion, and that he required a bond in order to maintain the status quo. He did not, by his decision, and does not recognize any rights of your clients, nor protect their rights in this or any territory; nor did he adjudicate the defendant's film as a pirated print; but on the contrary, both the plaintiffs and the defendants had the right to sell and exploit the film in question.'

"On Wednesday Justice Finch in the presence of B. P. DeWitt, counsel for C. B. Price, directed that C. B. Price Co., Inc., desist from the further issuance of such statements."

Metcalfe Supports Corinne Griffith.

Earl Metcalfe, who had an important role in Vitagraph's screen version of "The Fortune Hunter" and who has been starred in many features, will be Corinne Griffith's leading man in her next Vitagraph production, "The Memento." He will be seen as Brad Mortimer, a vaudeville actor.

Active work on the production has been started under the direction of Edward Griffith. The scenario was prepared by two writers, Lucien Hubbard, who arranged the vaudeville scenes, and William B. Courtney, who did the same for the "small town stuff."

Harding with United in Boston.

W. Harding, who formerly was associated with World Films, has joined the sales force of United's Boston exchange. Harding will cover Rhode Island and part of Connecticut for United Picture Exchanges, the same territory he took care of in his former position.

Seitz and Smith Go South.

George B. Seitz, Pathe's serial producer-director-star, and his family, and Frank Leon Smith, author of "Bound and Gagged" and "Pirate Gold," the latest Seitz successes, with his family, have left for Palm Beach, Fla., where they will forget motion pictures for the next two weeks.

During Mr. Seitz's absence, Bertram Millhauser will continue his work in directing Juanita Hansen's first Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon," which was written by Mr. Seitz.

Bernard Depkin Will Direct New Pickwick

THE direction of the New Pickwick Theatre, 115 North Howard street, Baltimore, has been taken over by Bernard Depkin, Jr. Mr. Depkin now directs the New Wizard, Strand, McHenry and Pimlico theatres. The New Pickwick was added to those under his direction on Monday, February 2.

Behind this deal there is a business romance, for it was at the New Pickwick, eleven years ago, that Mr. Depkin started on his theatrical career as assistant manager, the theatre then being owned by J. Howard Bennett. Later, he was appointed to manager of the New Pickwick and four years ago left that playhouse to take over the management of the Parkway.

The Parkway was a success under the direction of Mr. Depkin and he was also offered the management of the New Wizard, Strand, McHenry and Pimlico theatres, which he accepted. Mr. Depkin recently resigned as manager of the Parkway and devoted himself to the operating of the above named theatres. He says that his intention is to make the New Pickwick a luxurious small theatre and the "bandbox" idea is to be carried out.

Plans for extensive changes to be made in the playhouse are now being drawn by Architect Oliver B. Wight, Munsey Building, who designed the Parkway and McHenry and changes recently made in the New Wizard. The New Pickwick will not be closed until June and will remain dark during the period of reconstruction.

Buys Rights to "The Fighter."

Picture rights to "The Fighter," a novel by Albert Payson Terhune, have been purchased by Myron Selznick. This is the second story by Mr. Terhune to be bought by Myron Selznick, the first being a serial which will be written specially for the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

"The Fighter" is a story of Caleb Conover, natural born battler, railway president and selfmade man, and his adventures have been made into a live and thrilling story by Mr. Terhune.

"The Fighter" will be produced as a feature special at the Selznick Fort Lee studio.

English Film Magnate Visiting Here.

Colonel H. A. Browne, chairman and managing director of Walturdaw, London, is in New York looking over the field. This is Colonel Browne's first trip over here since the war held English commerce in its grip and he is here renewing old acquaintances. How long he will stay is not made known, but probably it will be some weeks.

Ince System of Identification Impresses Criminology Experts

UPON completion of the first series of tests in relation to the Ince system of criminal identification held at police headquarters in San Francisco last week, the opinion voiced by attending officials left no doubt of their idea of the value of Thomas H. Ince's system nor of the far-reaching effect it would have on the old-fashioned methods now in use.

Such authorities as Chief D. A. White, of the San Francisco Police Department, Warden J. J. Smith, of the California State Prison, at Folsom, Mathew Brady, district attorney of San Francisco County, Captain Matheson of the San Francisco detectives and a group of thirty-five police chiefs gathered from all over California were most enthusiastic in their comments on the possibilities of the Ince system.

Warden Smith, nationally known as a criminologist, emphatically declared that the Ince system supplied a long-felt need and should be immediately installed in every state prison in the country.

Ince Gives Demonstration.

Just prior to Mr. Ince's demonstration, Chief White addressed the assembled police officials, pointing out the advantages to be gained by immediate adoption of the system and then introduced Mr. Ince, who proceeded to prove his contention.

Selecting one of the prisoners, Mr. Ince asked for his record and picture as made and filed under the old system. Holding the "still" beside the face of the original he pointed out that the subject, an old and clever offender, had resorted to a trick used by every experienced crook and had contorted his features under the camera and assumed a strained and altered expression for the very purpose of defeating the ends for which the picture was made.

Then posing the prisoner before the "movie" camera and directing him to walk, talk and act naturally without self-consciousness, Mr. Ince made a picture, that, when developed and flashed on the screen, depicted an exact life-size reproduction of the subject. No trait, mannerism or characteristic was missing. Every factor of physical make-up that tended to make the subject an individual distinct and different from others was caught by the camera.

"Right of Way" Has Two Endings, One True to the Novel, The Other Happy

IN releasing "The Right of Way," the Screen Classics, Inc., production of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, starring Bert Lytell, Metro will give exhibitors a choice of endings to the story. There are two versions of the final episode, both convincing and dramatic, but one "unhappy" and the other "happy."

The unhappy ending finds the hero, Charley Steele, once a young lawyer of Montreal and a doubter of God, dying finally in the little French-Canadian settlement of Chaudiere in defense of money belonging to the church he never attended and whose teachings he never has been able to have faith in. This follows closely the plot of the original novel.

The happy ending is not the reverse of this, but a compromise, showing as it does Steele and the devoted Jo Portugais going off together in the woods in the hope of straightening out the struggle of belief against doubt within their hearts and minds. Steele hopes some day to return and feel worthy to ask Rosalie, the young postmistress of Chaudiere, to be his wife.

Could Not Distort Novel.

Exhibitors will understand without much comment the reason for the issuance of these alternative final episodes: that some audiences, no matter what are the artistic demands of a story, do not like a tragic outcome, preferring the conventional fortunate solution.

At the same time, Metro could not, in compatibility with its policy of producing well known stories and popular plays in a worthy manner upon the screen, so far distort this masterpiece of Sir Gilbert Parker's as to have it flatly contradictory to the novel. A solution was reached by making two last acts: the one true to the novel, the second not untrue to it, but leaving the final solution of the hero's happiness to the spectator of the film.

Three Players in May Allison Film "The Cheater" Appear in Dual Roles

DUAL roles fall to the lot of each of the three principal players in "The Cheater," the Screen Classics, Inc., production in which May Allison stars, and which was adapted by Lois Zellner from "Judah," the notable stage play by Henry Arthur Jones. The story shows the activities of a clever trio of pretended Hindu fakirs.

May Allison plays the girl who, through the influence of her associates, sees only the wrong side of life. Living with her father in degrading surroundings, she smokes cigarettes and reads trashy fiction. This is one role. She assumes the other role as the Hindu Princess Vashti, in order to fleece people of money and jewels.

Frank Currier is her father, a grouchy sot, who thinks of nothing but getting money for drink. When money is in sight he disguises as a minister to assist his partners in graft.

Harry Van Meter is the head of the "gang." He is also a masquerader, pretending to be a Hindu crystal gazer, and in that guise obtaining money from foolish women of means.

"The Cheater" is in course of production at the Metro studios in Hollywood

Exhibitors Felicitate Kane on His Plans to Produce Independently

ONE of the most unusual exhibitions of cordial relationship and honest-to-goodness faith between exhibitor and producer is disclosed in the overwhelming response which has met the news of the formation of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation at 452 Fifth avenue, New York City.

From all parts of the country, telegrams are pouring into the offices of the infant concern, wishing the organization and its founder the best of success and pledging support in a material way to the efforts of the new producing organization.

With Tom Moore, the Washington showman, rising from a sick-bed to offer his "wholehearted co-operation" in a gratifying telegram, with hundreds of similar congratulations coming from other exhibitors, and with the inspiring remittance by W. E. Whitson, of San Diego of "$100 deposit on your first production upon your own price and condition and whenever available," the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation got off to a fine start.

"I am home with grip," was the message from Mr. Moore, owner of the Rialto and Garden Theatres in Washington and one of the most farsighted exhibitors in the business, "but you can feel sure of my wholehearted co-operation in anything you do. With all good wishes, Tom Moore."

The generous offer of W. W. Whitson, proprietor of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, was one of the most touching responses which met the announcement of Mr. Kane to produce for himself.

"We congratulate the corporation which is fortunate enough to have Arthur S. Kane at its head and congratulate also Mr. Kane upon the occasion of its launching. Wish you glowing success. We are wiring you $100 deposit on your first production upon your own price and conditions and whenever available and leave it to Kane. We in the West are not fast, but have advanced ideas. W. W. Whitson."

From S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., came the following message:

"May I be included in the list of well-wishers for your new enterprise. I feel that the personality and business methods of Arthur S. Kane will always mean much to our industry. With sincerest best wishes, S. Barrett McCormick."

George Mayne, general manager of the Swanson Circuit at Salt Lake City, Utah, found the announcement of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation awaiting him when he returned from a trip to New York City.

"Just returned to the city" wired Mr. Mayne, "and found your announcement. We are for you and know that you will put over anything you undertake. If we can help you, just shout. Swanson Theatre Circuit, George Mayne, General Manager."

Fred Dolle of the Alamo Theatre, Louisville, greeted the news of the Kane venture into independent production with the following letter:

"As soon as you are ready with your proposition, I shall be only too glad to meet your representative to consider first run in Louisville. There is a possibility of my coming to New York very shortly, and if I do I shall be pleased to meet you personally. Please accept my best wishes for your success in this new venture. Yours very truly Fred Dolle, manager."

From Fitzpatrick and McElroy, owners of the extensive circuit in the Illinois and Michigan territory, came the following message:

"Congratulations to you in your new undertaking and our sincere wish that we shall be able to do as much business with you in the future as we have in the past with the firms who have been so prosperous under your able and efficient direction. Fitzpatrick and McElroy."

These are just a few of the hundreds of congratulatory messages that are being received by Mr. Kane.

Manager Carver and Family Theatre Exonerated of Advertising Charge

A TYPOGRAPHICAL error in the Buffalo, N. Y., Evening News was responsible for the most unfortunate report which discredited Manager Samuel Carver and the Family Theatre of Buffalo through its publication in the Moving Picture World and other trade papers. The phrase "This picture is offensive"—an error of the newspaper printer—started a sensational story that the Buffalo Evening News had refused advertising from the Family Theatre on the ground that it was of a misleading nature.

The facts of the case are these:

No other Buffalo newspaper printed the sentence as did the News, and the News held out the theatre's advertisement for one day merely to have it corrected.

The News is now publishing the theatre's advertising regularly and has not refused it, as first reported.

The picture in question was indorsed by the police department after two policemen had reviewed it and had declared it to be O. K.

Nobody representing the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association went to the city hall and registered a complaint about the picture, and no action at all was taken by the organization.

Moving Picture World regrets the embarrassment caused Mr. Carver and the Family Theatre, and takes pleasure in publishing this denial of any vestige of truth in first reports furnished it.

"White Moll" Company Moves to New Fox Studio

PEARL WHITE, who is at work on Frank L. Packard's underworld story, "The White Moll," for Fox Film Corporation, had the honor of being the first Fox star to work in the new studio of the company by which she is featured. The entire company making "The White Moll" moved to the new Fox building in West Fifty-fifth street, on Saturday, January 31, and Miss White immediately started the last few days' work on her first Fox special production.

Within a short time the star will have completed what promises to be one of the most startling and sensational of all underworld photodramas.

Richard C. Travers, former Essanay star, who returns to the screen after three years of war service, has a powerful role as the hero of this Packard story. Eva Gordon, who is cast for a difficult part, gives excellent support to the star. John Woodford, Jack Baston, William Harvey and Blanche Davenport all have worked hard to make the production one worthy of the star's fame.

Eddie Wynard, cameraman, has obtained some fine photographic effects in this picture, which has many novel scenes. There will be a few more interior sets put up and the company then will finish the interior views.

Heavy Eastern Bookings on "The Valley of Tomorrow"

EVERY little while we are told that people are tired of "Western" pictures. If this is so, it is not because of "The Valley of Tomorrow," starring William Russell, which is different from the usual western drama in that it is starting off with a rush of bookings, following the first-run houses, especially in New York and Brooklyn.

Following close upon the Olympic presentation in Brooklyn, come the Hamilton in New York, the Regent, the 42d Street, the Jefferson, Loew's New Roof, Loew's Circle, the 86th Street. Among the Brooklyn contracts which have reached the Chicago executive offices during the past few days are the Brevoort, the Shubert, the Royal, Mardi Gras, Lima, Loew's Broadway, New Liberty, etc.

Fox and Loew Book Lewis Picture.

Edgar Lewis's venture as a producer of special productions for Pathe distribution has received a flying start with "Other Men's Shoes," the picture version of Andrew Soutar's novel, according to reports received from all territories. Many of the biggest exhibitors have booked the Lewis special, among them being Marcus Loew and William Fox.

The production was released on February 4, but a week before release date nearly a thousand bookings had been recorded on the picture.

Herbert Steiner Promoted.

Herbert Steiner has been appointed by Myron Selznick as manager of the Selznick Bronx studio. He was formerly assistant to Mr. Hampton, manager of the Fort Lee studio.

Mr. Steiner took up his new work as manager last week and already has the affairs of the office in working order. He has been associated with the Selznick organization for some time.

Blackton Has Last Film by Cyrus Townsend Brady

NO man in the motion picture industry was more grieved to learn of the death of Cyrus Townsend Brady, author of a score of film successes than J. Stuart Blackton, who, strangely enough, purchased and produced the first great film success written by Dr. Brady, "The Isle of Regeneration," and also produced and will release through Pathe, "The Blood Barrier," the last film play written by the celebrated author.

"The Isle of Regeneration" was produced from the novel of that name several years ago and it brought to the attention of picture fans for the first time prominently Antonio Moreno and Edith Storey. It was produced under the supervising direction of Commodore Blackton, who had induced Dr. Brady to permit the novel to be filmed.

Early in the winter Commodore Blackton commissioned Dr. Brady to write a thrilling mystery story for him, and "The Blood Barrier" was the result. Stanley Olmsted prepared the scenario and the commodore finished directing the picture a few weeks ago, just before beginning his new feature, "Passers By." Dr. Brady had never seen the film. It will be his posthumous screen work.

New Freight Rates.

The United States Shipping Board has announced new freight rates from North Atlantic ports to Genoa and Naples. Motion picture films are listed at 65 cents a cubic foot or 1½ per cent. ad valorem. Celluloid scrap will be carried at the rate of 65 cents a cubic foot. The minimum charge on any one bill of lading will be $7.50.

Seven Productions Tax Capacity of Huge Lasky Hollywood Studio

UNPRECEDENTED activity exists at the Lasky Hollywood studio where the high water mark of production has been reached in seven Paramount Artcraft pictures which are now nearing completion. The steady stream of production has taxed the resources of the studio to the limit, despite the fact that some of the companies have been away from the buildings part of the time, either on location or shooting scenes along the coast or at some mountain resort.

Charles Maigne, the director who produced the Paramount Artcraft super special, "The Copperhead," and his all star company doing "The Fighting Chance" as a Paramount Artcraft special, have returned from San Francisco, where Mr. Maigne had been taking certain scenes for this Robert W. Chambers' story, the scenario of which is by Will M. Ritchey. Scenes will be taken at one of the beautiful homes in Burlingame.

James Cruze has completed Bryant Washburn's Paramount Artcraft picture, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," and will commence work on "The Sins of St. Anthony," with the same star, this week. The scenario is by Elmer Harris. The story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and from all accounts has a fascinating and distinctive plot.

Warwick Returns to Studio.

Robert Warwick, who made a flying trip to San Francisco after the completion of his Paramount Artcraft picture, "Thou Art the Man," has returned and commenced work on "The City of Masks," by George Barr McCutcheon, which Thomas Heffron is directing for Paramount Artcraft. The story deals with the cosmopolitan life of Manhattan and the novel characters who pass through life always under a masquerade. Walter Woods wrote the scenario.

Wallace Reid's newest enterprise is "Sick-a-Bed," the scintillating stage farce by Ethel Watts Mumford, on which work was commenced a few days ago. Clara Kennedy is the scenarist, while Sam Wood is directing the production. Bebe Daniels will be leading woman in this comedy.

The production of William De Mille's big Paramount Artcraft special, "The Prince Chap," featuring Thomas Meighan, will be completed in about ten days. Others in the cast are Kathlyn Williams, Lila Lee, Casson Ferguson and Ann Forrest. It is said that the emotional work of Thomas Meighan and Kathlyn Williams, playing the leads, is of a high order. In the juvenile episodes Peaches Jackson and May Giracci gave a delightful touch.

Secret De Mille Production.

Strict secrecy, extending so far as to shroud in mystery even the name of the stars and the title, is being observed in regard to Cecil B. De Mille's next production. His last Paramount Artcraft picture, "Why Change Your Wife?" has been completed and promises to be a worthy successor to his former triumphs, "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Male and Female."

Donald Crisp's special picture for Paramount Artcraft, "Held by the Enemy," is progressing favorably. The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix from William Gillette's famous play.

From location somewhere in the Sierras come indications of ardent work on the George Melford production, "The Round Up," featuring Roscoe Arbuckle. Still photographs and "rushes" depicting encounters with Apaches, broncho busting scenes and sheriff's activities are being shot in unique scenic surroundings. The company will remain in the mountains for another week at least.

Selznick Buys "Invisible Divorce."

Myron Selznick of Selznick Enterprises was so pleased with the screen version of "A Perfect Lover" that he has, according to a recent announcement, purchased another story by the same author. The author is Leila Burton Wells and the title of the new story is "The Invisible Divorce." It was originally published in the American Magazine. The story will be given its screen version at the Selznick West Coast studios under the supervision of Harry Rapf.

ful Irish terriers. After several such episodes the writer felt that he would never want to become a picture actor if he would be called upon to eat words with one or more opponents in the manner that these players had been doing. In other words, the way in which the players almost chewed each other up must have got on the nerves of the people in the audience.

To the writer, moreover, there was not one male principal in the picture who possessed real personality, magnetism or charm. The female lead was a nice-looking girl, but the men were too thin, too wrinkled, too tall, too fat or too something else to create a sensation.

Applause in the Darkness.

The writer is not a "knocker" by trade and there is no cold-blooded plan to throw cold water on British pictures. It was difficult, nevertheless, for the writer to sit through the whole picture. Imagine our surprise, however, when several people in the house actually applauded when the end came. Evidently the feature had really pleased some one. We tried hard to see the enthusiasts through the semi-darkness of the theatre in order to try to figure out how or why they had applauded, but this proved impossible. The rest of the house was rather glum, however.

After the performance we examined the posters more closely and noticed an assortment of mud-colored lithographs that did not fit any of the regular frames used by the manager of the house. The three-sheets were too narrow and the six-sheets were too short for the poster stands, and even this added to the poor impression aroused by this one British release. We vowed then and there to wait a long time before venturing to enjoy an experience with another release from the same studio from which this feature had been issued. More and better British features are promised for Canadian audiences this month. We shall see.

Fire Destroys a Simplex Building but Production Is Not Hampered

THE newspaper headlines occupying front page position in the New York press of Saturday, January 31, carried beneath them a story which would indicate that the entire Simplex plant had been fire-swept and was entirely wiped out. This idea is quickly and effectively dissipated by a statement issued by E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, which not only gives the industry the real facts concerning the fire and resultant damage, but breathes the spirit of organization progressiveness.

"The Simplex banner is still flying," says Mr. Porter, "and we want all of our friends to know that while it is true that we lost one of our buildings we are in no way crippled so badly as the first news stories carried in the daily press would indicate. In explaining our reasons for not being so badly affected, it might be well to say that our manufacturing plant covered four distinct buildings.

"The offices, mechanism, repair and general departments are located in the twelve-story building at 317 East Thirty-fourth street; the carpenter and lamphouse shops are on the opposite side of the street; the lens factory is at Morris Park, L. I., while the printing, nickel plating, electrical, enameling and screw machine departments occupy the five floors of the building at 327 East Thirty-fourth street.

Executive Meeting Called.

"It was the latter building that was burned on Saturday last, when a fire broke out at 4:30 a. m. in a manner that has not yet been determined. While the fire fighters were still pouring water on the flames, a meeting was called in our executive offices and plans were quickly evolved whereby our production program would be carried out as nearly as possible to schedule. This will be made possible through the putting on of a night force in the main building where duplicate machines of those in the burned building are located. The nickel plating, enameling and screw machine work has already been arranged for on the outside for the time being, and with the completion of tools for our Type "S" lamps and pedestals, there is no reason why the turning out in regulation quantity of Simplexes should in any way be affected.

Leases Additional Floor Space.

"At the same meeting referred to in the foregoing, new leases for additional floor space equivalent to that in the burned building were entered into and the equipping of these floors is already under way. There is no question but that this fire affects our plans, but in the matter of over-production only, as we had just completed a program that called for increased production far above that maintained last year. With the equipping of several other floors in our main building this program will be resumed and things go along as planned before the fire.

"Fortunately, all the work carried on in the burned building was such that can be taken care of in other ways in this emergency and need not force us to take advantage of the many offers that have been made to us from other quarters. Our distributors have responded wonderfully and it is a source of intense gratification to us to know that we have an organization built up that does not even pause when faced with the loss of one of its buildings."

Mr. Porter adds that he appreciates very much all of the messages that have poured in upon him from Simplex users as well as from the representatives of the industry, and wishes to take this opportunity of thanking them for the spirit that prompted the sending of these messages.

Miss Young Creates Fashion Show for Display in "Forbidden Woman"

IN "The Forbidden Woman," the second Equity release, which will have its premiere at the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, February 15, Clara Kimball Young will be seen in the role of Diane Sorel, a young French artiste. The wardrobe requirements for this role calls for nineteen different creations in the way of evening gowns, afternoon frocks, dinner gowns, armloads of furs, hats and jewelry sufficient to satisfy the hearts of all her feminine admirers, the value of which is said to exceed $26,000.

Miss Young has promised the best in production, scenic equipment, cast and photography in her pictures and in keeping with the general makeup of her productions, has surrounded herself with the gorgeous and artistic in dress. These creations are the result of study and labor by French designers, Miss Young and her technical director, all of whom have made a deep study of the harmony of colors and the value of color combinations for screen purposes. They have discovered the exact value of color under the light of the Cooper Hewitts.

Textile Colors Dominate.

"The average person knows nothing whatever of the distinction to be obtained by certain colors under the photographic lens," Miss Young declares, "or an indistinct white, while other colors change their identity in a most confusing manner.

"Another most important consideration is that the color scheme of the gowns worn must harmonize with the interiors, drapes and hangings used in the different sets, so that all strong, primary colors, shadings and gradations of tone are arranged for composition effects. In 'Eyes of Youth' I was forced to wear certain shaded cloth while the Yogi character was dressed in white.

"This color combination created the problem of arranging backgrounds of such shades that while I was properly silhouetted in a scene, the Yogi would also stand out. A number of days were spent by the director and myself before we struck the happy color schemes, and in one instance it was necessary to make use of a bare wall with hangings of tapestries as a background.

Flowers Mean Nothing

Each Picture Newly Costumed.

"If one were to judge my gowns from the standpoint of street wear and availability some of the color combinations would seem hideously out of place and clash outrageously. For this reason, many of the gowns worn by me in 'The Forbidden Woman' have been created and designed solely for use in this one picture, because by virtue of the peculiar combinations of color, they could not be worn for any other purpose or occasion.

"I never wear a gown twice for the simple reason that each new production demands a radical change in period, style and dress, and thus entails completely new wardrobe. For instance, the clothes I wear in 'The Forbidden Woman' could not possibly be used in my next picture, 'The Soul of Rafael,' laid in the period of 1850."

Screen Star Talks at Cambridge, Mass., House

THE personal touch between patrons of a moving picture theatre and a well established star is becoming more and more popular among managers as an agency for increasing the good-will of theatregoers, and Manager Ray S. Averill, of the Inman Square Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., was instrumental in bringing Montague Love to his theatre for a personal appearance.

General Manager Thomas D. Soriero, of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., cooperated with Mr. Averill in inducing the screen star to visit Cambridge. Mr. Love made a personal appearance at the Strand only a few days previously. Mr. Love, whose work has been confined to greater Boston for the past few weeks, was given a fine ovation by a crowd which packed every inch of available space at the playhouse.

The star delivered an instructive and pertinent address on the censorship of moving pictures. He pointed out the fallacy of over-zealous reformers attempting to subjugate the likes of the majority to the prejudices of the few. He said that if the proposed legislation is carried through to its lawful conclusion and the production of moving pictures is restricted and hampered—as the measure now pending would hamper the industry—the public would be robbed of a wholesome and free expression of contemporary life, and that one of the greatest industries would be seriously crippled. He was applauded vigorously for these sentiments.

Continuing, the star illustrated what would happen to moving pictures if they were cut and slashed as the so-called purists would have them. He urged the patrons to take a vital interest in the censorship matter and combat whatever influence they observe supporting the so-called rabid censorship bill.

Sidelights and Reflections

THE fact that the entire daily press of New York and all of the trade papers united in proclaiming "Pollyanna," one of Mary Pickford's best pictures and her characterization of its twelve-year-old heroine a flawless piece of acting is a fine record for her first production for United Artists. Her engagement at the Rialto following that at the Rivoli found her admirers as enthusiastic and as full of wonder at the way Mary Pickford refuses to grow up and out of child parts. The command she has over herself physically and the manner in which she makes her arms, her legs and her whole body conform to her will and take on the semblance of childhood is art of the best sort. Not for one instant is she anything but a little girl.

And what a delightful youngster that little girl is! Pollyanna's goodness is the natural unaffected expression of her real nature. She is as far from anything approaching what is known as "the stage child" as could possibly be. The tricks of the average child impersonator are probably known to Mary Pickford, but she does not use them in this picture. She seems as unconscious in her movements as she is sincere in the portrayal of the sunny disposition and wise philosophy of the little girl.

It is another significant sign of the times to read the name of Burns Mantle at the head of "The Shadow Stage" department in "Photoplay." This accomplished critic, who has heretofore confined his activities to the spoken drama, is known as a vastly entertaining writer and of excellent judgment. His first installment of screen reviews shows sympathetic understanding and a well defined desire to assist in the elevation of the art of the motion picture. One of these days all of the critics of the daily press will be made to see the light.

There is one scene in "On with the Dance" which is new to the screen, but its humorously truthful reflection of life as it is lived in a big city will be recognized at once. The scene represents the interior of a crowded trolly car. Hanging on to a strap in the center of the car is a disdainful lady clad in an evening gown and opera cloak. Clinging to the next strap is her escort, also in evening clothes. The contrast between this stylishly attired couple and the rest of the passengers betrays that the two strap hangers are completely out of their element. The expression on the faces of the other passengers proclaims that they are all thinking the same thing: "If I wore clothes like that I'd ride in a taxi."

"Water, Water, Everywhere"

Goldwyn Presents Will Rogers in a Story Dealing with the Humor and Pathos of Prohibition.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is in "Water, Water, Everywhere" a generally good-humored view of the constitutional amendment denying us alcohol as a beverage. The story is derived from "A Hard Proposition," one of the popular "Billy Fortune" tales by W. R. Lighton published in the Saturday Evening Post. It is well typed and handled skilfully, but it depends very largely for interest on the personality of Will Rogers and his quaint observations both to the teetotaler and the tipler.

The humorous situations count heavily to make this Goldwyn production popular, and there is an element of pathos that brings out the good in common human nature. Rogers is realistically the plain ordinary man, with an accent on "plain," and there is a correspondence in both backgrounds and atmosphere, the former a hideous little town on a treeless and dusty plain.

There is a mine disaster thrown in for melodrama and several large ensembles more or less effective, but all are generous in activity and in the number of characters engaged. "Water, Water, Everywhere" may be classed as a good-natured, easy-going entertainment, built around a live subject, its lesson against "booze" with some consolatory quips for those who are still indulging their fondness for it on the quiet. The play held the close attention of a crowded house at the Strand, and it should prove a popular number wherever people are broadminded.

The Story.

"Water, Water, Everywhere" does not assuage the thirst of Billy Fortune nor of others in Hell's Bells where he lives. The saloon still thrives and both Billy and his pal, Doctor Morgan, are among the active patrons. They love the same girl, Hope Beecher, only there is little hope for Billy—she prefers Morgan. She is willing to marry her natural choice, but he must give up whiskey. She tells him plainly that "No man has ever quit after he was married." Billy decides to reform Morgan, even if he has to beat it out of him.

Billy decides to aid the cause of reform in a peculiar manner. Just to annoy the married women of the town, who have been active for prohibition, he urges the frequenters of the saloon to set up a soda fountain attended by pretty girls. They decide to first try courting a four-times widow who is leading the reformers, in order to bring about a compromise. The eligible men cut cards to decide who shall do the courting and Billy gets it, declaring that the only time he ever won at cards he lost. He goes to see the widow and looks over an album containing photographs of her first four husbands, while an interested crowd of spectators peers through the shutters. The widow becomes affectionate, and Billy makes a hurried exit in a badly frightened condition.

A soda fountain is now set up in Hell's Bells saloon, with music and dancing, and all the married men become patrons because of the pretty girls. "When you don't care what you're drinking you like to look at something good over the top of your glass," and there are pretty girls to serve the soft stuff. You can even get a little two-and-a-half per cent. stuff on the sly, but you have to drink thirty-seven bottles to get 100 per cent. drunk. Billy continues his campaign of doing good by saving Hope's sister from the toils of a villainous prohibitionist. He also gradually redeems Morgan, so that he and Hope are happy, but he is left out in the cold himself in a country where there are other fishes to be caught, though it is a "damned dry place to fish in."

"Do the Dead Talk?"

Spiritualism Given Unbiased Treatment in Romance Produced by Ebony Film Company.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

CLOSING with this startling question even as it opens, Jack MacDonald's "Do the Dead Talk?" does not attempt to convert, but to unfold in absorbingly dramatic style a story of the mystic influences which affect human life. Such a theme, even though indifferently managed, would be assured of encountering serious interest at present. But in this picture there is an evident sincerity and dignity on the part of author, director and cast that calls forth additional praise. No defense of spiritualistic "quacks" is attempted; on the contrary there is an expose of their practices, depicted in direct contrast to those of honest advocates.

The inference is that the supernatural forces which either impel or stay human action at vital crises are but the presiding spirits of departed dear ones—that their undying love is the means of preventing hideous earthly mistakes. But there is nothing convincing about the argument as it is presented. The strange intuitions that, first by warning, then by advising, change destinies, are as unaccountable at the conclusion as at the beginning of the drama. The love motive is a supremely tragical one, having for its source the attraction between brother and sister, ignorant of their relationship. It follows through a carefully constructed series of climatic incidents in which the suspense element has been expertly handled.

Rather than for personal attractiveness or finesse of performance, the principals, Willard Burt and Hermain France, win because of their conscientious, intelligent interpretation of their respective roles of brother and sister. Hermain France, by means of her vivacious personality and delicious sense of comedy, lends a sparkling touch to the prevailing somberness of the scenes. In the role of Dr. Lodge, conductor of legitimate seances, Stanley Wheyman appears in an excellent make-up and assumes an appropriate manner, marking him a unique rather than an eccentric character. Constantin Panton, in a contrasting role of a fake practitioner, is equally effective. A number of other capable performers are seen in subordinate parts.

Length Five Reels.

The Story.

Bobbie and Dorothy Carleton, while very young children, are called to their mother's deathbed to receive her comforting message that she will always be near to protect them. Shortly after, during the great tidal wave of 1900, when so much of Galveston was destroyed, brother and sister are separated. The loving spirit of their mother always presiding, they both fall into good hands. The boy becomes the adopted son of a surgeon, Dr. Stanton, and the girl is cared for by a kind-hearted sea-captain and his wife, Capt. and Mrs. Smith.

Dorothy loses her memory and is renamed "Blanche Smith." Bobbie abandons all hope of finding his sister. Years later, while out riding, he makes her acquaintance. She is impressed by his attractiveness and succeeds in learning that his name is 'Bob." When she is at the mercy of two ruffians, Robert, sitting in his study, suddenly feels an invisible presence urging him to some sort of action. At first he resists, but finally obeys the spirit call and arrives in time to rescue the girl whom he knows as "Blanche."

Time passes and Robert becomes his foster-father's partner. Once more he is given the opportunity to save Blanche, this time from burning to death. Blanche is deeply infatuated and lengthens her period of convalescence so that she may have the young doctor at her side. A love affair, at once charming and appalling progresses and soon there are preparations for a wedding. But just before the ceremony Capt. Smith, on board ship many miles away, finds an old newspaper relating the details of Bobbie's adoption by the Stantons, and the facts concerning the separation from his sister. The Captain is unable to reach them in time to prevent the ceremony, but by means of another psychic warning, Bobbie suspects the truth, confirms it in a stirring climax, somewhat marred by crudities of subtitles, and a catastrophe is averted.

"All-of-a-Sudden-Peggy"

Paramount-Artcraft Comedy Features Marguerite Clark as Lovable Irish Heroine.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

IN "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy" we have the happy assurance once more that "God's good to the Irish" even when they are stranded in an English home. Thus, with mischief in her eye and intrigue in her heart, Marguerite Clark, as the impulsive Peggy, flits gracefully amid the staid surroundings of a British manor and receives the flattering glances from every male member of the household. It is a gay, frolicking comedy with a wealth of wit in the subtitles, and a laugh at almost every turn of the wheel. Whether Marguerite Clark, so typically of the "maid in America" stamp, should be awarded the generous Irish brogue with which the author has invested her, might be questioned. At any rate her interpretation of irresistible Peggy is delightful.

An improved effect might have been gained in several scenes by more painstaking directing and closer attention to enlivening certain incidents. The cast has been wisely chosen, and includes foremost among its members, Jack Mulhall as an ardent and altogether charming lover, and Orral Humphrey, who has mastered to a fine degree the details of an eccentric make-up and characterization. Lillian Leighton, Maggie Fischer and Sylvia Jocelyn have the other important roles. As a background for constantly varying scenes, appropriate and pleasing sets have been secured.

Cast.

Length Five Reels.

The Story.

Anthony, Lord Crackenthorpe, who is given to hunting and trapping spiders, invites Mrs. O'Mara, wife of a late professor of zoology to help him write a book on his favorite subject. His mother, Lady Crackenthorpe, is infuriated at the presence of Mrs. O'Mara and her daughter, Peggy, who take up their abode at the Crackenthorpe home.

Fearing that Anthony will fall in love with the vivacious Peggy, Lady Crackenthorpe's brother invents a scheme for distracting Peggy's attention from the heir to the Crackenthorpe estate. In reality, a romance is well under way between Anthony and Peggy's mother, who is quite as deeply interested in spiders as he is. Thus, when Jimmy, the younger son, returns, he is advised to start an "affair" with Peggy, which he does quite willingly. She, however, is more devoted to playwriting than to Jimmie.

But upon learning that her mother is in love with Anthony and has refused to accept him until she sees her daughter safely married, Peggy is obliged to use strategy. She departs from the Crackenthorpe residence and leaves a note saying that she has become the wife of Jimmy.

Upon arriving in the city, her purse is stolen from her, and, being unacquainted, she suddenly decides to go to Jimmy's rooms. Her movements are watched by a scandal-loving neighbor, who annoys the girl, but does not deter her from carrying out her plan. In the morning Jimmy rushes in, finds her, and soon reads of his marriage to her in the morning paper. Presently Lady Crackenthorpe arrives, indignant and unforgiving. The situation does not improve upon her learning that the story of their marriage was false. Disaster to all seems imminent, but Peggy saves the day (for herself and Jimmy at least) by making up her mind that she does love him and will marry him "all of a sudden."

"The Paliser Case"

Pauline Frederick and an Excellent Supporting Cast Do Credit to Goldwyn Mystery Drama.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

FOR superb acting—acting which denotes on the part of every principal, a successful effort to express the highest degree of intelligence and emotion, "The Paliser Case" is a photodrama that could be hardly surpassed. Pauline Frederick, already listed among the most distinguished of screen artists, gives a performance remarkable in its reality and picturesqueness. Sensitive, magnetic, vital, this Goldwyn star fulfills every requirement of her role.

The story has nothing new to offer. The plot, if handled less skillfully, might assume the outlines of cheap melodrama. Ambitious young singer, talented but penniless, subjected to a hasty union for convenience, disillusioned by discovery that the ceremony was fraudulent, retribution coming to her betrayer —these are the tried and true ingredients for an old-time thriller. But the production shows a logical arrangement of incidents, an admirable management of surprises, a profusion of invaluable details and evidences of skillful direction, and is elevated to the ranks of dignified drama, intense with emotional climaxes. Only in the murder scene does the element of cheapness appear and momentarily lend an off-color effect.

James Neil triumphs as the girl's father, Angelo Cara, of royal Portuguese descent, a character which he portrays in truly impressive style, never forgetting to evince the nobility and family pride indispensable to such a characterization. Albert Roscoe, Carrie Lee Ward, Warburton Gamble and Alec Francis are prominent among the lesser luminaries of the cast. A high standard of photography and scenic background is maintained. The star's discrimination once more asserts itself in her selection of gowns, as in her acting.

The Story.

Cassy Cara, heroine of "The Paliser Case," a singer and the daughter of a Portuguese violinist, is befriended by Keith Lennox, after she rescues her father from a gang of thugs. She falls in love with Keith, who is engaged to Margaret Austen. This engagement is broken quite undesignedly by Cassy, who is seen by Margaret in the act of emerging from Keith's apartment after a business conference.

Cassy sings at a formal soiree, and is admired by Monty Paliser, possessed of more wealth than respectability. He takes a marked interest in her, and finally, to relieve her fathers financial distress, Cassy consents to marry him. She is the victim of a mock ceremony, and upon discovering too late, Paliser's treachery, Cassy, blind with humiliation and rage, leaves him and tells her story to her father and Keith. She plans to kill Paliser that night while he is watching the opera. Unknown to her, Keith forms a similar plan and is overheard at the club when he announces that he will make Paliser pay.

Paliser is murdered, after which the arrest of Keith follows. Cassy rushes into court to defend him and announces that she is guilty. Keith denies her statement. Before either are prosecuted, a confession from the real murderer clears them both of the charge and leaves open the path for happiness.

"The Last Straw"

Buck Jones Featured in Fox Production Which Spins First Rate Western Romance.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ENTER Buck Jones, expert horseman and promising screen performer, among the ranks of cowboy heroes! Buck, who is a tall, clean-cut fellow, with a clear eye and ready smile, makes a good impression in this Fox subject, "The Last Straw." He appears as Tom Beck, a ranch hand, and is surrounded by a group of rough-riding chaps, including Wiliam Gillis, Charles Le Moyne, H. W. Padgett, Hank Bell and others who have done previous good work in the films.

Not the least enjoyable feature of this pleasing Western romance is the reappearance of Vivian Rich, always a graceful figure on the screen, as the heroine. She plays the role of Jane Hunter, an Eastern miss, who has been training with a fast crowd and is suddenly called West to take charge of an inherited ranch.

There is an interesting clash between the hero and the heroine when they first meet. Tom has certain ideals as regards the fair sex and he is not slow to inform the cigarette-smoking, cocktail drinking owner of the ranch that she doesn't come up to them. Of course, Jane is angered by his puritan attitude, but once she gets used to the new life and sees Tom in action she forgets her old habits and learns to love him.

The story pictures in a dramatic way the roundup of a band of cattle thieves, operating under a crooked foreman. Some splendid horseback riding is a strong feature, and there is some good humorous character work.

The Story.

Tom Beck, in The Last Straw," is employed on the H. C. ranch, which has just passed, by inheritance, into the hands of a young eastern girl named Jane Hunter. Tom and his cowboy friends are awaiting the coming of Jane with considerable anxiety, which is increased by numerous cattle-stealing of late, calling for a strong hand in managing the ranch.

Jane appears one day, a modish young miss, fond of cocktails and cigarettes, and with few, if any, ideas about Western life. She takes a liking to Tom's looks, but feels decidedly piqued when he refuses to drink with her and airs his ideas about the manner in which young women should conduct themselves. Their first meeting breaks up with a quarrel.

There presently appears Dick Hilton, a young man from the East, formerly in love with Jane. She makes Dick welcome, but surprises him by refusing to drink a cocktail with him. The new life has already taken hold of her and Dick discovers that any love she formerly had for him has completely vanished. Jane herself begins to understand that she already loves Tom.

Tom takes up the dangerous task of ridding the country of a band of cattle thieves, headed by Hepburn, foreman of the H. C. ranch. In this he is succesful after exciting conflicts and he wins the love of Jane.

"The Right of Way"

Metro Presents Bert Lytell in a Powerful Story of Multiple Personality from the Novel of Sir Gilbert Parker.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

OF tremendous power in centering attention and holding interest is "The Right of Way" as produced by Metro. The big note is man, noble in reason, infinite of resource, yet perpetually on trial for his baser instincts. The finest aspirations of his soul impel him upward and onward—his native appetite drags him back and downward. Such in general is the motif of the Metro six-reel feature as brought out in the characterization of a noted criminal lawyer, Charley Steele, impersonated by Bert Lytell. At no time can Steele reconcile the wrong, injustice and cruelty shown to him in a thousand horrible forms, with the idea of an all-powerful and compassionate God. Not an aggressive atheist, he cannot take the religious view of a power beyond all our present comprehension.

So dominating is the character of Charley Steele that other people, no matter how strong in temporary interest, can dwindle away to insignificance as the story moves on. Bert Lytell catches the sphinx-like mood of the character he interprets, and he holds it undisturbed to the end. He piques the curiosity of the spectator by his attitude of supercilious disdain toward men, even in the midst of serious danger.

In all departments of production, Metro has worked sincerely and skilfully to give "The Right of Way" consistent dignity and power. Backgrounds are rich and complete. The types are well chosen. We are at the edge of the mystery of life while we are watching Charley Steele sent drifting out into the flood of circumstance. There is enough of the emotional to suit primitive minds and an abundance to be enjoyed by the great majority of minds not primitive. The Metro version of "The Right of Way" should prove a big winner with all classes everywhere.

Story by Sir Gilbert Parker.
Adapted by June Mathis.
Directed by Jack Dillon.
Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

"The Right of Way" goes to a man when he is at his best. Charley Steele wins a great criminal case in Montreal by the inordinate use of stimulants. He despises himself immediately thereafter. When Joe Portugais, the lumberjack accused of murder, turns to Steele with gratitude for saving his life, Steele waves him away with contempt. "You're as guilty as Hell," he explains.

Steele as easily wins a beautiful girl from the man she loves and marries her. He reasons that when man can pervert nature to his will and cause a great miscarriage of justice, the role God plays is not one of great significance. Steele believes as little in God as he does in human nature. He has married into a religious family, but he discovers that his wife's brother has forged his name for a large sum to cover crooked dealings. Sickened of puritanical pretense, Steele goes to a tough resort some miles from Montreal and there joins the lumberjacks in a carouse. His indifference to danger and his contempt for the rough element leads to a furious revolt against him. He is beaten insensible and thrown for dead in the river.

Steele is saved and cared for by none other than Joe Portugais, but when the eminent criminal lawyer recovers consciousness his past is a blank. Joe Portugais alone knows him, and he keeps silent. As he recovers, Steele takes up the simple life in a village and finds contentment through faith in human nature, but he cannot reconcile his thoughts to an ideal of the Almighty.

Later on, when his wound is cured and consciousness of his past returns, Steele decides to remain in oblivion. His wife has married the man she loves. He has been forgotten as a degenerate member of society. He goes to work for a fanatical old tailor, whose weak mind goes wrong from horror of Steele's atheism. To give the atheist a sign, the crazed man brands him with a red hot cross. One suffering follows another now, Steele growing gentler and sweeter, until the final tragedy that reveals to him one beautiful thing on earth—human love.

"The Call Loan"

An O. Henry Story Produced by Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Call Loan" is a two-reel story of the warm friendship which springs up among men in isolated situations and trying circumstances. Three cattle herders, leading a rather lonely life, become strongly attached to one another, living one for all and all for one, so long as they are closely associated on the ranch. Good fortune spills money into the lap of one, and he becomes a bank president. Another takes long chances and becomes a speculator in cattle. The third remains a cowboy. Just for old time's sake the bank president loans ten thousand to the speculator to put through a big deal, while he expects to split up with his chums if all goes well. Meantime, there comes a bank examiner, who detects the loan of ten thousand and declares it to be fraudulent. The money must be returned to the bank within twenty-four hours in order to avoid criminal action.

An interesting situation is thus brought into existence, with surprising results. The cowboy hears of some shipments of bulion to be made and decides to save his old pals by becoming a train robber. The bank president detects him in this scene, follows him and battles with him to prevent the robbery. He saves his old pal from becoming a criminal. The return of the speculator with over twenty thousand saves the situation—he is just as loyal as the other two, not only alive to his responsibility, but big and generous in his division of the profits. The three characters are clearly and strongly typed, the picturization is vivid, and the whole forms an entertaining short story.

"Dangerous Hours"

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANOTHER of the long list of stories adapted from the Saturday Evening Post, the Thomas H. Ince picture "Dangerous Hours" is up-to-date in theme and contains a number of sensational scenes in which a detachment of "reds" turn an honest strike into a bloody riot. Running through the plot is a wholesome love interest; also a strong plea for out and out Americanism. The production is of good quality and the cast an able one, although there is no well-known star at its head. The author of "Dangerous Hours" has sounded a note of warning to those ardent, but misguided young dreamers that allow themselves to be influenced by the preaching of the extremists that claim to work for the liberation of mankind and whose sole object is to plunder and kill.

Lloyd Hughes acts the part of John King, the young American fresh from college, who becomes the tool of the Bolsheviki. He has the proper appearance and necessary earnestness and wins sympathy for the character all through the picture. Barbara Castleton is excellent as May Western. Claire DuBrey as Sophia Guerni, Jack Richardson as Boris Blotchi and Walt Whitman as Doctor King have the other important characters.

Length Five Reels.

The Story.

"Dangerous Hours" applies to the time spent in the company of present day revolutionists. John King, whose father has made every sacrifice to send him through college, does not return home after graduation, but gets mixed up with a group of "reds," who want him for their leader on account of his American birth and his fearless spirit. Taking part in a strike riot instigated by the foreign agitators led by Boris Blotchi and Sophia Guerni, the misguided young man finds himself arrested, tried and sent to prison. When his term is up King goes back to his Bolshevik friends, and Sophia Guerni pretends to be deeply in love with him for the way he has suffered for the cause.

Awaking at last to his duty to his father, King goes home and finds that the aged man has been almost heartbroken at his long absence. May Weston, the sweetheart of his boyhood, is also overjoyed to see him, but John's head is too full of his mission to liberate mankind to let his heart advise him. His pride also stands in his way. Miss Weston has been left a properous shipyard by her father and is now at the head of the business. John is determined to go back to the city and follow up his mission, and old Doctor King lets his son leave without telling him that he is almost penniless.

Once back with Sophia and her comrades, John finds that they are planning to go to the town he has just left and make trouble for Miss Weston. The men in her shipyard have started an honest strike which they expect to settle by peaceful methods, but the Guerni-Blotchi group intends to stir the workers up to riot and blood shed. The scheme is carried out. John goes along, but keeps away from his father and May Weston, until sent to treat with his old playmate. So blinded is John King that he does not see how greatly in the wrong he is until he finds himself in the center of the mob which has broken down the gate of the shipyard and wrecked the office with a bomb. The sight of May lying stunned and bleeding in the ruins brings John to his senses. He turns upon his former friends and is himself badly wounded in helping to drive them away from the yard. When he recovers sufficiently to go to Miss Weston and acknowledge his terrible error, he finds her well on the road to recovery and only too happy to forgive him. The old sweethearts come to the right understanding.

BILL HART is back in a true-to-life western role in "Sand," which is announced as the first of the New Hart series that the rugged actor is depending entirely upon his own efforts to "put over." And "Sand" has sand. It is a typical Hart picture, only somewhat better than those he has been making for the last year or so. It shows careful attention to everything, a novel plot and enough thrills to make it please most everybody. The Pinto pony shares honors with the star. In one scene Hart and the horse leap from a cliff into a river and the only criticism of this is that the scene is altogether too short. The story has been worked out so that the audience is given an idea of the finish, but it brings a certain amount of sympathy to the hero. Particular mention should be made of Mary Thurman, who is the leading woman. She is creeping into the class of Mack Sennet graduates who have made good as first class leading women or stars. The locations chosen for this picture are not very original, but that fact does not deter from its value as entertainment. There are a few river scenes that will command the admiration of everybody.

A Study in Sand

"Sand" opens with Dan Kurrie on the way to Candor to replace a station agent who has grown old in the service of the railroad. The train stops at a small station where a railway hold-up occurred and Kurrie is told the bandits escaped into the river and then all trace was lost of them. Arriving at Candor, Dan Kurrie finds he is to replace Pop Young, father of his sweetheart. He declines the job, but Pop assures him he has another position, so Kurrie goes to work. Pop's new job is in the general store of Joseph Garber, who also is a stockholder in the railroad, and who aspires to marry Young's daughter. Finding Kurrie in his way, he manages to have him fired. Kurrie immediately gets a job on a ranch, where he worked years ago, and at the same time gets his old Pinto pony back.

In a talk with a pal, Kurrie mentions his pleasure at receiving the pony back. Part of this conversation is overheard by his sweetheart, Margaret Young, and she believes he is talking about a girl on the ranch. Believing Kurrie false, she renounces him and decides to marry Garber. Kurrie is crushed, but out on the range he tries to forget her.

One day while riding near the railroad he is fired upon by a Mexican. He returns the fire, hits his man, who confesses to a plot to hold up a train which is nearing. Here comes a series of thrilling episodes, fast riding and a leap from a cliff to the river. Kurrie arrives on the scene as the hold-up is going on, fires at them in the rear and the gang is captured, with the aid of the surprised trainmen. Pulling off the masks of the bandits, the leader is discovered to be Garber—and at the same time Margaret Young, who was on the train running away from Garber, appears. Garber is unmasked as the leader of the gang which has been committing all the hold-ups. Dan and Margaret come to the right understanding.

"Daredevil Jack"

Jack Dempsey Makes Good in Fifteen Episode Serial Produced by Brunton.. Distributed by Pathe.

Reviewed by Margaret MacDonald.

TWO of the fifteen episodes of "Daredevil Jack" exhibited to the press are sufficient assurance that this serial produced by Robert Brunton and distributed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is going to be a winner. Jack Dempsey, champion heavyweight, plays the title role, and gets away with it in a surprising manner. Perhaps his ring experience serves him in fighting camera shyness. The fact remains that he is perfectly at ease, does not make any serious attempt to act, and therefore puts many convincing punches into the picture.

The star of the serial is surrounded by a coterie of players of ability and note, who fit without a wrinkle into the characterization of the Frederic Chapin and Harry Hoyt story. There are improbabilities in the plot, such as are found in the majority of screen serials, but the picture is well directed and thoroughly interesting. The serial is one that will get over without effort, and exhibitors will be perfectly safe in booking it. Dempsey is youthful enough to fit into the romance of the story which, it is anticipated, will develop later, and while the first two episodes have more to do with punches than with smiles, there are hopes that the situation will evolve some merriment later. "The Mysterious Bracelets" and "The Ball of Death" are the titles of the first two episodes.

The Story.

Jack Derry in "Daredevil Jack" accidentally becomes involved in a mystery surrounding Glory Billings, when fate makes him her rescuer in a kidnapping episode.

In the early stages of the story two prospectors are searching for gold in a western desert. One of them is obliged to return to the settlement with his sick wife. The other, after promising his partner a half interest in what he finds, continues with his little girl into the wilderness. The author then skips several years ahead, and we find the girl, Glory, living in the home of her guardian, Leonard Billings. One day, when she is motoring along the country road alone, she is stopped and seized by three men with whom she is struggling when Jack Derry, a college athlete, happens along in time to beat off the kidnappers and rescue the girl.

As the story develops Billings is found in possession of a secret told him by Glory, to the effect that her father, on his last prospecting trip, discovered a subterranean basin of pure oil. At his death he placed a bracelet on the wrist of his daughter, and its mate on the arm of an Indian woman who cared for him, stating that the numbers on the bracelets would reveal the whereabouts of the oil location. A man by the name of Meeney is also in possession of the information and has the bracelet belonging to the Indian woman. Meeney and his gang are now persecuting Glory for the purpose of securing the other bracelet. In the various exciting situations that develop, Derry is always on hand, usually through the information sent him by the Billings butler, as the official rescuer of Glory.

The story becomes even more interesting when a new complication appears. It so happens that Billings has been instrumental in placing Derry's father in prison, by getting him to sign a paper purported to be a release of certain mining interest in favor of Billings, but which is in reality a confession framed by Billings to place Derry in prison and to relieve himself of certain obligations.

The second episode closes on what promises to be a big thrill, when a football loaded with a bomb is about to be kicked off.

"The Luck of Geraldine Laird"

Kathleen Norris Story Furnishes Excellent Vehicle for Bessie Barriscale Robertson-Cole Production.

THERE is an abundance of human interest in the Robertson-Cole-Barriscale production, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird." Again Bessie Barriscale appears successfully in the role of the injured wife, and this time in a character of sufficient individuality and pluck to see the affair through to the finish, and in the end to put friend husband back where he belongs.

The production is especially pleasing in detail. The first reel shows Geraldine Laird's home life, and the establishing of a reason for Dean Laird's leaving home. There is intermingled with a tragic situation a pleasing vein of comedy, the action of which is scattered among a number of interesting characters. Miss Barriscale's work is quite up to her usual high standard. She is successful in both the light and heavy requirements of the part, and is never amiss in the portrayal of any emotion.

When the Luck Changes.

Bessie Barriscale finds a haven in Robertson-Cole's "The Luck of Geraldine Laird."

It is not intended that great admiration should be felt for the delinquent husband, and the director has painted him in correctly insipid shades. The part is played well by Niles Welch. William V. The Story.

In "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," a young wife makes the mistake of listening to the persuasions of her mother that she and her husband, Dean Laird, make their home with her. Through so doing an unhappy situation arises in which Dean becomes the only bread winner. The other members of the family lay down their oars, and are content to eat the bread of idleness.

Dean Laird dabbled in play writing, and when it happened that Kennedy Bond, a Broadway play broker and a good looking young woman in the bargain, came to town, she so played upon his vanity and ambitions that he decided to accompany her to New York. In so doing he left a note for his wife, stating that he had grown tired of trying to make a success of married life, and requesting that she forget him.

Geraldine, determined to save her husband from himself, follows him to the city, and on her way to his room finds that he is still absorbed in Kennedy Bond. In the struggle for a livelihood she becomes a saleslady in the shop of a modiste, and is discovered there by a theatrical manager who had seen her in her home town impersonate Sarah Bernhardt. The result of this meeting is that she enters the chorus of his company and at a moment when the show is about to fail, jumps in and saves it. Through her new associations she meets her husband, who has been pronounced a failure as a playwright, exposes him before a group of mutual friends, and finally forgives him, when they both decide to start life over again.

Reviewed by Jacob Smith.

"MARY'S ANKLE" as a stage farce was a big success a few years back, and "Mary's Ankle" as adapted for the screen by Paramount is just as big a success, if not bigger, for many reasons. First of all it presents two youngsters, who, in a short space of time, have become extremely popular. In fact, their names today are almost as well-known among theatre patrons as many old-time stars. Reference is made to Douglas McLean and Doris May, who were a tremendous hit in "23½ Hours Leave." They seem to be just the size and just the type that audiences like. We make particular mention of the stars because the writer has heard so many people remark "we saw them in '23½ Hours Leave' and they were great; we'd like to see them in 'Mary's Ankle,'" and that is why the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, enjoyed a big busines during the seven days that "Mary's Ankle" played there.

The picture is a capital farce and a capital picture, clean and humorous throughout. Photography, direction, settings and supporting cast are all deserving of praise.

The Story.

The story of "Mary's Ankle" tells of the financial embarrassment of a young doctor named Arthur P. Hampton. He has two chums, Stub Masters and Johnny Stokes, and while walking along the street on Tag Day they are separated from all but a few pennies by a pretty girl with whom the Doctor falls in love. His pals know that he has an Uncle George who has promised him a large sum of money if he marries, so Stub send out fake wedding announcements.

It so happens that Mary Jane Smith, the girl who tagged the trio, lives with her aunt, a Miss Burns, who is an old sweetheart of Uncle George. He writes to Mary's aunt and invites the pair to be his guests on a voyage, and also requests that they search for his nephew, which Mary proceeds to do. While at the Doc's office she sees one of the wedding announcements and is greatly surprised because she was under the impression that he was single.

When the young man enters she becomes confused, dashes out and in her hurry sprains her ankle. The Doc comes to her rescue and then asks her to pose as his wife. Before the steamer departs Stub and Johnny break the truth to Uncle George, who flies into a rage, but a mantle of quietness settles about the gathering when Mary and the Doc inform the old sweethearts that they are to be made man and wife by the captain as soon as the vessel passes the three mile limit.

It's the story of a stage favorite, engaged to a cabaret owner, although she doesn't love him. Along comes a millionaire, who is suffering from loss of memory and fever and who, in this condition, gets into the apartment of the actress by mistake and collapses.

The cabaret scenes are not only novel, but quite artistic. Miss Thomas wears a dress of lace the like of which has not been seen in movies before. During the cabaret entertainment a big fire breaks out and the performance is given on the roof. People jump out of the windows and a general panic ensues. A very important feature of this production is that it serves to bring out the beauty of the star more than ever. There is no denying her personal attractiveness.

Miss Thomas is kept busy in "Footlights and Shadows." In fact, there are very few scenes in which she does not appear. The supporting cast is good, but has little to do outsidle of Alex Onslow, who plays the man with the lost memory. His work is excellent.

The Story.

Gloria Dawn is a new favorite on Broadway. She is an innocent girl who has risen fast and becomes star of "The Midnight Revue," playing in a roof cabaret. Peter Shaw, wealthy man-about-town, part owner of the restaurant, having exhausted all other tactics, proposes marriage. Dazzled by the prospects of wealth and luxury, she accepts, though she does not love him.

The same night a strange man enters her apartment with his own key. She discovers he is irrational and is horrified when he falls unconscious. She calls a physician, who advises that he be not moved. This puts her in a predicament, which is made worse when Shaw calls. She safely conceals from Shaw the fact that the man is in her apartment by persuading him to leeave and call again. The mysterious man passes through a delirium and during his convalescence he is still dazed, being unable to remember his name. But he falls in love with his hostess and she is attracted to him.

Later she learns he is Jerry O'Farrell, millionaire sportsman, who contracted fever while tiger hunting in Africa. With a happy heart she goes to inform him of his identity. But during an unguarded period he had slipped away, after having tripped over a tiger-skin, an incident which served to restore his memery. He left Gloria's apartment so hurriedly that he neither remembers her address nor her name, but later determines to search for her. The search is without results, but some time later he attends the revue, and during the performance fire breaks out. Panic reigns and O'Farrell is trampled under foot. Gloria recognizes him and fighting her way through the mob rescues him. Next morning she wakes up to read that she is a heroine. O'Farrel reads of her bravery and learns her address. Going there, he finds Shaw, who has learned of the man who has been staying with Gloria. He no longer wants her and makes an insulting proposal. There is a struggle, during which O'Farrel enters the room and almost chokes Shaw. The latter then beats a retreat and explanations follow, O'Farrell taking Gloria in his arms.

Program and Advertising Catchlines:

Beautiful Olive Thomas Again a Follies Girl in Her Newest Picture, "Footlights and Shadows."

She Didn't Know His Name; She Didn't Know Anything About Him, Yet She Loved Him.

If You Believe in Leap Year, Girls, Here Is a Little Miss That Can Show You How to Get a Husband. See Olive Thomas in "Footlights and Shadows."

Exploitation Suggestions: Here is a chance to work the "leap year picture" stunt. There is a title in this picture that says "Oh, Lord! You must have sent me this man," and you can be right up-to-date by playing up this angle. Another item to be considered is Miss Thomas' beauty, which certainly shows up to perfction in this production. Although beauty contests and tie-ups with stores on this idea are a bit stale you can use it again. A window full of face powder, perfumes, etc., in several drug stores with this sign: "You can be as beautiful as Olive Thomas in 'Footlights and Shadows' at the Blank Theatre, by using these" would be attractive.

"Excess Baggage"

Carter De Havens Confront Mother-in-Law Problem in Two-Reel Comedy for Famous Players.

Reviewed by Margaret MacDonald.

THE mother-in-law problem is the one placed on the shoulders of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in the Famous Players two-reel comedy, "Excess Baggage." The situation in which the mothers of the youthful couple arrive on the scene at the same time, affords some amusing incidents in which the husband is the goat.

The picture opens with a tiff over a phonograph record, the husband preferring the exhilarating jazz type, while his wife persistently holds out for a more classic style. In the midst of the discussion a telegram comes for him stating that his mother is on her way to visit them. The fact that his wife's mother is also expected does not help matters, and when both mothers appear on the scene within a few minutes of each other, a lively time is had by all concerned through the jealousies to which mother-in-laws are popularly supposed to be addicted.

The most serious comic offenses occur in connection with the bedrooms of the visiting mamas. Finally, after the young couple are driven almost to distraction, and have given up most of their comforts to please the respective mothers, a telegram comes with an invitation for the older members of the quartet to be guests at a picnic in a distant town. When the sky has cleared the husband confesses to having persuaded his father to send the telegram. The comedy is clean and wholesomely entertaining.

"Judy of Rogues' Harbor"

Realart Picture Starring Mary Miles Minter Is Melodrama Beautifully Produced.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADMIRERS of the stories written by Grace Miller White will be delighted with the screen production of "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," made by Realart with Mary Miles Minter as the persecuted heroine. Like "Tess of the Storm Country" it is filled with melodramatic happenings, the good folk being very, very good and the bad folk very, very bad. The dramatic complications supply the story with constant physical action and include an anarchistic attempt on the life of a governor of an eastern state, and the efforts of a brutal young farmer to force Judy to become his wife after he has wronged her supposed sister. There is a mystery about Judy's birth, which is one of the main props of the plot, and her devotion to a little crippled boy may be depended upon to win her an unusual amount of sympathy. Some of the scenes of Judy's ill-treatment and of Jim Shuckles' exhibitions of brutality might be toned down a trifle without hurting their effectiveness.

There are two features of the production that will satisfy the most ardent lover of the beautiful: certain of the exterior long shots, and several of the close-ups of Mary Miles Minter. In the language of the circus poster: These features alone are worth the price of admission. The character of Judy is well within the star's best line of endeavor and she brings to it the youthful charm so essential to its success. The supporting company is composed of such reliable actors as Theodore Roberts, Herbert Standing, Charles Meredith, Allan Sears, Clo King, Fritzie Ridgeway and that remarkable child actor Frankie Lee.

William Desmond Taylor has shown good judgment in his selection of local color. The scenario is rather overcrowded with incident owing to the necessity of compressing the novel into six reels, but there is heart interest in every foot of the six reels.

Cast.

Judy	Mary Miles Minter
Lieut. Teddy Kingsland	Charles Meredith
Gov. Kingsland	Herbert Standing
Grandpop Ketchel	Theodore Roberts
The Lady of the Roses	Clo King
Olive Ketchel	Fritzie Ridgeway
Jim Shuckles	Allan Sears
Denny	Frankie Lee
Peter Kingsland	George E. Periolat

Story by Grace Miller White.
Scenario by Clara Beranger.
Directed by William Desmond Taylor.
Length, six reels.

The Story.

In "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," a black page in the life of the governor of an eastern state is the cause of the unhappiness which pursues the young heroine until the repentant man does his best to right the wrong. Years before the story opens the daughter of Grandpop Ketchel made a runaway match, and her father never forgave her for it. Her husband trusted all of his business to the governor, then an obscure lawyer, and when he died left his fortune in the care of Kingsland. Bent on securing the money for himself Kingsland separated the widow and her child, promising to take care of the little girl. He also withheld from the widow any knowledge of the mining stocks which had made her husband suddenly rich, and placed little Judy with her grandfather without telling him of his relationship to the child.

When Judy is first introduced she is about sixteen. Old man Ketchel is sullen and morose and often beats her and little Denny, a grandchild. Judy's love for the boy is the strongest passion of her nature and she willingly takes his beatings on her own shoulders. Living in the same house is Olive Ketchel, who is supposed to be her sister. Olive has been betrayed by Jim Shuckles, a neighbor, and the fellow now claims to be in love with Judy. The young girl knows the condition of affairs and despises Jim accordingly. In a brutal flogging given to Denny by the drunken Jim, the boy is badly injured, and Judy makes the rest of the family think that he has died from its effects. She scares them into digging a grave at night and helps them to bury what they take to be the boy's body. Judy then carries the little chap to a mysterious neighbor, known as the Lady of the Roses, who has befriended her and taught her all the good she has ever learned from others.

Governor Kingsland has a son who is plotting against his father. When Peter Kingsland learns that the governor, after having been saved from assassination by the help of Judy, is about to confess his wrongdoing, the younger man plans to have his father put in an asylum, but Judy again comes to the rescue. She takes him to the home of the Lady of the Roses. Brought face to face with Judy's kind friend the governor finds himself in the presence of the girl's mother. The truth is spoken at last, and the governor's grandson, who has become a staunch ally of Judy's, eventually makes her his wife.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

- Another Story by the Author of "Tess of the Storm Country." Mary Miles Minter the Heroine of Grace Miller White's Latest Novel.
- See Mary Miles Minter as Judy of Rogue's Harbor and Watch the Brave Fight She Makes for the Life of Little Denny.

Exploitation Angles: Use the popularity of the book and the past reputation of the author to attract attention to the picture. Speak of the beauty of the production, and of the opportunity the story gives Mary Miles Minter to win sympathy for the part she plays.

"The Imp"

Elsie Janis Starred in Mystery Drama Produced by Selznick.

Reviewed by J. M. Shellman.

"THE IMP," by Elsie Janis and Edmund Goulding, in which the former has the starring part, affords good entertainment, with several thrills and heart throbs in the last reels. The first part is slow, but is relieved by touches of subtle humor. The story starts out with a novel introduction showing the character of Jane Morgan as impressionable and daring by photographing the front part of a runabout from the driver's seat as it dashes along the road and then giving a close-up of the speedometer on which the dial finally twists itself into a knot because the machine gains such speed.

It is not until the Imp meets with the supposed crook that the interest of the audience is really aroused. The situations appear to have been built by artificial methods rather than a natural sequence of events, but the audience really liked the surprise climax. Miss Janis as Jane Morgan does well with the part in the latter half of the play, but her humor in the first part is somewhat forced. Joe King is to be commended for his natural and efficient work as Dr. Gregory. The man who played the chauffeur has a very small part, but his interpretation stands out as a piece of fine acting. Generally speaking, the attraction should prove a good box office attraction.

Cast.

Jane Morgan	Elsie Janis
Jane's Mother	Ethel Stewart
Jane's Father	E. J. Ratcliffe
Dr. James	Duncan Penwarden
The Deacon	John Southerland
The Leopard	Joe King
The Warden	Wm. Fredericks
The Butler	Arthur Marion
Comedian	Jack Ridgeway
Maid	Miss Forest
Hampden	Joseph Granby

Directed by Robert Ellis.
Story by Elsie Janis and Edmund Goulding.
Length, five reels.

The Story.

The story of "The Imp" concerns Jane Morgan, a pretty girl, who takes unusual interest in criminals. She has many treasures, one of which was a pocketbook that belonged to Annie Adams, alias "The Imp," a noted pickpocket. She is accidently struck on the head with a golf club which causes a coma and she believes she is Annie Adams. She is caught robbing a bank and only her wealthy father's influence saves her.

Dr. Gregory, a young specialist, is called in. He allows her great freedom and as a result she joins a gang of "bad men," led by 'The Leopard," with whom she falls in love.

On a "big" job Jane and "The Leopard" are caught by the police after the bad man has shot the butler. She tries to say it was she who killed him. A surprise comes when "The Leopard" is found to be none other than Dr. Gregory and the "death gun" contained only blanks. During her convalescence love develops and she and the doctor are happy together.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

- Society Girl Suddenly Becomes a Victim of Asphasia and Leads a Life of a Crook, But Is Saved by Her Sweetheart.
- Mystery, Thrills, Heart Throbs and Climatic Situations Will Make You Tingle with Pleasurable Excitement in This Subtle Drama of High Society and Chinatown Slums.
- Becoming a Denizen of the Underworld, Society Girl Is Brought Back to Her Station in Life through the Heroic Efforts of the Man She Loves.

Exploitation Angles: Play on Miss Janis' stage and war activities for your appeal. Get your patrons interested in the star rather than the story and the star will interest where the story may not. Use more lithographs than usual to get the regular theatre-goers and attract the class who do not ordinarily follow photoplay advertising. These strangers may be made regulars after Miss Janis gets them in.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Change the Transient to a Steady Patron by Some Judicious Lobbying

IT'S a mighty good thing to have an established clientele. It's also poor business to remain contented with the knowledge that your regular patrons are aware that you run a good show and prefer your house to that of your competitors.

The American family is the champion short distance lease holder of the world and the fact that three moves equal a fire has no terrors for it, and even its sincere attachment to your theatre will not induce it to forego the favorite sport of swapping landlords, with the result that many familiar faces cease being familiar about moving day of each year. Which explains and also emphasizes the fact that it is more than well to keep new patrons coming faster than the old ones shift to new residential sections outside of one's territory.

The Modest Violet Inappropriate.

Moreover, the casual patron, drawn into the house when passing constitutes a fair percentage of the velvet that one seeks in every business enterprise. And, to draw him in, it is not sufficient to put on a good show, but to make every one in the vicinity aware of the fact. The modest violet will never be the exhibitor's appropriate emblem. And, when the stranger enters your portals, induce him to return by an attractively displayed menu of future eye-feasts to come. Let him know that, no matter how good was the picture that you have just shown him, you've just as good coming right along. You can do this with the right kind of a lobby display. By the right kind I mean one with the arrangement of which you have taken as much care as did the producer in the selection of its wording, color and press work.

The finest posters that ever came out of a lithographer's plant and the most fetching photos cannot be expected to achieve their purpose if you stick them up in the lobby in a manner to suggest that they are being utilized to cover a crack in the wall or mask a grease spot. Treat them as if you appreciated their artistic value and cost and they will receive the respect and attention of your patrons.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—it choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

Give Your Display a Show Case.

Your posters and photographs are the samples of what you are showing on your screen and the manner in which you display them will be taken as an indication of the manner in which you project the picture. Give your samples the benefit of an appropriate show case and double their attractiveness and cash producing value.

It does not cost much to do this and the revenue creating power of a set of harmonious lobby display frames is way beyond comparison with the expense involved.

Here are a few examples of what may be done in the way of dressing up your lobby without putting a crimp into the house bank roll. They are the product of the Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company, of 1029 West Adams street, Chicago, who manufacture the "Bilt-Rite" lobby display frames.

A Reversible Back.

The frame headed "Wednesday" is built in golden oak, mission, green filled or gilt finish as may be desired. It is of embossed oak and contains date space and is fitted with a reversible back which permits the display of either 8 by 10 or 11 by 14 photos in the same frame.

Frames slotted at top, mounted onto a reversible back display 8 by 10 photos. When 11 by 14 photos are to be used, back is reversed and serves as back only, holding photo in the 11 by 14 opening.

This frame will accommodate one 22 by 18 photo and six 11 by 14 or 8 by 10 photos and has easel and legs.

The frame headed "Sunday" is built with folding wings that make it easy to handle and adapt it to odd corners. It has easel and couch feet and may be had in the same finishes as the "Wednesday" frame.

In this frame, twelve 11 by 14 and one 22 by 28 photos may be displayed and the latter may be either oblong or upright. There is a date space at top of the centre panel as shown in the illustration.

Who Says That They Never Come Back?
It certainly is not the exhibitor whose lobby blossoms with displays like the above.

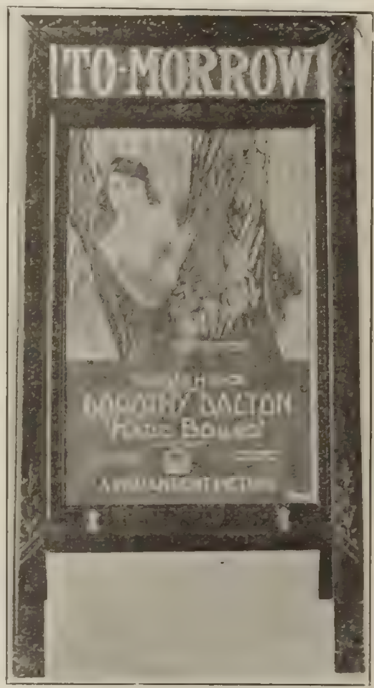
The frame headed "Friday" will take two 22 by 28 photos and seven 11 by 14 and has date frame at top. This also is built in golden oak, mission, green filled or gilt finishes as may be desired.

Setting Off the Poster.

The frame from which Dorothy Dalton smiles upon us takes a one sheet poster and is built of mahogany finished, hand carved moulding. It has date space at top and the glass front door is fitted with lock and key.

The frame is supported on legs and easel as shown.

The Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company have almost ready for distribution a book on lobby display entitled "Lobbyology" which will interest the readers of this department. As there will undoubtedly be a large demand for it, I would suggest that you put in a request for it now and make sure of a copy hot off the griddle.



This Frame
makes a one-sheet look like a masterpiece.

THE NEW

AMERICAN PROJECTOSCOPE

MOTOR-DRIVEN

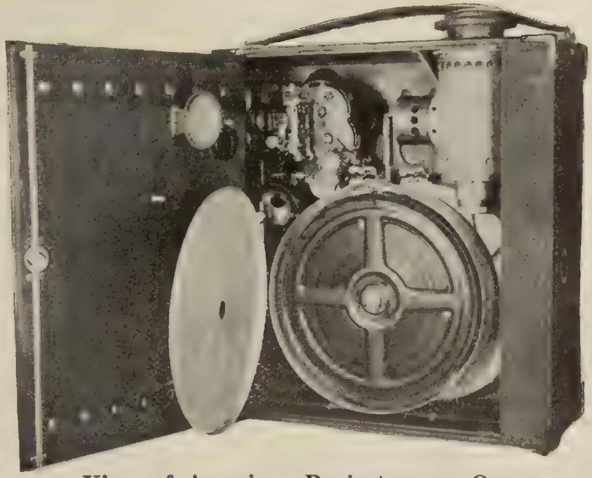
The American Projectoscope, known throughout the film trade as "The Portable Motion Picture Projecting Machine Without An Apology"—the most perfect type of portable projector yet put on the market, is now obtainable with a motor-drive. It is approved and endorsed by the foremost projection experts of the industry.

IDEAL FOR SCHOOLS & CHURCHES

Here is the ideal machine for showing motion pictures in schools and churches. Small, light, foolproof. Film can be stopped at any point. Run either forward or backward. No experience necessary. Anyone can operate it.

FOR SELLING MERCHANDISE

The American Projectoscope is perfect as a commercial projector. Equip your salesmen with rolls of commercial film showing your product in process of manufacture or in operation, provide them with American Projectoscopes and watch the orders roll in. "Seeing is believing." Your salesmen will be able to "show" prospects. They can demonstrate your motion pictures in a customer's office. Show pictures on a wall, window curtain, even on the ceiling. Thousands are in use for this purpose.



View of American Projectoscope Open

FOR FILM INSPECTION

Directors, film editors, etc., find the American Projectoscope without an equal for inspecting films in the laboratory. It permits you to stop the film anywhere. Run it backward or forward. No possibility of further mistakes in titles or scenes. Inspect any portion of a film at your leisure.

EASILY PORTABLE—RUNS FILM FORWARD OR BACKWARD

The new American Projectoscope, motor-driven, weighs but 25 pounds. In the hand-driven model the weight is but 20 pounds. It carries like a suitcase. The fact that films can be run either forward or backward, or stopped and held stationary on the screen makes the Projectoscope an especially desirable machine for demonstration purposes. Permits a salesman to lecture any point of a film, to turn back to any point desired.

BACKED BY GUARANTEE—REASONABLE IN PRICE

The strongest kind of a guarantee goes with each and every American Projectoscope. The thousands already in use have all given satisfaction plus. Houses that began with two or three Projectoscopes are now ordering enough to equip all their sales force. The Projectoscope is reasonable in price. Write for descriptive literature and prices.

Tell Us About It

THIS department exists for the purpose of spreading the glad tidings of anything in the way of equipment, its use or arrangement that makes or saves money for picture theatres or studios.

The door is wide open and the lid entirely absent to any exhibitor, house or studio manager or manufacturer who has a story to tell or a device to describe, the reading of which will tend to increase efficiency in the showing or making of films.

Send photos and diagrams whenever possible and address your communication to "Better Equipment" Department, Moving Picture World.

The Typhoon Breeze Makers Proceed to Stir Things Up

THE Typhoon Fan Company, 281 Lexington avenue, New York City, manufacturers of the Typhoon cooling, heating and ventilating system, is experiencing at the present time a marked increase in their business activities. So great has been the demand for the Typhoon system that it has been necessary to equip a new factory in New York City.

Much new machinery has been purchased and is being erected as fast as received, and several engineers are being added to the sales force. Ernest Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Company, has just returned from Chicago, where he closed negotiations for several installations, and has left again for the South, where he will inspect other installations at Knoxville, Nashville, Memphis and Atlanta, continuing to New Orleans, where he will spend the next two or three weeks.

What Prohibition Did.

Installations are being made in Kansas City, Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines, in charge of Engineer Edward Beck. In an interview with Mr. Glantzberg before his departure for New Orleans, he stated that the increased business so early in the season was no doubt due in part to the great number of new theatres being built throughout the country. He also stated that prohibition is having its effect upon the building of a great many of these theatres, while in many parts of the country, especially where the "flu" has hit hardest, many theatre owners are anxious to put their houses in a state of absolute safety through proper ventilation.

He stated, also, that the popularity of the Typhoon system has been brought about through its low cost of installation and absolute reliability of operation.

The following is a list of some of the more recent sales: Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, and the following Marcus Loew theatres: Metropolitan, Memphis; Grand Theatre, Atlanta; Vendome, Nashville; Knoxville, Knoxville; also the D. W. Griffith studio at Larchmont, N. Y.; the Stratford Theatre, Chicago; the Howard Theatre, Atlanta; and Saenger Theatre, Shrevesport, La.

Jim Milligan, who quit the World to become a Typhoon fan, has promised to send diagrams of the above installations as soon as he can get down to a forty-four hour week basis for himself. They will be worth studying by our readers.

Wants Heating Dope.

Moving Picture World:

This spring I contemplate the construction of a new theatre and am anxious to obtain suggestions from you in regard to the most practical heating plant to install.

The auditorium will measure about 48 feet in width, 150 feet in length, and 29 feet in heights. At the front of the building there will be a lobby measuring 14 feet by 44 feet, and two stores, each 17 feet by 44 feet. Over each store will be offices of the same dimensions, which will require heat during the winter months. The seating capacity of the theatre will be at least eight hundred (800).

I am taking the liberty of asking you for suggestions before placing my order for a furnace or boiler.

William Smalley.

Your auditorium would contain 208,800 cubic feet, the stores and offices, presuming that their ceilings would be 10 feet in height, would add 29,920 cubic feet, making a total of 238,720 cubic feet to be heated.

Basing the heating ratio at 1 to 100, this would call for about 2,000 square feet of radiating surface for the auditorium and about 300 square feet of radiating surface for stores and offices.

But you must take into consideration the fact that your ventilating system will change the air in cold weather at least four times per hour, thereby quadrupling the drain on the steam pressure through condensation in the radiators.

To care for this, your boiler must have a steam generating capacity of approximately 8,000 square feet for auditorium and 300 square feet for offices and stores. This calls for a total boiler capacity of 8,300 square feet.

To Be Safe.

To be on the safe side, a capacity of 9,000 cubic feet for the boiler would be advisable. Then you can take care of extraordinary conditions and warm the lobby at times, which has not been figured in the requirements.

But do not make the mistake of figuring your heating installation cost on a fixed price or a competitive basis. Make up your mind as to the outfit that will actually heat your house and have some capacity in reserve and have your heating contractor and the manufacturer guarantee the results. Do not expect either heating contractor or manufacturer to work some magic by which a small plant will be fooled into doing the work of a large one. And do not make the bid competitive. If you insist on installing a plant too small for the requirements, you cannot expect a contractor to turn down the order. It's more than human to refuse to sell a wise guy a substitute after he has refused to pay for the real thing. A reputable heater builder knows what his plants will do. He will not deliberately sell you too large a plant. He certainly does not want to raise up a kicker in your territory by selling you one that is too small. Let him advise you.

Then place your order with the heating contractor and see that you get the make and size that you specify.

Preview with the DeVry

SINCE a poor projector kills a good film, "preview" your films with the quality projector—the DeVry.

The DeVry is mechanically superior. It is made with the accuracy of a fine watch. It stands up to hard work! All this, and more, is made evident by all its projections.

Also—note these advantages: The De Vry lets you preview any film in your comfortable office—that keeps you out of the cold, empty theater! It lets you preview while your theater is crowded—that saves your time! It costs nothing for an operator—that saves you money! In fact, a De Vry soon pays its first cost.

To Film Exchanges a De Vry is of equal and inestimable value.

The De Vry is housed in a handsome, leather-covered box. The box looks like a suitcase. Weighs 20 pounds. You carry it anywhere. It has its own motor. It projects a picture up to 12 feet square and up to 80 feet distant.

You will like the De Vry! It is a real wonder. It does what we say. All we are asking is—the opportunity to show you! We are represented in 60 cities. Let us give you a free demonstration—in your own office, or home. It's no trouble at all! It's our business. There will be no obligation. (We have an interesting illustrated Booklet on the press.) So—wherever you live—we hope you will fill out and at once mail the coupon below. Why not do it—before you turn over this page?

Can Any Reader Help Him?

Moving Picture World:

One of our customers who has an Edison Home Kinetoscope, serial 2328, is desirous of buying some film for use in this machine. Our understanding is that this machine takes a special film, or other than standard size.

It occurred to us that perhaps you may know of some concern who may have some of that film and would be willing to dispose of it. If so, we will be obliged to you if you will either refer our inquiry to them or give us the name and address of the firm.

Enclosed please find stamped envelope for reply.

GO TO HELL AND YOU WILL EVER AFTER ASSOCIATE THE EXPERIENCE WITH THE SMELL OF BURNING SULPHUR. IN LIKE MEASURE RITCHEY POSTERS, IN THE EXHIBITOR'S MIND, ARE ASSOCIATED WITH INCREASED BOX-OFFICE RECEIPTS.

IMPRESSIONS, thoughts and ideas are inevitably connected. Hear a certain melody frequently, but always in the company of a certain person (preferably of the opposite sex)—then hear that selfsame melody alone, and in your mind will rise a vision of the missing companion!

All of which is abstract psychology, yet it explains why RITCHEY posters are in such strong demand by the exhibitor. The dollar-mark and the RITCHEY trade-mark have become associated in his mind. "RITCHEY" and "profit," to him, are interchangeable terms, for his long experience has taught him that RITCHEY posters mean tremendously increased box-office receipts!

As up-to-date as tomorrow's newspaper!

The Wolves Have Broken In!

Human wolves! Ranting at law, sneering at virtue, scattering red poison in the name of "humanity"!

"Dangerous Hours" is the startling, burning record of their deeds.

A picture built on the biggest thing that now faces the world. Therefore built for the crowds.

"HIS HOUSE IN ORDER"

A

Paramount Artcraft Picture

An intimate, real-life story of a "second wife." One who was always measured by the perfections of the first—always found wanting—driven to fight for a place in her own family, until in desperation—

Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's wonderful play.

Directed by Hugh Ford, who has surpassed even his splendid work in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

And Elsie Ferguson as the second wife who loved the gay life of Paris!

A picture for all women, and all men who marry them. That means a picture for your theatre.

Picture

LIKE READING IT AGAIN FOR THE FIRST TIME!

Only Mark Twain could put into words the wonderful charm, the universal heart appeal, of "Huckleberry Finn."

Only he could have written an advertisement worthy of the subject.

But anyone can put into words the box office appeal of the picture. Three words will do it.

They are: "Breaking records everywhere."

It's a picture the whole family will come to see again and again. It's a picture that builds prestige for your theatre—with the better class of people.

The first ten thousand admissions in one day was the record secured by the Rialto Theatre on the Sunday that

"The Cinema Murder"
with Marion Davies

a Cosmopolitan Production for Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, was the feature attraction.

9,741 of these were paid admissions.

The total paid admissions for the entire week that this picture played at the Rialto was 52,145, breaking all previous records for attendance and box office receipts.

Cosmopolitan Productions, from the greatest stories of the greatest authors, first receive the enormous pre-publicity that is gained when they appear in fiction form in the Hearst chain of magazines, and are afterwards extensively advertised in the Hearst newspapers whose circulation is 4,891,014, and whose zone of influence covers the United States.

The same progressive spirit that prompts the out-for-success exhibitor to stamp his theatre with that note of personality and 'difference' distinctive of the well run house, impels him to demand for his screen News Weeklies exclusively the best in the market—which is the reason why he shows The Big Three { International News Universal Current Events Hearst News } —distinguishable from all competitors by the exclusiveness of their news features. This News Service (released through Universal) is the only one screened in theatres where the modern, progressive, please-your-patrons policy is the keynote.

RUIN!

The ugly fist of ruin smashed through the smooth shell of their smug, well-ordered lives. Prison confronted the father--poverty and disgrace the daughter. Then, in their black hour of despair, came a lonely, bitter man, for whom life had lost it's savor. How he sacrificed himself to save them, and how he saved himself in the act of sacrifice is told in this powerful picturization of Basil King's greatest book.

Edgar's idea of his father—rolling in wealth, but remarkably close with pennies.

Not the best boy in town, nor the worst.
Just a regular American kid.

Edgar's idea of a good time—a pony, a high hat, and the biggest ice cream cone in the world.

EDGAR IN A NATURAL MOMENT

IN "Penrod" and "Seventeen," Booth Tarkington revealed himself to the world as the greatest living authority on that mysterious person—the small boy.

In the Edgar stories Tarkington's first original work for the screen—he creates a boy that everybody will revel in——a real American Boy, neither wholly good nor irredeemably bad, but always human.

The story of his weird boyish career, his mental reactions, his mischiefs, his dreams, his loves and his triumphs makes the most fascinating, the most deliciously humorous series ever shown in motion pictures.

The greatest race that ever happened has been perpetuated on the screen. It will be run over and over again before the straining eyes of millions in the film version of this famous Drury Lane melodrama, "The Sporting Duchess." The plunging hooves of blooded animals, and the craning necks of blooded aristocrats and the sidelong, lurking gaze of plotting conspirators and the prayers of frightened souls all hanging on the turn of fate that lies in the hearts of those tearing animals—all form a brew of drama in this masterpiece of the screen.

Alice Joyce playing the role, is queenly. This is a film that will make one's blood seethe.

Interiors that Act

ONE of the innovations of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside is that which has been developed in the scenic effects under the skillful direction of A. Bela Viragh-Flower.

Too few of the film producers have realized the possibilities of interiors. Some of the better stage producers, such as Belasco, and Ordynski of the Metropolitan Opera House, have proven that a whole story can virtually be told before a word is spoken, if the backgrounds and hangings are of the right kind.

In the new school of scenic art, we find such masters as Bakst, Anisfeld, Urban, Pogany and Wenger. Add to these the name of Flower, one of the greatest in film circles, because he has devoted his genius to the perfection of interiors related only to the screen.

"Interiors that Act" are a development of Park-Whiteside Productions. You will recognize Park-Whiteside Productions the moment the scenes appear on the screen by the fact that they are marvelous actors in themselves.

They tell the story before the human actors have moved a muscle or spoken a word.

Watch the other producers imitate Flower's Interiors that Act, but more particularly be the first in your city to take advantage of this brand new screen innovation.

BACK OF THE SPECIAL PICTURES CORPORATION is the Aronson Co., controlled by the Hellman group of bankers—men who are in the front rank of finance in Western America.

THESE MEN LIVE in the very capital of the film world. They can't afford to guess. They know! They know—as few men do—the factors that count for success in the production and marketing of motion pictures.

SO BEFORE WE could even hope to interest them in our plan of concentration on the producing and marketing of short subjects we had to show them.

WE SHOWED THEM that the big idea back of these films is essentially practical.

WE SHOWED THEM the peculiar genius of our producing heads.

WE SHOWED THEM that, despite the great amount of footage being turned out today, there is an overwhelming demand on the part of film fans for just such comedy-features.

WE SHOWED THEM that no other film on the market could hope to compete with these releases.

AND, WE PROVED our case so thoroughly that their money is back of us today. That in itself is significant. It means that we're bound to win. For their record shows that they have not picked one loser in the past five years. They've investigated for a year and now they're back of Special Pictures Corporation from the tap of the gong.

HERE'S THE IDEA—

NO LONGER WILL the particular exhibitor—the real showman—have to buy five or six short subjects in order to make up 2000 feet of speed and action. He will not have to buy a thousand foot scenic in order to get the four hundred feet he wants, nor will he have to buy a topical picture to secure a snappy little, educational, or what-not. We are giving him, in this two thousand feet all he desires. This two reeler with a feature production will give that finesse and smoothness that is now only obtainable in the better first run houses.

West and East

THE West Coast loses no time in calling attention to the handicap under which eastern producers have been working by reason of the big storm which has been creating havoc on the Atlantic Coast. The advocate in this instance of the Pacific protagonists is Thomas H. Ince, who, in an exclusive telegram to the Moving Picture World, interestingly sets forth his reasons why the East cannot hope to displace the West as a motion picture producing country.

Mr. Ince does not confine his arguments to those of the weather. "In every point of production activity and administrative progress California proves its advantages over other states in the Union," the producer declares. "Retakes are seldom necessary. I also emphasize the assets of the commercial side of production in Los Angeles. The scale of compensation for office assistants and manual labor is lower. In a recent production which we made in New York the cost of building was approximately 33 1/3 per cent. higher than in Los Angeles."

The producer quotes many other factors of production wherein he claims the advantage lies with the West Coast. Among these are a larger number of available writers and players and incidentally the absence of "night life." Mr. Ince sums up: "The industry is well rooted here and will doubtless remain a permanent institution."

As to the latter statement no one who is cognizant of the magnitude of the motion picture investment in California will have any doubt that the industry there will remain a permanent institution. California even may continue to be the home of a majority of the American studios. There is reason to believe, however, the East will maintain in the future the same relative proportion of production it has in the past. The large sums now being invested in permanent structures in and around New York provide the best evidence of this.

Five years ago the writer of these lines estimated after a careful examination "on the spot" that 62½ per cent. of American production was photographed in California. There were many claims at that time by Angelenos official and otherwise that the figure was 80 per cent. Eighty per cent. is claimed today. We are inclined to the belief that the situation is subject to the same discount today that it was in 1915. Conceding this, five-eighths of a nation's motion picture production credited to one community easily will be admitted to be the lion's share. And that is sufficient glory to satisfy even a Native Son.

Urges Support for Board of Review

TWO announcements of changes in routine that will interest exhibitors came this week from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. One of these states that hereafter the title indicating that a picture has been approved by the National Board of Review will precede the appearance of the production rather than that it will be shown at the end. Mr. Zukor, in a formal statement, appeals for support of the Board of Review in its fight against official censorship. He urges exhibitors to employ the Review Board's emblem wherever it appears in order that the demand by officious persons for federal or state or municipal censorship may be minimized.

The second change is in the manner of declaring the length of a feature. Where heretofore it has been customary to publish the number of reels, in the future the release lists will carry the number of feet of film. The term "reel" is not definitely translatable in minutes on the screen. Exact footage is. The innovation will be of material aid to those showmen who figure closely on their show schedule.

The Screen and the Press

UNDER the heading "Will the Film Replace the Printing Press?" the New York Globe recently editorially suggested that the inquiry had appeared as to whether in time books, magazines and newspapers will bow before the new method of conveying thought. The newspaper declares "there is nothing that can be confidently prophesied about the place the cinema will take in the coming century except that it will be of extraordinary importance. But it doesn't open up as many new stores of information as the printing press did," the article concludes. "It can only argue by means of assumptions."

Lewis J. Selznick takes exception to the last statement if by it the Globe means the screen cannot present arguments in the manner of the newspaper editorial. He cites Herbert Kaufman's weekly screen editorials, soon to be released, as an argument against the newspaper's contention. The producer points out that the newcomer to the screen not only drives home the printed word, but by the aid of moving pictures makes that word so clear that no one can mistake its meaning.

Mr. Selznick says it is a fact that the average person does not read editorials. With that statement many will take issue. Few there are who have time to read all the editorials in a newspaper—that is, among the residents of a large community.

There are those in the industry, as the Globe points out—Mr. Selznick is not one of these—who predict the printing press will soon be obsolete. These prophets overlook the fact that printing presses have multiplied in number right through the evolution of the motion picture. While the total number of newspapers may have decreased in the past year or two—due to inability to stand up under withering postal rates—the bulk of the large number of survivors has steadily increased. Though there may be many followers of the screen who are indifferent readers it hardly will be disputed that the possessors of the better trained minds find in the motion picture the larger enjoyment.

The printing press will not become obsolete by reason of the motion picture. These two important factors in the life of today and of tomorrow will expand together. The product of the first will continue to supply the inspiration for the best that is to be found in the second.

Griffith's Speech Deals Death Blow to Censorship Movement in Virginia

THE Virginia Legislature has dealt a death blow to motion picture censorship. The Joint Committee of the Senate and House on Moral and Social Welfare has reported unanimously against a bill to create a board of censors in the state. This action brings to a close one of the hottest fights ever conducted in the South on the subject of censorship, a fight in which David Wark Griffith, producer; Jake Wells, representing the Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors, and J. S. Connolly, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Indusary, were pitted against a group of ministers, each of whom represented a powerful ministerial body in the state. The meeting was held at Richmond on February 5.

The Rev. W. A. Hall, in speaking against the films, urged that a censorship board was needed. He admitted that he was not a motion picture patron, but declares the "movies" were a great evil in the community. He attempted to blame motion pictures for many crimes of the present day, but his arguments only caused merriment among the legislators.

Baptist a "Movie Fan."

The Rev. J. J. Wicker, a Baptist, received a round of applause when he admitted that he was a "movie fan." He declared, however, that while he could not recall seeing any objectionable films, he believed that moving pictures would be much better off with censorship.

Wyndham R. Meredith, counsel for the Virginia exhibitors, said it would be impossible to find any three men or women who could be trusted to act with arbitrary powers in censoring motion pictures. He did, however, introduce an amendment to the Penal Code of the state prohibiting the exhibition of indecent pictures. This was received entrusiastically by both sides.

What Mr. Griffith Said.

To D. W. Griffith more individual credit probably is due than to any other agency in the winning of the fight. Mr. Griffith made one of the strongest arguments possible, and the impression he made on the legislators was such that immediately after he had finished four of them declared they would not even listen to the other side of the case.

"I believe," said Mr. Griffith, "that the motion picture is a medium of expression as clean and decent as any mankind ever has discovered. A people who would allow the suppression of this form of speech would unquestionably submit to the suppression of that which we all consider so highly—the printing press.

"Can you imagine a young Edgar Allan Poe of the present day sitting down and writing with the knowledge that a censor in every state in the Union was to delete his article before it was published? What sort of literature would be written?

"Can you imagine it? All inspiration, enthusiasm and great idealism would be oozed away from any creative writer by the knowledge that three or four political delegates from each of the states, to say nothing of the villages and hamlets, were each and every one to take the scissors and cut the inspiration to suit their tastes.

"Our books, magazines, plays and speechs, everything which the eye can see and the ear hear; every instrument employed for painting, printing or the other expressions and proclamations of thought should be left to the corrective force of that greatest board of censors, unappointed and unpaid—the American people.

"The laws of every city are sufficient to suppress libelous, obscene, indecent, immoral and impure pictures, just as they always have been sufficient to supress the publication of vicious literature, and no further censorship is needed in the premises."

Jersey Clergy Defeats Revision of Blue Laws

BY a vote of twenty to four, the Citizens' Committee to consider the revision of the blue laws of New Jersey voted against any modification of these laws at a meeting at the Board of Trade offices in Newark on February 9. The body was brought into existence about two months ago when Justice James T. Minturn, of Hoboken, wrote to various clergymen and prominent men and women, urging them to form such an organization.

Justice Miturn said that grand juries could not be induced to indict nor petty juries to convict for violations of the ancient anti-amusement and Sabbath laws, and he suggested rewriting the laws to accord with modern views. A sub-committee was appointed and all but two of its members favored repealing all blue laws and giving local communities "home rule."

The Lord's Day Alliance has been carrying on an agitation for a strict enforcement of the Sabbath of our forefathers. Alliance members were among those invited by Justice Minturn to join the Citizens' Committee. They became the most active members, and on February 9 succeeded in voting down the majority report of the sub-committee and adopted the minority report, urged by only two of the seven members.

Rembusch Rallies Showmen for South Carolina Fight

THE South Carolina Legislature is considering a bill for a legalized motion picture censorship, and Frank J. Rembusch, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has written a letter to exhibitors of the state, saying: "George C. Warner has called a meeting of South Carolina exhibitors for February 11 to make protest. It is now up to the exhibitors of South Carolina. Will every mother's son of you attend this meeting or will you 'leave it to George?'"

Mr. Rembusch also writes that "the motion picture is a publication like the public press and a legal censor is an outrage against free speech and freedom of conscience." He hits the bull's-eye when he says that "if you expect any miracles, you will have to perform them yourself. Every person interested in the motion picture business is interested in your censorship fight, but we can't do much except look on, so we take this means of asking you to go to this meeting 100 per cent. strong."

Exhibitors Take Up Their Share in Nation's "Americanization" Problems

Secretary of Interior Lane Makes Stirring Address to Committee Members in Which He Credits Motion Picture Industry With Great Power to Act As an Inspiration to Patriotism and National Spirit

ON Lincoln's Birthday the Americanization plan projected by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with the co-operation of Secretary of the Interior, and backed by resolution in Congress, got under way. The movement is expressed in the word "Americanization."

Thus the screen is authoritatively endorsed as the "great educator" and through pictures that will be shown during the ensuing year foreigners and weakling Americans will be inspired by films especially produced to reflect the mission of Democracy. Harry N. Crandall, of Washington, is leading the movement on behalf of the exhibitor's and Lewis J. Selznick is chairman of the distributor's branch of the general committee.

Chairman Crandall, speaking for and to the exhibitor, issued this statement while the Lincoln's Birthday launching of the American movement was breaking in the news of filmdom:

"I am deeply grateful to the exhibitors of the country for the splendid spirit that they have shown in the Americanization program. For the second time in the history of our organization the Government called upon us to combat the enemy and we have risen to the occasion.

"Congress, through the Senate and House Committee on Education, passed a joint resolution requesting us to use our resources. We cannot afford to lay down on the job and it is up to every single exhibitor in the country to do his share.

"The exhibitor must keep his screen free from anything that savors in the slightest degree of radicalism. We must put on our screens pictures that will give the people of this country a better understanding of the opportunities that are here.

First Film Extensively Shown.

"Already the first picture made by Lewis J. Selznick, the chairman of the distributors' branch of the general committee, and approved by the committee has been released. This picture, "The Land of Opportunity," with Ralph Ince, was shown in one hundred and fifty-seven first run houses of the country on Lincoln's Birthday.

"The picture has a strong appeal and met with instant approval all over the country.

"The exhibitors must put aside any personal feelings and must fulfill their part of the bargain with the Government. It is the duty of every exhibitor to show this picture regardless of whether his opponent has shown it previously or not.

"The producers of pictures have guaranteed to make new pictures and the distributors have agreed that they shall reach the theatres. We have never fallen down in any undertaking that we have started and we will not at this time.

"The Eastman Kodak Company has had contributed one quarter of a million feet of film to the committee for its work in making trailers. A letter was sent to George Eastman by the Americanization Committee, in which it was pointed out the necessity and importance of the trailers.

Trailers for Feature Films.

"The trailers are now being written by Secretary Lane. Mr. Eastman immediately replied that he was heartily in sympathy with the movement and would do everything in his power to co-operate and make it a success.

"His offer of the film was immediately accepted and the trailers are now being printed and will be ready for distribution in about a week. The committee has decided that these trailers shall be shipped to the various exchange centers in the country where they will be attached to feature pictures."

Secretary Lane addressed the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry in Washington. We are, unfortunately, unable to give his remarks in full, but quote, in part, as follows:

"The whole idea of this program is that we shall try to revivify the spirit of our people. You are as conscious as I am of the attitude that was taken by the Americans during the war.

"It was a great surprise to us; it was a still greater surprise to the Allies; and it was an overwhelming surprise to our enemies. None of us had any expectation that the people of the United States would with such enthusiasm rise to the necessities of the time.

One Reason for Slump.

"One of the reasons that the country now is in slack water is because we got so used during the war to having some department of the Government or some official of the Government saying what we should do and giving definite and precise orders that we are simply trying to get back our old personal initiative and 'go on our own' as the English say.

"We are in a slump; that is to say, we are not buoyant, we are not confident, we are not as sure of ourselves as we were. That is attributable to a great many causes, and the easiest of all causes to attribute it to, and probably the one that is responsible for most of our trouble, is the fact that after every period of great excitement and intensity there always comes a let-down.

"We have thought that it would be a good thing if we could make the people of the United States realize that there was necessity for keeping up their tone, for having some of the exaltation of feeling that they had before. So this Americanization campaign was inaugurated through the motion picture people.

High Praise for Film Industry.

"We are not unappreciative of the services—the immense service—that was done by the industry during the war; we think that the thing that you did then did much to strengthen your standing as a permanent factor in the development of the conception of the motion picture as an educational force in the United States. That undoubtedly is true.

"There was your opportunity. You took advantage of it, and you made the people of the country feel that the motion picture was as real as the newpaper or as the pulpit—as real, probably, as the pulpit used to be when religion had more definite hold upon the people.

"Now your opportunity is to continue to emphasize that spirit and that attitude. Instead of simply giving a certain degree of amusement to the people, you want also to convey to them ideas that are stimulating—that man has a finer nature as well as a grosser nature.

"That is the fine thing that I see in the motion picture people that I have come in contact with. I have been in very little contact with them heretofore, but I have had several meetings with them lately.

"I find them conscious of their own opportunities and conscious of their own responsibilities, and extremely anxious that they shall be of service to the country, and that they shall be a helpful and a healthy influence in the country.

An Exhibitor Campaign.

"They have taken up this campaign with great enthusiasm. It is their campaign; it is not mine. I serve you; am simply trying to give some direction to the enterprise that you have and to make the people of the country feel that you are availing yourselves of the chance that has come.

"So they have agreed to give fifty-two Americanization pictures during the year and to have a current of Americanization through all that they produce where that is practicable—to run a golden thread of the American spirit through the web. And the inauguration of this campaign will come on Lincoln's Birthday.

"We want that the motion picture house shall show itself as an American institution; that there shall be something distinctive about the American motion picture house; that it shall be regarded upon that date as the place of resort for patriotic Americans who want to feel a bit of stimulus around the heart, a bit of warmth, who want to have placed before them some of the glories of this country, some of the fineness of its spirit, a bit of its tradition and a bit of its history, that that fine thing that is in every one of us, and that is not visible to us all the time—the sentiment of love of country, and the sentiment of admiration for the great figures of our country—shall have gratification.

Defining Democracy.

"Democracy is just this: It is a lifting of the inhibitions that are upon men, so as to give them an opportunity to show themselves. That ideal can not be realized immediately.

"It takes time for people to understand that freedom has that advantage. But that is the full meaning of democracy.

"It does not mean that it is going to make a man out of a cornstalk; it does not mean that it is going to turn the pig's tail into a whistle; it does not mean that there is any miracle done by which you transmute dross into pure gold; it means that if there is the pure gold in you it will have a chance under freedom to show itself. And that is the significance of Lincoln's life; and that is the reason why there is hope in all of us as Americans, because the man will come through

"So if you gentlemen will continue to show interest and work up this campaign properly I have no doubt but that you will put into the mind of the American boy and girl and man and woman in Washington the thought that this is the land of hope; that here there is no reason for adopting the doctrine of despair.

Urging the Showman's Share.

"You are furnishing something of an editorial nature for yourselves—something that is serious, something that is not mere gossip, something that has thought behind it, something that is intended to mold opinion—and of course you are going to be greater and greater as molders of public opinion.

"You will die, you will fade out, you will go into the background, unless you have opinions of your own and those opinions get across to the people. The greatness of the stage and the greatness of the newspaper, the greatness of the book, ultimately lies in the fact not merely that they entertain but that they leave something in the mind that makes for a sweeter life, for a nobler lief, or for a higher degree of mentality and a greater usefulness. That is to be your part.

"We ought to have the same sort of thing on Washington's Birthday. We ought to pick out distinguishing days throughout the year and celebrate those in the some way. There is a great chance for the motion picture house.

"You can make yourselves a great deal more of a community center than you ever have been; you can attach people to you, make them feel identified with you, make them feel that there is a sort of spirit to a playhouse, that there is character that lies behind it. That is the greatness of the newspaper; that is the difference between the real newspaper and one that is a mere purveyor of news. I don't see why the same kind of philosophy cannot be made applicable to your industry."

MacMahon Opens Scenario Deparement

Henry MacMahon, of 321 West Fifty-fifth street, New York, has established a scenario and title editing department of his literary bureau in the general service of the industry. Authors and playwrights of distinction have agreed to dispose of their work through this agency, and there is a competent staff to take charge of original research work for producers, the preparation of stories and the making of continuities.

Originally a magazine writer and representative of big special attractions, Henry MacMahon has specialized the last two years in the writing of original matter for the screen. He offers to producers extensive knowledge of the story market, an alert eye to novelties of visualization, and broad experience both in creating and in titling.

Fox Purchases Screen Rights for 67 Richard Harding Davis Stories

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, has just announced that he has purchased the screen rights for sixty-seven stories by Richard Harding Davis. This is one of the biggest literary deals in the history of motion pictures.

In announcing that he had secured the rights to everything worth while written by Richard Harding Davis, Mr. Fox pointed out that he believes these stories have a peculiar screen value. The characters portrayed by Mr. Davis are especially adapted to motion pictures, he said, and will be of as much interest in foreign countries as in the United States. What pleased Mr. Fox most, however, was that in closing the deal, he had a great American writer as the central figure of the productions.

"It is just what Davis would have wished were he alive today," was the comment of one of his friends who figured in the deal. "The essence of his works was vivid pen picturization. Modern writers say they now go to the pictures in order to visualize their characters. But Davis was a writer who visualized his characters so that they stand out in his works almost as if they were being shown on the screen. To transfer his stories to motion pictures will be a wonderfully simple operation, because his writings were the essence of simplicity—just as good motion pictures are the essence of simplicity."

List of Books Bought.

Foremost among the Davis classics which are to be produced by Fox Film Corporation are "Gallagher," a newspaper story; "Real Soldiers of Fortune," the Van Bibber stories, and "The Lion and the Unicorn."

Following is the list in full:

Van Bibber's Manservant, Van Bibber at the Races, An Experiment in Economy, Traver's First Hunt, Love Me, Love My Dog, How Hefty Burke Got Even, A Leander of the East River, The Exiles, The Boy Orator of Zapata City, The Princess Aline, A Recruit at Christmas, A Patron of Art.

Andy Magee's Chorus Girl, Outside the Prison, The Writing on the Wall, His Bad Angel, An Anonymous Letter, The Reporter Who Made Himself King, Cinderella, Miss Catherwaite's Understudy, The Editor's Story, An Assisted Emigrant, A Walk Up the Avenue, The Other Woman, The Trailer from Room 8.

There Were Ninety and Nine, The Cynical Mrs. Catherwaite, Van Bibber and the Swan Boats, Van Bibber as Best Man, The Make-Believe Man, Peace Maneuvers, The Amateur,, The Spy, A Question of Latitude, The Mesengers, A Wasted Day, The Grand Cross of the Crescent.

The Invasion of England, Blood Will Tell, The Sailor Man, The Mind Reader, The Lost Road, The Miracle of Las Palmas, Evil to Him Who Thinks Evil, The Men of Zanzibar, The Long Arm, The God of Coincidence, My Buried Treasure, The Consul.

The Nature Faker, The Frame-Up, The Card Sharp, The King's Jackal, The Story of a Jockey, Summer Pirates, Richard Carr's Baby, Van Bibber's Baseball Club, The Great Tri-Club Tennis Tournament.

The Jump at Corey's Ship, On the Fever Ship, The Man with One Talent, A Vagrant, The Lion and the Unicorn, Real Soldiers of Fortune, The Deserter, or the Man Who Had Everything, La Lettre d'Amour, The Log of the Jolly Polly.

In summing up the Richard Harding Davis deal, which was closed at considerable expense, Mr. Fox said:

"For the first time in the history of pictures all of the great works of a great author are to be intelligently shown on the screen by one company. This is actually the transferring of American literature to motion pictures. Such a thing has been done singly in a big way, as with William Farnum in 'A Tale of Two Cities' and 'Les Miserables'; with 'The Strongest' by Georges Clemenceau; with Pearl White in 'The White Moll,' by Frank L. Packard; also with children's classics, such as 'Ali Baba' and 'Treasure Island.'

"The Richard Harding Davis pictures however, will mark a new era in world literature. It was with the idea of creating something new and big to public thought and imagination as well as entertainment that the rights for the Davis pictures were obtained."

Directors Association to Hold Second Function

AT the Hotel Biltmore, on the evening of March 20, scheduled to begin at 9 o'clock, will be the film affair de luxe of the season, it being intended it shall surpass anything of its kind offered so far in the way of entertainment with dancing. It will be a grand ball, given under the auspices of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, and is in reality the second of an annual function instituted in 1918, discontinued last year on account of the number of men in and conected with war service.

No expense will be spared to make the ball a much greater success even than the previous one. In addition to two orchestras, profuse floral decorations and an elaborate supper, the entertainment committee also promises many surprising novelties which will occur alternately between groups of dances.

Members of the association are busy compiling their lists of subscribers, each director being alloted a limited number of applications for invitation, due primarily to the capacity of the ballroom.

It is believed the ball also will be the source of bringing together for the first time in two years the stars, producers and directors identified with the motion picture industry in a social function that will reflect to the credit of the association.

In lieu of a favor a program of uniform excellence and dignity will be published for the occasion in commemoration of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and the event itself.

Huge Salaries, Foreign Exchange and Competition Imperil Industry

By P. A. Powers

YOU ask me what I think of the future outlook of the motion picture business. I am sorry that you ask me this question just now, as I am rather pessimistic as to the immediate future of the business. However, as there is enough optimism in this business to offset it, you might just as well know what I really think, and of what I am convinced.

Large Factors Not Awake.

The facts which have presented themselves to me in the last six months have convinced me that the motion picture industry in the United States is going to be up against a tough time, and apparently the large factors in the industry do not realize what is in store for them, or do not want to.

For the past four years, or since the war started, the motion picture industry in the United States has been blessed with unprecedented prosperity. Manufacturers have been able to secure unheard of prices for their productions both in America and throughout the world. This condition was due to the fact that European competition was entirely wiped out and we had practical control of the world's markets at our prices during the war.

High Prices for Artists and Writers.

This does not mean that the industry as a whole has benefited by this condition, but the artists and writers have benefited by it to a very great extent, as you very rarely hear now that the motion picture industry is not paying the writers anything for the "children of their brain." They are getting now, and have been in the past, colossal prices for the picture rights for stories.

There has been keen competition among the producers for writers and artists. Prices have been paid which have been startling to the general public. That was entirely due to the fact that we had the world's market and receipts from the product from the entire universe.

Exchange Rates Imperils.

Since the cessation of hostilities, conditions have changed United States and the European exchange to such an extent that foreign buyers at the present time are unable to fulfill their contracts as they could during the war when the exchange was at par. And in endeavoring to fulfill their obligations, foreign buyers have practically bankrupted themselves, with the result that they are now unable to purchase American pictures at wartime prices and pay for them in dollars, with the consequent result that American producers find themselves with an accumulation of productions which they are unable to market in foreign territories.

This condition will continue to get worse instead of better, and unless the American producers are satisfied to accept foreign currency for their productions they will force the foreign buyers into the production of pictures, which they had suspended during the war, and the American producers will find themselves up against that competition.

Must Eliminate Huge Salaries.

To meet this future competition, it will be impossible for the American producers to continue paying the colossal salaries to artists and the phenomenal prices to authors for their services and stories, although they continue to do so nothwithstanding the facts that I have stated.

Only last week I heard of a story which was sold in the neighborhood of $200,000, and in view of the many contracts which the American producers have entered into with stars and authors, they will find it a very difficult proposition to contend with. It will result sooner or later in considerable embarrassment in the industry.

As a general thing men in this business do not want to look cold facts in the face. They live on optimism and any other atmosphere does not tend to make them happy.

Should Base Revenue on U. S.

I have noticed in the trade papers during recent months several notices of warning from men who make it their business to sell pictures in foreign territories, but due to the fact that some of these men's names do not appear daily in public print, their warnings evidently receive very little attention and the game goes merrily on.

Activities in the production centers still continue without any thought; extravagances of directors and stars are the order of the day. The business has not benefited, as I stated before, by the prosperity which this country has enjoyed for the past four years as producers have put nothing in reserve to meet the situation which is apparent in the immediate future.

P. A. Powers

The result is that today the cost of pictures that are in the making is based on world-wide receipts when they should be based only on the revenue to be derived from the United States. And American producers must make up their minds to deliver their pictures abroad and accept therefore foreign currency instead of United States dollars.

This will enable them to forestall any foreign competition in the future in their home market, but for the American producers to accomplish this there has got to be a retrenchment along all lines, particularly actors' salaries and authors' prices for their stories. There has got to be a retrenchment in lavish expenditures which heretofore has been the rule. If this is not done, and done immediately, a hard time is in store for the picture industry in America.

In order to accomplish the results, it is not necessary to cheapen or to put out inferior productions, but it is absolutely essential that every dollar be made to show on the screen, and the principal order of retrenchment must be made in the reduction, as stated, of artists' and authors' remuneration, less lavish expenditures in sets and more attention paid to the dramatic effect. Too much money has heretofore been spent on beautiful and expensive sets in order to cover lack of dramatic situation.

Al Lichtman Announces New Sales Appointments

AL LICHTMAN, general manager, department of distribution, has announced the following appointments in the Famous Players-Lasky sales force, effective on February 9:

Fred Creswell, formerly branch manager at Chicago, has been promoted to the position of special representative in charge of the offices at Chicago and Minneapolis, and Indianapolis when opened. Mr. Creswell succeeds John W. Allen, lately deceased. Until the appointment of a branch manager for Chicago is made, Mr. Creswell will act also in that capacity.

Harris P. Wolfberg, formerly branch manager at Cincinnati, has been promoted to the position of special representative supervising the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Cleveland exchanges. Mr. Wolfberg succeeds Harry H. Buxbaum, who recently assumed the management of the New York branch exchange. Fred Strief, formerly a salesman in the Cincinnati territory, succeeds Mr. Wolfberg as branch manager.

Allan S. Moritz, formerly a salesman in the territory of the Washington exchange, has been advanced to the position of manager of the Buffalo branch exchange, succeeding Richard C. Fox, resigned. Paul J. Swift has been transferred from the position of branch manager at Washington to the management of the Omaha branch, succeeding C. L. Peavey, resigned. Lester Rosenthal, former sales manager at Washington, has been promoted to the position of branch manager.

Charges Chadwick with False Representation

PAPERS in an action filed in the supreme court of New York by Guy Croswell Smith against Isaac E. Chadwick, an American film man, have been served upon the latter by Seligsberg, Lewis & Strous, attorneys for the plaintiff, of 45 Cedar street, New York City. The case involves the sale to Guy Croswell Smith by the defendant of the rights to the motion picture, "The Unchastened Woman," for all foreign territory outside of the United States, Canada, Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

In the petition it is charged that the sale was made under a false representation in that the original contract was signed by Isaac E. Chadwick as vice president of the Rialto de Luxe Productions, a supposed corporation which, it is claimed, was the owner of these rights to "The Unchastened Woman." Mr. Smith claims that upon information and belief there is no such corporation as the Rialto de Luxe Productions and that therefore it did not own the rights which Chadwick, as vice president, undertook to transfer.

The plaintiff asks $10,000 damages in return for the money advanced at the time the contract was entered into and for sums which were subsequently expended in exploiting the picture before there was reason to allege that there had been false representation in the transfer of the foreign rights to this work.

Service in the action was accepted by Mr. Chadwick, but no reply to the suit has been filed up to date.

Salt Lake Operators Lose Fight for Six-Hour Day

DIFFERENCES between the operators and the Salt Lake Theatre Managers' Association which led the former to walk out nearly two weeks ago have been adjusted and the operators have indicated their willingness to return to work. While the theatre managers will again recognize the union, the operators will return under old conditions and without a contract.

The strike resulted from a demand of the operators' union for a six-hour day. The theatre managers expressed their willingness to sign a six months contract and allow an increase of wages, but they stood out firmly against the union's six hours demand. Now the operators will return without the contract and without the salary increase. They will work seven hours a day as of old.

The men who have been operating the machines in the several picture houses during the strike are to be allowed to continue to work for a period of thirty days. At the end of that time those who wish to continue in the calling will be required to take the operators' examination. If they pass this examination they will be admitted to the union. Otherwise they will discontinue their services for the theatres using union men, which include all houses in Salt Lake City.

Citizen's Bodies to Frame Censorship for Washington

CENSORED moving pictures are not popular, and moral pictures without censorship must be brought about by the demand of audiences, according to Rev. Dr. J. D. Buhrer, who has recently completed an investigation of moving picture conditions in Washington, D. C.

Experiences of the moving picture men themselves, said Dr. Buhrer, have shown that censored pictures are not popular. Theatres which had tried out a system of running strictly censored films upon certain days and advised their patronage of that fact found that, at first, the children were brought to the theatres in larger numbers on those days, but that shortly they came on other days as well and the attendance dropped off on the days set for the censored films.

Members of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, said Dr. Buhrer, have recommended the creation of a board of censorship for Washington, saying that was the only way to procure the right kind of pictures. Steps are to be taken by the citizen's organizations to frame a plan for some scheme of censorship which will be urged upon the District at a later date.

Would Charge Publishers for Advertising Music

TWO important resolutions were adopted at a recent regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis. The first deals with the annual seat tax levied on theatres for the privilege of using certain music and songs, and the second resolution protests an increase in the rental price of the Ford Weekly.

The first resolution is as follows:

Whereas, a certain society comprising a group of authors, composers and publishers has caused an annual seat tax to be levied on theatres for the privilege of rendering any music or songs with which the above society is identified unless the said tax (7½ per cent. per annum) is paid i nadvance, which works a hardship on the majority of exhibitors;

Be it resolved, that on and after February 1, 1920, the members of this league are requested to place a minimum charge of $25 a night on all publishers and song pluggers for the use of their screen and theatres for advertising purposes, thus assuring their patrons the benefit of their music and songs; also to enable the exhibitor to meet with the cost of this extra tax imposed on him.

The second resolution is as follows:

Whereas, the Ford Weekly, which has enjoyed unlimited popularity in the past and is accepted as a high-class educational subject by the exhibitor, is being distributed by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the regulation price of $12 per anum plus war tax has been advanced to $52 plus war tax per annum on all new contracts, and,

Whereas, the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis feel that inasmuch as the said reel is an advertising proposition, they de resent the commercializing of their screen and theatres without remuneration,

Be it resolved, that on and after February 1, 1920, all members are requested to refrain from signing the new contracts, also refrain from displaying said reel under their old contracts, thus eliminating the circulation thereof unless the distributor rescinds the price on the new contracts.

Betty Compson Company Is Among Incorporations

FIVE new concerns engaging in motion picture business were incorporated in New York State during the past week, the number being comparatively small.

The five consisted of the Motion Picture Arts, to deal in motion pictures, capitalized at $20,000, with Martin B. Kelley, James S. Brown, Jr., and Percy R. Bromfield, of New York, directors; the Manfried Amusement Company of New York, $10,000, with Samuel and Fanny Friedman and Mae Halperin, directors; the Yorkville Hippodrome, New York City, $10,000, T. F. Farrell, P. J. McGrath and D. C. McCleary, directors; the Kosmik Films, $50,000, New York City, B. T. Hardcastle, L. C. Wheeler and M. Wagner, directors; the Betty Compson Photo Play Company, $100,000, with B. Compson and M. Compson, of Los Angeles and A. A. Grasso, of Brooklyn, as directors.

Smoking in Fireproof Theatres Only.

Theatres in which smoking is allowed will hereafter have to be strictly fireproof throughout before permission for smoking will be given by Washington, D. C., according to an announcement by the commissioners, following a recent fire which gutted a local burlesque house. There are several theatres in the city which permit smoking, among them one moving picture house.

Heretofore it has not been necessary to secure permission from the authorities before allowing smoking in a theatre. Following the recent fire, which occurred during a performance when the theatre was crowded, the commissioners approved an amendment to the police regulations, at the instigation of the fire marshal, providing that such permission must first be secured and that it is only to be given to an absolutely fireproof theatre.

Fourteen Toledo Theatres Consolidate to Buy Films

THERE is combination in the air in Toledo, Ohio. Following the opening of a new downtown theatre by Doc Horater (the Pantheon) and the announcement that A. Horowitz would organize a circuit of neighborhood houses which would be affiliated with his downtown theatre, the Colonial, there comes word that fourteen theatres in the neighborhood districts of Toledo have already banded together to buy pictures.

They are known as the Consolidated Booking Corporation, and will have downtown offices. This organization is offering twenty days guaranteed run on any feature that it books.

Kansas City to Have Motion Picture Studio

KANSAS CITY is soon to have a life-size motion picture studio of its very own. This interesting bit of news became known recently when Lieut. Bert Hall, well known aviator, and Franklin B. Coates, moving picture editor and explorer, opened temporary offices at 1108 Waldheim Building. Headquarters of the studio will be at Overland Park just outside the city on an electric line, and a permanent Kansas City office will be maintained.

Lieut. Bert Hall, one of the original ten members of the Lafayette Escadrille, is president of the new organization known as the Popular Players Pictures Corporation, incorporated under the laws of Kansas for $200,000. The organization will produce and market at least six pictures a year, the first to be started about March 1.

Franklin B. Coates, who has been engaged as director, has been associated with the moving picture game for eight years. He has been active in the production of pictures in South America, Cuba, England, the West Indies and other places. He was a member of the Captain Besley expedition to Peru in 1914 and 15. He is known for his explorations in the Amazon region. He is also favorably known in the literary end of picture production and will have charge of productions and the literary work in connection with the new film concern.

Mr. Coates said that the first picture would be taken from a "big story of Kansas." The new venture is assured of success by strong financial backing of Kansas City business men, it is said.

Indianapolis Theatres to Take Part in City's Fete

ROBERT H. LIEBER, president of First National Exhibitors Circuit, and one of the owners of the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, is chairman of a committee appointed by the 1920 convention board of the Advertising Club of Indianapolis, to arrange for the cooperation of the motion picture theatres of the city with the board in "selling" Indianapolis to the world.

The other members of the committee are S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theatre; Charles Olson, of the Central Amusement Company, which operates the Isis, Alhambra and Lyric theatres, and Edward G. Sourbier, owner of the Palms and Keystone theatres.

The "selling" campaign will lead up to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which will be held in Indianapolis June 6 and 10 and which probably will be the greatest business convention held in Indianapolis during the year. The committee will arrange programs of general business appeal to be run in all the downtown motion picture theatres during the convention.

On June 7, the second day of the big convention, a great pageant will be staged in celebration of the centennial of Indianapolis. It was on that day one hundred years ago that the site was selected for the building of the city. The city's industrial growth since that time is to be depicted in many beautiful floats, and the local motion picture theatres are planning to take an active part in the celebration.

S. J. Lumiere Loses Suit Against Pathe Exchange

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., won a victory in the courts when Federal Judge Learned Hand, in the United States District Court, dismissed the suit of Samuel J. Lumiere, a photographer, who claimed Pathe had infringed on a copyright which he alleged he had taken out on certain photographs of Dolores Cassinelli. The photographs were used by Pathe in an advertisement insert in some trade papers. It developed that the copyright was not actually registered until after the inserts were used.

The main defense of Pathe was that Miss Cassinelli had purchased the pictures outright without giving Lumiere the privilege of copyrighting them, and that a photographer has no right to a copyright unless the purchaser of a picture gives such right by formal assignment.

Allens Adding Eight to String of Forty-Seven

THE latest statistics regarding the Allen Theatre Enterprise in Canada indicate that the Allens now actually have forty-seven theatres in operation in Canada, while eight new moving picture theatres are under construction in eight different cities, including Detroit and Cleveland.

The forty-seven Allen theatres in actual operation are in twenty-one different cities of the Dominion, and when the new houses are completed there will be Allen theatres in twenty-nine different centers of Canada and the United States. The cities in Canada which have Allen houses include Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Hamilton, Quebec, Ottawa, London, Windsor, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Moose Jaw, Branden, Peterboro, Swift Current, Kitchener, Brantford, Cobourg and Cobalt. The Lyric Theatre in the last-named city, which is the famous mining town in northern Ontario, was only recently acquired, according to announcements.

"They Can't Keep Us Back This Time."
Lionel Barrymore answers the call of Fort Sumpter in his Artcraft, "The Copperhead."

It is officially stated that the Allens are building new houses in Detroit, Cleveland, Montreal, Vancouver, Halifax, Windsor, St. Catherine and Sault Ste. Marie. The Allens operate film exchanges in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. They also have buying offices in London, England, and New York.

Alter Ontario Censorship Rules.

The Ontario Provincial Government and the moving picture exchange managers have been able to reach a compromise in connection with the decision on the part of the new Ontario authorities to demand the submission of a complete moving picture serial to the Ontario Board of Censors before the first or any episodes of the serial would be examined by the board.

It has been agreed that a start will be made in the censoring of serials for Ontario when approximately one-half of the serial is presented for official investigation. The exchanges will now be able to release a serial in fairly good time.

Gablick Resigns from Selznick.

Anthony Gablick, for the past six months art director of the Select and Selznick Pictures Corporation, has resigned to devote himself exclusively to the trade's art requirements on an independent basis. He has been responsible for the design and clever execution of many of the Selznick and Select pictures advertisements that have appeared in the various trade journals and fan magazines, and has also assisted materially in the art work of Selznick campaign books.

Fined for Showing Obscene Pictures.

Imprisonment for six months and a fine of $300 was the punishment meted out by Judge McMahon in the United States Branch of the Police Court, Washington, D. C., to a man who was arrested last August in a Ninth street hotel charged with exhibiting certain obscene motion pictures. In default of the fine the man was given an additional ninety days in jail.

John C. Flinn
Moves higher in executive organization of Famous Players-Lasky.

John C. Flinn Moves Higher Up With F P-L As Jerome Beatty Succeeds Him

JOHN C. FLINN, for the past three years director of publicity and advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been promoted to new duties in an executive capacity that will place him even closer to Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky. Because of his intimate acquaintance with the different activities of the corporation, President Zukor has selected Mr. Flinn to handle much of the detail that passes between the production and distribution departments which has heretofore centered in Mr. Zukor's office.

Closely Associated.

Jerome Beatty, who has been advertising manager for F. P.-L. for the past two years, in close association with Mr. Flinn, has been promoted to the position of director of publicity and advertising vacated by Mr. Flinn. The changes have taken effect and operations are going along under the new arrangement without the slightest hitch in the machinery.

Al Lichtman and Mr. Flinn, in charge of distribution, will be closely associated under the new plan. As Mr. Zukor leaves for Europe in a few weeks, there will be time to perfect the details and locate Mr. Flinn in his new duties before the president of the corporation goes abroad.

Men of Newspaper Achievements.

Mr. Flinn joined the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as publicity manager five years ago. Previously he had been for several years dramatic editor of the New York Herald. He has always been active in the affairs of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is chairman of the Fifth Division and a member of the executive committee.

Mr. Beatty was a newspaper man and magazine writer of wide experience before he entered the motion picture field, having at different times been connected with the staffs of the Kansas City Star, Washington Post, Los Angeles Express, New Orleans States, New York Evening Globe, New York Evening Mail, New York Tribune and the New York Sunday World. His motion picture experience before he joined the Famous Players-Lasky organization was with Essanay, Thanhouser and McClure Pictures.

Selznick Engages Earle.

William P. S. Earle, whose lavish production of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" at the Capitol Theatre caused much favorable comment, has just signed a long term contract with Myron Selznick, president of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, whereby Mr. Earle will direct and personally supervise a number of big productions during the coming year.

Mr. Earle, though young in years, is a veteran in the business. For more than five years he was with Vitagraph.

Selznick to Release a News Reel; Cameramen in All Important Cities

ONE of the big announcements of the week is contained in the statement that Selznick Enterprises is to enter the news reel market with a semi-weekly release. This announcement comes from Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Enterprises, who has been in personal touch with the arrangements being carried on to establish this service, to be known as "Selznick News."

According to the arrangements now completed, special photographers have been stationed in every important city in the world and a plan is being worked out which will enable the producer to present pictures of important events in about one-half the time which now elapses between happenings in far-away points and their reproduction on the screen.

It is planned, according to Mr. Selznick, to station photographers in a number of points not now covered by screen news photographers. In no case will magazine features be resorted to.

"We will divide the world into zones, Mr. Selznick said, "and events in the first zone, which will include events within a certain radius from New York, will be flashed upon the screens in New York and the territory of that zone on the same day."

N. Y. U. Boosts America and Endowment in Sales Film

ONCE more the motion picture has been called in for selling purposes, this time not by industry but by the forces of higher education. New York University, under the auspices of its New York City Alumni Club, presented a three-reel endowment booster at the Hotel Astor on the evening of February 11, "University Day."

Although primarily designed as the big power in the University's campaign to get an endowment fund of $6,500,000, this picture, written and directed by Vincent Roberts and photographed by Martin Stern, is more than endowment propaganda. It is college propaganda in a general sense and it has the pro-American angle that lifts it and the University it serves into a broader service.

The second reel of the production shows the Americanization work conducted by the N. Y. U. administration, including the oath of allegiance to the United States administered to all students; the University's military training work, the healthy, American customs and traditions kept by the student body, and the Hall of Fame of great Americans—in the heart of the campus as a perpetual reminder of the glorious ideals of America.

Don't Shovel That Snow!

DON'T send a man out on the canopy to shovel snow down the necks of passersby.

Give the structure the hydropathic treatment described on page 1300, and rest secure in the knowledge that, no matter what the snowfall, it will not collapse and injure someone.

A title in the picture calls New York City the "Gateway of the American Continent." And another title, calling N. Y. U. the gateway of American educational institutions, links up the university with the great, upward efforts of our country. This is the broad sales angle that will appeal to those who are not college graduates and those college people who are not alumni of N. Y. U.

Good selling sub-titles put over the arguments of the administration. Interior and exterior shots show the extent of the University and its academic and athletic activities.

Altogether, it is a strong argument for N. Y. U., college education in general, and above all, Americanism; and all those who had a part in putting the picture together deserve high commendation.

East Cannot Hope to Displace West as Picture Centre, Says T. H. Ince

Producer Enumerates Advantages of Los Angeles Over Storm-Bound Atlantic Coast

BY HUNT STROMBERG

Director of Publicity and Advertising Thomas H. Ince Studios

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

TRADE PAPER reports and interviews to the effect that golden California, so far as production is concerned, must sooner or later bow before the tumultuous environs of Times Square and the blizzard-swept landscape of Long Island has evoked a "come-back" from Thomas H. Ince.

Like the much-heralded crusader who "Came, saw and conquered," Mr. Ince rises to defend the land which has so tangibly enhanced the quality and artistic progress of the cinema, and reinforces his arguments with cold facts and blunt figures which cannot help but impress and convince the reasonable mind.

"If impressions count for anything I hasten to precede Mr. Ince's interview with the calm remark that California—gentle, romantic Southern California—seems to stand out in such striking contrast to New York and vicinity that comparison in this instance is null and void. With newspaper bulletins chronicling "below zero" and "stalled traffic, land and sea," on the Atlantic seaboard, one must feel a certain sense of keen satisfaction and enlightement upon motoring ten or fifteen miles from the studio and beholding several companies hard at work as the sunshine beams in the clear and near skies above.

Don't Have to Pal with Barometer.

"Lost motion is altogether lost in California. The producers don't have to pal with the barometer nor is the casting director compelled to flash the "don't come" messages to a regiment of extras and players engaged for a tremendous exterior scene upon which money has been invested. There are numerous other reasons why production will be continued in California and also why the best of business logic gives the West a distinct advantage over its pet neighbor in the East.

"Efficiency and economy are the fundamental requisites for the successful conduct of any business or enterprise," Mr. Ince says. "In every point of production activity and administrative progress, California proves its advantages over other states in the Union. The remarkable climatic conditions and the subsequent photographic possibilities are perhaps the biggest reasons why California is the ideal spot for motion picture studios. It is a known fact that in Los Angeles may be found every kind of an exterior setting, from a New England home to a Japanese abode. Then the natural scenery provides everything that romance and drama could demand—the ocean, the mountains, the desert, the valleys, the grand open stretches of land and water which offer every opportunity for any type of production made.

Retakes Seldom Necessary.

"Retakes are seldom necessary out here. Compare this to the East, where the producers must or should incur extra time and expense in retaking exterior scenes which have hazy backgrounds. Exhibitors and the public will agree that clear, faultless photography is one of the potential essentials of the appealing picture, and with the even, dependable atmospheric conditions so pronounced in Southern California, the excellence of our photography is a foregone conclusion, while seasonableness and the variety of natural scenery lends the first advantage to production here.

"I also emphasize the assets of the commercial side of production in Los Angeles. The scale of compensation for office assistants and manual labor is lower than in the East. In the final analysis the saving in this division of our business is of no small significance. The cost of set and scene construction also is lower than in any other sections of the country. Conclusive evidence of this fact appears on our own reports.

Thomas H. Ince

"In a recent production which we made in New York, the costs of building was approximately 33 1/3 per cent. higher than in Los Angeles.

Home of Free Lance Writers.

"We find the leading players command more money here, but extras as players of minor parts may be engaged at a less figure than in the East. It is an established fact that the market for original stories is far superior to that of any other state. The great majority of free lance writers make their headquarters in Southern California, giving us the first opportunity for selection and a decided handicap over our Eastern contemporaries.

"It has been said that equipment, chemicals, properties and the various odds and ends of picture-making may be obtained more advantageously in New York. I have found it exactly to the contrary. The channels through which we purchase materials and equipment are staple and the overage price for such furnishings are less than elsewhere. Announcement has recently been made that the manufacturers of chemicals for laboratories and other divisions of the studio will establish their headquarters in Los Angeles, giving us one more important lead over the East.

Cites Absence of Night Life.

"The advantage of better living conditions here must also be considered. The conspicuous absence of the 'night life' boasted of by New York, Chicago and other large cities tends to improve the work of our people both physically and mentally. Working and playing in the great outdoors, surrounded by Nature's most bountiful gifts, cannot help but impart the added vigor and inspiration which all too often is lacking in pictures.

"I was deeply concerned in reading of the alleged loss and inconvenience occasioned by the time involved in making shipments of film from Los Angeles to New York. Granted that sales, advertising and publicity campaigns generally emanate from the East, it is a matter of fact that practically all of the big producing companies have a productional schedule that reaches well into the future. In most instances pictures are completed, edited, titled and shipped to the distributors in New York or Chicago from six weeks to three months prior to the release date.

More Screen Talent Available.

"Express facilities are fairly reliable, providing ample time for the receipt of the print, its inspection and the subsequent preparation of sales and exploitation campaign.

"We find the percentage of available screen talent considerably higher than in New York. While the Thespian population is greater in the East, the screen must meet the competition of the stage, with the result that much difficulty is experienced in engaging the right talent at the right time. A recent 'census' conducted by our studios showed that about 75 per cent. of the available screen talent was credited to Los Angeles and vicinity.

"The industry is well rooted here and will doubtless remain a permanent institution, as Los Angeles appreciates sufficiently its importance to encourage it."

Paramount Artcraft Films to Aid Trade's Fight Against Censorship

TO help the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, and also to assist exhibitors in the fight against official motion picture censorship, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is taking steps to have the insignia, "Passed by the National Board of Review," carried at the beginning of all Paramount-Artcraft pictures so that it will not fail to be seen when the pictures are shown in the theatre.

Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation, has ordered that the board's stamp of approval hereafter shall be carried in the beginning of all Paramount Artcraft pictures, instead of at the end, and has appealed to all exhibitors booking Paramount pictures to keep this approval in the film when it is shown.

"I am moved to take this step," said Mr. Zukor, in explaining his action, "because I am firmly convinced that the National Board of Review needs the backing of everybody in the motion picture business in its admirable fight against official film censorship. All Paramount Artcraft pictures are approved by the national board before they are released. This not only is a protection to us, but it is of immense benefit to the exhibitor showing our pictures.

Urges Full Co-Operation.

"I wish to call the attention of exhibitors to the importance of carrying this approval on all their pictures. The national board is composed of a representative body of men and women, who, acting without pay, work in co-operation with motion picture producers and pass upon all pictures before they are released. This board is absolutely free of any semblance of control by producers and distributors; and their approval of a picture is an unbiased expression of opinion.

"The national board is opposed to arbitrary censorship at the hands of municipal, state or federal authorities, and is conducting a strong fight against such censorship. It behooves all exhibitors to co-operate with this board, because official censorship not only is vicious and un-American but it also can do incalculable harm to the industry, as has been proved in those communities where censorship already exists.

Appeals for Good Display of Stamp.

"I appeal to all exhibitors to join with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in standing firmly back of the National Board of Review. If the national board approves a picture, it seems to me that every exhibitor should not only permit such approval to be shown with the picture, but should make an effort to give a good display of the board's stamp. It is obvious that if a person in the audience sees on a picture the emblem, 'Passed by the National Board of Review,' he will be less likely to demand an official censorship.

Prepare Special Titles.

Special titles carrying the board's emblem have been prepared by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and instructions have been issued to all Famous Players exchanges to see to it that these titles are inserted at the beginning of the picture, immediately after the main title.

Pathe Serial Converts Muse Theatre Manager

R. S. BALLANTYNE, manager of of the Muse Theatre, Omaha, has come forward as a champion of the serial picture as an attraction for high-class houses.

"I confess," said Mr. Ballantyne, "that I was not so long ago a rather vehement scoffer of the serial for patronage of the so-called first class. But I have changed with the times and now the Muse shows two serials each week.

"At the Muse we run a twice-a-week change of program and cater to the best people in Omaha. I was frequently approached by serial salesmen but they found me a fairly tough proposition. Finally, H. D. Graham of the Pathe exchange here, wheedled me into signing a contract for 'The Black Secret,' with Pearl White, and what I thought of the result is best illustrated by calling attention to the fact that we are now showing both 'The Black Secret' and 'The Adventures of Ruth' with Ruth Roland.

"In exploiting 'The Adventures of Ruth' I tried a little stunt advertising and realized surprisingly well on the idea suggested to me. We put out 150 keys to which were attached a card reading, 'If Lost, Return to Muse Theatre and Receive Reward,' the reward consisting of two tickets to the opening chapter of this serial."

Keenan Has Strong Cast in "Smoldering Embers"

DESCRIBED as a drama glowing with the love of the heart, "Smoldering Embers," next in line of Frank Keenan's releases through Pathe will be issued on February 29. Mr. Keenan has surrounded himself with a competent supporting cast, prominent in which is Jay Belasco, one of the most popular young leading men in pictures. Others playing with him are Kate Van Buren, Hardie Kirkland, Lucille Ward, Frances Raymond, Thomas Guise, Burwick Hamrick, Russ Powell and Graham Pettie.

Some of Mr. Keenan's pictures have been bigger box office attractions than others, but all have been big money getters for exhibitors. During the last year he has made such features as "The World Aflame," "Brothers Divided," The False Code," "Gates of Brass" and "The Master Man," and each has been received warmly by exhibitors and their patrons.

Court Action Reveals Desire of "Big Four" to Produce "Ben Hur"

Author's Son Asks $1,200,000 for Film Rights and First National Offers to Produce Play on Fifty-Fifty Basis and Guarantee Owners $250,000

THAT the United Artists Corporation has been negotiating for some time in an effort to secure the motion picture rights to "Ben Hur" came to light recently in the United States District Court, New York, when an application was made before Judge Hough for a modification of the decree entered in 1916 in a suit of Harper Brothers and Henry L. Wallace against Klaw & Erlanger.

The only reason that the film rights to the play have not been purchased by the United Artists Corporation, it developed, is that Mr. Wallace, son of General Lew Wallace, author, places a valuation of $1,200,000 on the film rights. This figure is regarded by executives of the corporation as prohibitive, even for a play of the character of "Ben Hur," which has achieved an unrivaled artistic and financial success on the stage.

In this connection, correspondence between Messrs. Klaw and Wallace was offered showing that the former had suggested the sale of the motion picture rights to the United Artists Corporation, offering as a reason the beliefs that Douglas Fairbanks would make an ideal actor to impersonate "Ben Hur," that Mary Pickford would excel in the role of "Esther" and that D. W. Griffith would produce the best dramatization of the play on the screen.

$250,000 Is Best Offer.

Moreover, Mr. Klaw pointed out that the First National Exhibitors Circuit is ready to produce the play on a fifty-fifty basis and guarantee the owners of the motion picture rights, including Harper Brothers, Mr. Wallace and Klaw & Erlanger, the sum of $250,000, which he believed was the best offer available.

"'Ben Hur' does not require the luster of the names of Fairbanks, Pickford, et al., and calls for no such folly as the payment of their absurd salaries," was the response of Mr. Wallace to the producer's suggestion. He declared further that the minimum figure which he would accept for his share of the receipts from the sale of the picture rights to the play was and is $400,000 outright.

Judge Hough concurred with the contention made by Mr. Klaw that he has fulfilled the terms of the decree to the letter in producing "Ben Hur" on the stage in an elaborate and spectacular manner with profitable results, notwithstanding Mr. Wallace's claim that the producer was merely presenting the play on the stage for a limited period each year to safeguard the rights under the decree and not with any hope of obtaining financial returns.

On behalf of the producer, it was pointed out that the royalties paid to Mr. Wallace during the theatrical season of 1918-19 exceeded the royalties earned by the play during the years immediately preceding, and the contention was advanced that the producer has extended every co-operation to Mr. Wallace in an effort to dispose of the film rights to the best possible advantage.

Being unable to agree on the sale of the film rights, the plaintiffs in the previous litigation over "Ben Hur," Harper Brothers and Mr. Wallace made the present motion for a modification of the original decree to dissolve the injunction against the plaintiffs making moving pictures of "Ben Hur" during the term of the contract of 1899 and to specially enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs so making moving pictures.

In denying this motion Judge Hough held that while the contract of 1899 entered into between the plaintiffs and Klaw & Erlanger granting the producing rights to the latter is in force, or until the producing firm is guilty of some unfair or unjust practice constituting a breach of the contract or the terms of the decree in force, the plaintiffs cannot hope for the relief sought.

"No Compulsion Exists."

"Plaintiffs in effect accuse defendants of keeping them out of their rights, and say that at the trial in 1915 it was obvious that the time would then shortly arrive when the play would have to be given by moving pictures, and it was said the court so stated in effect," declared Judge Hough.

"Why is it time that the play 'would have to be' or must be given by moving pictures?" inquired Judge Hough. "There is no other reason except that all parties entitled would find it more profitable—no real compulsion exists."

Consequently, Judge Hough pointed out that it behooves the litigants to come to an agreement with respect to the sale of the motion picture rights in order that the play may be produced on the screen by mutual consent.

Hite to Show Arrow Pictures.

C. C. Hite of the C. C. Hite Attractions, Cincinnati, has been in New York for the past few days, during which time he made his headquarters at the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation.

On account of prosperous conditions in the middle west there is a big demand for all kinds of amusements, he reports. Big feature pictures are greatly in demand and all good comedies are being eagerly bought. The C. C. Hite Attractions have just concluded a big deal and have leased the Lyric Theatre in Cincinnati. Here they will play a number of the Arrow features during the spring and summer, together with high class vaudeville.

Republic Bookings Climb Upward on All Releases

BOOKINGS are reported to be climbing steadily upward on all pictures being distributed by Republic Distributing Corporation. Among the subjects which are announced as sweeping the country are "The Blue Pearl," "The Amazing Woman" and "12:10." The latter is declared to be doing more wonderful business than was expected of it.

The Chicago branch of Republic reported that the Marie Doro-Herbert Brenon production is booking like wildfire in the Windy City territory. Among the Chicago theatres to use it in January, in addition to the bookings already secured, are the Beach, DeLuxe, Elantee, Grayland, Jackson Park, Langley, New Irving, Virginia and Petes. Chicago houses which have already played "12.10."

"12:10" on Crandall Circuit.

In Washington "12:10" is scheduled to be presented at the Knickerbocker, Apollo, Avenue Grand, Savoy and York theatres during February and the first part of March. All of these houses are in the Crandall circuit. New contracts are also reported from the Boston, Dallas, Kansas City, New York, Seattle, Cleveland and St. Louis branches.

"The Blue Pearl" and "The Amazing Woman," in addition to extensive bookings already announced, have been routed over the Proctor circuit as well as into some of the William Fox Theatres. William Fox's Fourteenth Street theatre is to present "The Amazing Woman" for three days successively in February.

Proctor's Harmanus in Albany has booked "The Amazing Woman" for two days in February.

"Junk," Says One; "Progress," Another

Producer Jealous of Showman Profits; Says He "Gambles" Speaks the Bunk Talk

By James B. Kelly
("Smiling Jimmy")

HAVING heard so much junk handed out of late regarding "Percentage Bookings" and "We are coming to Percentage," allow me to venture forth from my place of hiding and give you one man's opinion regarding the matter, and I honestly believe that every fair-minded showman and exhibitor will agree with me in my humble opinion.

To begin with, Mabel, we are supposed to be in the moving picture "rental" business and not "percentage." The exchange sets a fair rental price on its wares and the exhibitor pays a reasonably fair price for them. Then why do so many "Wise Boys" talk about percentage bookings? I know and I'll tell you later on.

Think this over first: Who is the boy that makes the "real dough" all the time? Who is the fellow who hires exorbitant salaried executives, who lives at the best hotels in New York, owns his "Rouls Ruice" or "Piece of Arrow" flivvers, gives big dinner parties at the Castoria Hotel, etc.? Is it the exhibitor? Nay, Pauline; it's the nabob who makes, distributes and exploits Fillum who is landing the real jit all the time.

The Big Boys Play Sure Things.

Ever notice how one of these Big Boys always says he is "gambling," etc., when half of the time he collects the price of his picture in deposits from exhibitors before the picture is even started. In fact, some of these Big Boys won't even start a picture until their exchanges have collected the full cost from the Village Nabob who runs the Amusement Hall.

Just think—they get the cost of the picture out of the deposits, and you can imagine what their profit is after the picture has been played. The "Sugar Kings" are mere children when compared to some of the High Collar Boys in the "Big Town."

The real gambler in my mind is the little fellow in the small town who runs a theatre on a shoestring, loses his red shirt when it rains, takes in $1.55 on nights that Lizzie Simpkins or Maria Punkins gives a party, although his expense is always the same, bordering around $15 to $20 a day. No one will give him any credit. He has to pay for most of his film two months in advance, even if his kids have to go hungry.

Always Cash in Advance.

Just think, he has to pay away in advance for something he has never seen, and that he is liable to lose money on. In fact, he never so much as gets a stick of carbon without the mazuma being firmly planted with the cashier of the supply house. Here is the real gambler, and my only hope is that he'll wake up before they take away his shoes and socks, for they'll do it if they get a chance.

Now we are coming to the "Percentage Propaganda Thing." Bill Spivins, who runs the Nickel Theatre in Sleepyville, happens to clean up a little "real dough" on a picture labeled "Lizzie's Disappointment," and the news of Bill's great "feat" wends its way into the office of the producing company. The minute the news confronts the president he calls a meeting of his executives, and they figure out that Bill and the rest of the exhibitors are making too much dough and they decide to find out how much dough Bill and his compatriots are making by playing their pictures on "Percentage" in the future. Therefore, this is the answer; no film company or organization is going to even hint at percentage unless it fully believes it will get more money on that plan, or unless it desires to feel the pulse of just what the exhibitor is making by risking its product on the percentage plan.

Manufacturers Jealous of Exhibitor.

The exhibitor is best able to know just what he can afford to pay for film, and it's nobody's business what he is making. This is the only business in existence where the manufacturers and jobbers are jealous of what the retailer is making. Of course if some of you "Sap Heads" want the producer to find out just what you are doing and, if you are doing a good business, put in a show next door to you and put you out of business next week, why that's your funeral.

> ### Says "Jimmy" Kelly:
> Who flings the parties at the Castoria? Who makes the Real Dough—the exhibitor or the producer?
>
> Is a Fillum company even hinting at percentage for charitable reasons or the desire to make more money?
>
> Ever see the Big Boys froth when they learn of the Velvet that Bill Splivins takes in on their picture up in Sleepyville?
> We're in the film RENTAL, not film PERCENTAGE business.
> Be independent.

But if you will take a little advice from a child of nature who has been all up and down the line, don't listen to "Percentage." Be independent. There are plenty of pictures on the market that you can rent at a reasonable figure, and because your competitor secures one big picture, does a big business on it, and only secures twenty per cent. of the receipts, don't let that worry you one bit. And, above all, don't let Mr. Fillum Man scare you into signing your life away. His is only a bluff, but if he is able to put this bluff over in many towns, it will be a reality before long, and you will have to go back to "work" again.

In conclusion: dodge the "Percentage" propaganda as if it were poison, for it really is a form of poison. The fillum man makes out to you that he wants to gamble by playing percentage; but he never gambles and never intends to as long as he can help it.

Camouflage.

You have always been the gambler, therefore why not continue to be so in future? You've gambled and won, therefore stick to your independence and continue to win, and when Mr. Per Cent Age comes along tell him to migrate to a clime fifty degrees hotter than Dallas, Tex., in August. "Percentage" is nothing more than camouflage covering an investigation into your business, with the idea in mind that your profits are more than they should be. And even in the investigation Mr. Per Cent Age is protecting his own interests by demanding at least seventy-five per cent. of the gross receipts.

Leo Delaney Dies After Illness of But Two Days

IT is with much surprise and sorrow that the industry hears of the sudden death of Leo Delaney, whose popularity as a screen favorite dates back to 1910. He died in New York City on February 4 at the Roosevelt Hospital after a two days' illness of pneumonia. He was 38 years old and leave a wife and child. His home was at Huntington, Long Island.

Mr. Delaney appeared with some of the best known stars on the screen, including Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Anita Stewart, Harry Northrop and Harry Morey. Some of the early pictures in which he was featured were "Answer of the Roses," "By Woman's Wit," "Tested by the Flag," "Cherry Blossoms," "The Cabin Boy" and "The Honorable Algernon." Recently he played in a series of five-reel mystery stories made by William Steiner and released through the Arrow Film Corporation. Previous to his picture experience, Mr. Delaney was five years with "The Virginians."

Washington's Palace Entertains Kiddies.

Lawrence Beatus, through an arrangement with the Washington Times, last week threw open the doors of the Palace Theatre on F street to the little inmates of the various orphan asylums in Washington permitting them to see "Pollyanna."

This show has proven a great favorite with the juvenile population of Washington, and the morning and afternoon performances were exceptionally well patronized. The evenings found a long line of adults in front of the theatre awaiting admission. "I am more than pleased with the business that this picture has brought me," said Mr. Beatus.

A great deal of credit is to be given the Palace orchestra for the music furnished by it during the week.

Mrs. Lewis Returns with "Sherry."

Mrs. Edgar Lewis has returned from California with the negative of "Sherry," an Edgar Lewis production, directed by Edgar Lewis. Pat O'Malley plays the leading role. Mrs. Lewis expects to return to California, where her husband has already begun his newest production, "Lahoma," a story of the big land rush in Oklahoma in 1889, in which 2,500 people will take part.

Exhibitor Himself Tries to Retard His Own Money Making Capacity

By Hiram Abrams

IT is absolutely no surprise to me that certain factions among exhibitors oppose percentage booking. When United Artists Corporation embarked on its percentage booking plan I was fully prepared for just such objections as have been raised. I have been in the motion picture business long enough—and I have seen enough in other industries—to realize that there is always a reactionary, standpat element that will not move forward with the times.

I know that when we began renting our pictures on a percentage basis we would have to wage a campaign of education and demonstration.

Fortunately, there are among the exhibitors a sufficiently large majority of far-sighted, clear-thinking business men who understand and appreciate the various economic evolutions that are witnessed in every line of business; and I might add that in every line of business there is likewise a reactionary minority—men who oppose and resist all progress and advancement and who usually have the limelight centered on them because of the noise they are making. But while their insurrection is flaring up the sound and clear-thinking merchants go about their daily business of making money and of adjusting themselves so that they may keep pace with the progress of their industry.

Standpatters Opposed New Prices.

Go back into the history of the business as far as you please. Do you remember the fight that was waged against producers and distributors who insisted that their pictures could no longer be shown for an admission price of less than ten cents? The standpat exhibitors rose in arms and said that no producers or distributors could tell them how to run their theatres, and that they would show pictures for five cents if they pleased, or that they would do without the pictures.

You couldn't have built the beautiful picture houses the country now boasts of on five cent admission prices. The higher admission prices made possible the motion picture business of today—yet a lot of the exhibitors who have made fortunes as a result of the higher admission prices were bitterly opposed to charging more than five cents in their houses.

Who Howled at Daily Change?

Do you remember the cry that was raised on the part of certain exhibitors when the thought was advanced that a daily change of program might be improved on? Certain exhibitors were aghast at the thought that they might have to run pictures for two days instead of one day.

These same exhibitors declared that they never, never would run pictures for more than a day and affirmed that the next thing they knew distributors would be insisting that pictures be run for three days or even a week; then the whole motion picture business would go to rack and ruin.

Yet today these self-same exhibitors are running pictures for a week, two weeks, a month or even longer—and making money.

Fought Exchanges.

Time was when certain exhibitors banded themselves together and attempted to boycott any exchange that would permit a theatre to show more than three reels for one admission price. Any exchange that would dare to let a theatre have four reels to show as part of one program would be put out of business.

Yet, somehow, despite the protests of these exhibitors, we have gotten to the point where a motion picture program is a unit of entertainment and the footage entirely a secondary matter.

I could go on and cite case after case of exhibitor opposition to forward movements. The story is always the same. An innovation, an improvement, an advance is suggested for the good of the business as a whole, and immediately a group of exhibitors declare war on the innovation; but invariably the innovation, if it is right, survives and the exhibitors who protested the loudest are glad to share in the benefits that result to all.

> Says Hiram Abrams:
> Standpat exhibitors opposed raising prices from the standpat nickel.
>
> They opposed daily changes of program in the early days.
> They opposed long runs later.
>
> Yet today they are showing pictures a week straight in beautiful houses they built by raising prices from the nickel level.
> Now this standpat element opposes percentage. It is basically right, as were the above innovations in the various stages of the industry, and it is bound to come.

Repeatedly we have witnessed the spectacle of the exhibitor himself attempting to retard the progress of his own business.

If It's Right, It Must Come.

Fortunately, if a thing is right, it is bound to succeed, for opposition that is purely selfish cannot frustrate a thing that is basically right.

I have discussed percentage booking with scores upon scores of the leading exhibitors of the country, and I am convinced, as most of them are, that percentage is the fair, equitable and ultimate method for the handling of motion pictures.

The fact that the majority of the leading exhibitors of the country are playing our pictures on a percentage basis is an indication that they are convinced of the fairness of the policy, for, remember, we cannot compel anyone to do business with us.

If people do not approve of our way of doing business, there is no power that can make them our customers.

Will Eliminate Poor Picture.

I believe that percentage will absolutely stabilize the distribution and rental of motion picture films and I believe that this is going to be demonstrated fully and finally in the coming months.

To my mind, and a host of exhibitors with whom I have discussed the matter agree with me, percentage is going to eliminate the poor picture, or, at any rate, show up the poor picture, so that the exhibitor knows that if a picture is not good enough to play on percentage, he is buying a commodity for which there is no market.

Percentage is going to make it possible for an exhibitor to get as much out of his territory as is possible.

Percentage is going to bring to the exhibitor his full reward for showmanship, just as it is going to bring to the producer of the picture his full reward, based on the value of the product itself.

Percentage Will Be Index.

In other words, percentage is the one thing that is going to separate pictures, so far as exhibitors are concerned, into the two all-important classes—the money-making picture and the failure—and will be the assurance to the exhibitor that the producer can only make money if he turns out a picture on which the exhibitor can make money.

Likewise, exhibitors themselves are going to be classified automatically by percentage; the real showman is going to make money and the mere theatreman will have to learn the rudiments of showmanship, or change his profession.

Headed for It.

The best evidence I can offer of my faith in percentage is this:

I go on record now with the promise that as soon as this company has a sufficient amount of product to warrant the organization that will be required, we will book our pictures throughout on a straight percentage basis and do away altogether with a guarantee or rental, except in so far as a nominal deposit may be required as a binder or as evidence of good faith for the protection of playing dates.

We are headed right for straight percentage; straight percentage will require a big organization, but you have my word for it, that as soon as the volume of our product warrants the organization, we will book our pictures on a straight percentage basis.

Vitigraph Opens New Branch.

The housewarming for the employes of the Big-V Washington office and the exhibitors of the territory served by that office was held last Tuesday and Wednesday, February 10 and 11, by Manager Eugene Wilson. The occasion marked the completion of Vitagraph's new quarters in Washington.

Vitagraph remained at its old quarters on Eleventh street, N. W., when the new exchange building was erected in Washington and is one of the few exchanges that has separate and distinct quarters.

Pastor's Screen Sermon Startles Conservatives in Auburn Church

GOOD HEAVENS," cried some members of the Universalist Church in Auburn, N. Y., when their pastor without warning sprung upon them a movie-illustrated sermon. This was something new and the more conservative of the congregation were more than mildly surprised. Others nodded in approval and settled back to reap the full benefit of the innovation.

A unique service it was—all of Auburn admits that. The Rev. J. E. Price had announced his topic as "The Storm." It was a storm in more ways than one. Not within the church did the storm break, but among some of the folks of Auburn mutterings of horror ascended. In the meantime the Rev. Mr. Price is not a bit disturbed.

The minister says that by another winter he hopes to have a most modern and complete motion picture outfit installed in the "Peoples' Church." He says he knew that there would be some on the outside who would raise their hands in horror, as many did when musical instruments were first introduced into the churches. At that time such instruments were hailed as "works of the devil," he says.

"God Gave Us Eyes as Well as Ears."

"Nevertheless," he continues, "God gave us eyes to see with as well as ears to hear with, and it is part of the church's duty, when everyone is more or less picture-minded, to help present the wholesome without the trash."

The comparison that Mr. Price draws is that it is no more wicked to introduce moving pictures into the church today than it was to introduce music in other days. Music is now recognized as one of the most useful and attractive features of any church service, and he feels that it will only be a short time before the same feeling will prevail in regard to the use of moving pictures in the churches.

Mr. Price's animated sermon, "The Storm," shows vividly just how a sermon may be thus illustrated and how the screen can drive home certain thoughts in a much more forceful manner than spoken words. The lights of the church were turned out and little pointed preachments began to appear on the screen. One was entitled, "Respect for Mother."

"Respect for Mother."

A good idea of the service may be gained by a perusal, so it is given here as it was on the screen:

"Mark the young man who is coarse and disrespectful to his mother. No roseate pathway can be hers who shall sustain to him the relations of wife. Not the happiest shall be the lot of those who shall come to be his children. Not to be envied is the neighborhood ever in which he must be reckoned as a citizen.

"It does not matter what the mental stature of that mother is, how old, how bent, how decrepit, the man to whom she is mother owes to her gentleness, kindness, tenderness and consideration. Did she fall back; and did the children, by means of superior advantage pass her in her race? But think of the toil and trial, her devotion and denial, her mind and her years that she gave that her children might derive the benefit."

Minister Explained Series.

After several of these introductory sermonettes a hymn was sung. This was followed by Scripture reading and prayer, announcements and singing of old and new melodies, and then "The Storm" proper. The pastor told the story of the picture as it was shown, and here and there pointed out some of the lessons to be learned from it, but these were apparent without his words. His voice, accompanying the scenes, was merely a sort of assistance for the audience, somewhat on the plan of subtitles, only on a bigger scale.

"The Storm" derives its name from a terrific storm in nature, which was produced in realistic manner, and also from a storm of anger and rivalry between two men who seek the hand of the same girl, but with far different motives. The two fall in love with the girl, the storm which threatened their lives came and went because both of them listened to their conscience and the promptings of true love. The storm came and went because a higher power did not permit them to perish.

This Minister's Viewpoint

"God gave us eyes to see with as well as ears to hear with, and it is part of the church's duty, when everyone is more or less picture-minded, to help present the wholesome without the trash."

He draws the comparison that it is no more wicked to introduce moving pictures into the church today than it was to introduce music in other days, when musical instruments were called "works of the devil."

Looking into the future, he sees moving pictures as firmly established as a part of a church service as music now is.

Another subject planned is "Lightnin'," from the character of that name who was a Grand Army man. All societies affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic have been invited by Mr. Price, and he announces that just before the sermon he will draw a crayon portrait of Lincoln.

Grainger on Way to the Coast.

James R. Grainger, eastern representative for Marshall Neilan Productions, has left New York for the California headquarters of the company to consult with Mr. Neilan on new plans affecting future releases of this concern.

Before leaving, Mr. Grainger expressed great enthusiasm over the manner in which bookings are coming in on "The River's End," Mr. Neilan's initial independent production following the formation of his own producing organization. The production is now receiving its final treatment and the first run showings should be before the public the latter part of this month.

Greene Plans Annual Who's Who in Industry

IF plans outlined before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at its luncheon on Thursday, February 5, at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, by Benedict M. Greene, of Toronto, are consummated, the fifth industry is to be dignified by the publication of an annual Who's Who In Motion Pictures designed along the lines of similar volumes embracing notables in society, politics and industries.

Mr. Greene, who is managing editor of the International Press, Ltd., and publisher of Who's Who and Why, with offices in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Halifax, said it was his belief that the motion picture industry is of all industries the one most dependent on its personalities, in which belief it was the intention to collect data which would by agreement and contract be placed for the use of a Cinema Press Association, to be established along the lines of the International Press Service.

To Contain No Advertising.

The speaker announced that for the first year the proposal was to cover personalities in the United States, including producers, directors, stars, authors, distributors and others in the industry whose standing and importance merited inclusion. Later the work is to be extended to include Canada, Great Britain and portions of Europe.

Mr. Greene laid stress on the fact that it would be absolutely free from all paid advertising, that there would be no charge whatever for the matter printed in the book, that the publication would be illustrated with uniform size halftones of all persons included and that it would be issued at a price of $5 a volume.

Big Bookings on "Eve in Exile."

Among the recent bookings on "Eve in Exile," which have been received by the American Film Company's sales department at Chicago are the Colonial Theatre in Detroit, a seven days' run; the America at Colorado Springs, three days' run; Marcy Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., two days; Knickerbocker Theatre at Cleveland, Ohio, three days; Liberty Theatre, New Orleans, six days; Hippodrome at Toledo, seven days; the Majestic at Appleton, Wisconsin; the Rex at Racine; Thalia, States, Vista, Avon and Parkway at Chicago; Rivoli at Columbia, S. C.; Victoria at Wilmington, N. C.; Majestic at Sheboygan, Wis.; the Royal at Green Bay, Wis.; the Palace at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; the Rex at Pocatello, Idaho, and the Alhambra at Ogden, Utah.

Sam Bullock Gets to Brass Tack Strata

In Eleven Days Watch of Cleveland Screen Finds Seven Close-Ups That Gets His "Honorable Mention" for "Adv"; Lists Names

THE writer has never made a statement in print which he could not verify. He has never called attention to a wrong or an injustice being perpetrated upon exhibitors without having an abundance of proof thereof and not then until such evils have assumed "offensive proportions" such as we find today in "Advertising in Films," as spoken of by R. H. Clark and Marshall Neilan.

We find strong support from exhibitors everywhere in our official efforts to curb this imposition upon the screen owner and his patrons, and we are glad to see all trade papers, with one glaring exception, supporting our efforts. The Chicago editor intimates that we should not promote "hysteria" on this subject until it has assumed "offensive proportions" and advises us, "but do not create ficticious problems for yourself . . . in instances where advertising is injected into pictures."

Rubbers, Eariphones and Soap.

It ill becomes the editor of an exhibitors' paper to treat our efforts thus lightly when he himself would not mention a single one of the nationally advertised products we complain of, except as a paid ad, in his paper, but spanks us editorially.

Let me cite what happened recently to one of our members. On Wednesday and Thursday, January 20-22, he played Mae Murray in "A Big Little Person," a six-reel Universal. Interspersed all through it in prose, "poetry" and pictures we find the fascinating Mae thoroughly protected against wet feet by the nationally advertised "Kant-wear-out Rubbers." It might well be called "A Rubber Romance," but for the fact, that in addition, Mae's hearing becames affected in the second reel and we see her struggling through her wicked world "turrubly" handicapped (through four reels), but wonderfully "helped" by a clever device for the deaf, glaringly advertised in "close-up," letters, etc., as the "Eariphone!"

Nowhere in the four reels could the exhibitor cut out the "Eariphone." She recovers her hearing by a sudden jar in the sixth reel, but the screen owner and patrons were "jarred" long before that. The same exhibitor, four days later, January 26-27, played Peggy Hyland in "Cheating Herself," a five reel Fox picture. In this a "close-up" shows nothing but Peggy's beautiful left hand, in which we see "Cashmere Bouquet Soap, Registered at U. S. Patent Office."

Obvious Close-Ups.

On January 28, in "Pay Me," Universal, Dorothy Phillips is forgotten while a close-up of full song chorus is held long enough for patrons to learn about the "Dear Old Mother Waits for You In Your Home Sweet Home." The manager nearly had a fit. He stopped his orchestra, for he pays no music tax and the leader knew the melody. The next day, the twenty-ninth, in "The Amateur Widow"—World—Zena Keefe's artistry is enhanced by an attack of acute indigestion flooring her uncle-in-law at midnight. He is quickly cured, we are shown, by a six-yard close-up package in hand, of "Cow-Brand Soda Carbonate."

The next day, the thirtieth, his "close-up" stuff was fifteen feet of a perfectly good phonograph record, calculated to impress him cheerfully, entitled "This Is the Life." Why Fox injected this in "The Merry Jail Birds" is obvious. The next day the ad fiend missed him but February first, Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy in Hallmark's "The Other Man's Wife" had an extremely "artistic" argument over the identity of the "Villun's" lid and after yards and yards of a "close up" interior view of the hat—nothing seen but the label—lo! it is a "Truly Warner" hat.

Don't Need Ear Trumpets to Get This: Get It

TAKING the screen of the Boulevard Theatre, Cleveland, as a representative medium, Sam Bullock, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, kept a record of film matter which to him looked like national advertising propaganda. The record was made between January 20 and February 1 and during that time the following products came in for "honorable mention":

An advertised brand of rubbers.
A device for helping the deaf.
A toilet soap.
A piece of popular music.
A trade-marked hat.
A phonograph record.
A soda carbonate.

These cases were all close-ups, without any "artistic camouflage," as Mr. Bullock calls it. He has been following "screen advertising" for a long time, and with Fred J. Herrington has done much to awaken the exhibitors of Cleveland and Pittsburgh to the value of their screens. So we are printing his letter "as is."

Will Improve the "'Earing."

Now aside from the fact that this is, as Marshall Neilan says, "An imposition upon the exhibitor and his patrons" surely the exhibitor and his organization should get something for this, if he permits it.

But that is not the point. Artistic camouflaging may be tolerated for that purpose but "close-ups" are too glaringly raw at any price and they must go for the evil is assuming "offensive proportions," the Chicago editor to the contrary notwithstanding—regarding our "hysteria." The above were regular bookings-ad stuff unknown to manager or exchanges. The theatre is the Boulevard, 9904 Lorain Ave., Cleveland, and sections of all these cut-outs can be seen at 708 Times Building, New York, temporary National headquarters.

Fred J. Harrington advanced the idea years ago that the entire industry could be financed for aggresive and defensive work from a small percentage of camouflaged ad matter then being introduced. The producers would not listen to him then. We are now making the advertisers listen and our methods renders the "Eariphone" unnecessary. Their hearing is very acute.

SAM BULLOCK.

Continuity Writers Are "Curse" of the Director

EVERY director his own continuity writer, would be the vogue if J. Searle Dawley, one of the screen's pioneer directors, had his way. Mr. Dawley, who is now at work supervising the enactment of the final scenes in Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," the Deitrich-Beck production starring Doris Kenyon for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, declares in no uncertain terms that picture perfection will be reached only when the director and the continuity writer of a production are one and the same person.

"Many a director has been compelled to twist his plot around until it is very often unrecognizable," said Mr. Dawley, who, by the way, is responsible for the screen adaptation of the Augustus Thomas play. "The scenarist will designate a girl seen approaching through a thickly wooded location toward a farm house. The director cannot find that farmhouse with the adjoining woods. He locates a farmhouse but it is near a beautiful bridge.

"With his eye ever trained to look for beauty, the director conceives the girl approaching the farmhouse over the bridge. The scene is filmed. The continuity man sees it. 'All wrong,' is his howl, 'my plot calls for a stretch of woods, not a bridge.'

"That is the curse of the director. He is forced to make his screen story out of nothing. The continuity writer does not speak the language of the screen."

Billie Burke Working on New Play.

Billie Burke does not look with favor upon the tremendous strain of making a picture and at the same time appearing upon the stage. It was the idea of devoting all her time to one thing which resulted in interrupting her successful stage play, "Caesar's Wife," at a time when its popularity was at its height in order that she might begin her next Paramount Artcraft picture for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The title of this picture will be "Away Goes Prudence."

John S. Robertson will be the director. This story was written by Josephine Lovett and the adaptation was by Kathryne Stuart. Percy Marmont will play the leading masculine role, that of Prudence's sweetheart.

Interpretive Music Aids Showing.

The use of an interpretive musical number to enhance the presentation of a feature attraction was recently practised by the State Street Theatre, Trenton, N. J. during the showing of "The Thunderbolt," starring Katherine MacDonald and distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

A selection from "The Storm," played upon the new organ was the number used by the organist to properly interpret the dramatic tone of the picture.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Low-Down on Many Lawsuits Fills With Thrills Sweet-Spring Days in Filmland

By Giebler

THIS week looks like lawsuit week in Filmland. Everybody is either suing somebody, has just got through suing somebody, or is getting ready to sue somebody for something or other.

Among the attractions of a litigous nature that are now playing the judicial circuits of our Fair City we have: Bill Hart and Tom Ince presenting a heavy dramatic piece with a hundred thousand dollar motif and demands and allegations by Bill, and denials and refusals by Tom; Harry Garson and Charles Everard Whittaker, the scenaro writer, are co-starring in a financial drama entitled "Pay Me," written by Whittaker in an attempt to settle a dispute over the amount due him for labor, thought and other brain work expended in the writing of continuities.

Doug Fairbanks, one Paul Pelich and a quadruped of the broncho family are appearing in a lively sketch under the direction of a local judge.

Plaintiff Versus Broncho.

The plot of this piece sets forth allegations to the effect that the aforementioned broncho owned by the defendant, and described by him to be of a kind and loving disposition, was far from being such, and furthermore, that when the plaintiff tried, attempted and endeavored to mount, ascend, bestride, get upon the back of and otherwise occupy the said broncho, the damn thing bucked, cavorted, side-stepped, sun-fished and conducted itself in a manner unseemly in, and unexpected of, a broncho said to be kind and gentle, and that such actions on the part of the broncho resulted in various injuries to various parts of the plaintiff's anatomy and person, for which he demands damages.

A number of interesting Court House dramas and comedies have just closed during the past week.

A one-reel legal film featuring William Fox and Edwin Frazee was shelved by the judge, who denied the sum of $800 asked of William by Edwin.

She Forgot How to Forgive.

The tense and thrilling drama of "The Girl with Four Thousand Dollars" and an intense yearning to be a movie queen versus the Doubleday Productions has been settled by a decision for the plaintiff. This case furnished much spicy reading to the columns of the press as well as adding to the gaiety of an otherwise dull and uninteresting week.

According to testimony, it was necessary for the girl in the case to receive instructions in registering love and affection with her director as the subjepct as well as the instructor. She was also given drills in registering anger and forgiveness, but after she had spent $4,000 on a wardrobe, and the film upon which she was to ride to fame and fortune was still in a somewhat nebulous state, she forget everything but anger and hied her to the courts.

Embryo Heroes Paid $11.

As a coming court attraction we have a fine example of the illegitimate drama, a tense little story that should be called "Barnum Was Right." The heads of the California Studios, a school for actors in the Mason Opera House Building, have leading roles in the drama, and there are about 100 other persons in the cast, each and every one of whom is a persecuted hero or heroine.

The allegators in this case state that they were required to put up a cash deposit from $11 and upwards while they were learning to be stars, which sum was in the nature of a guarantee that they would not take advantage of the valuable instructions given them and go away and proceed to crowd Mary Miles Minter, Bill Farnum, Doug Fairbanks and other stars off the screen before the school could take advantage of their ability in "Life," a drama that was to be made by the school.

The state labor commissioner found that the whole shebang, studio and school, had been sold to another party for $25 when he came to investigate the case.

Samuelsons Look Efficient.

Mary Pickford is said to be getting ready for a revival of the celebrated Wilkenning legal drama, which has been refreshed by the addition of many new lines and much new business, but as the revival is to have a New York presentation, we will not be enlivened by the action except from a distance.

Now, after all this low-down on the lawsuits, I think it's time to pull a little pure reading matter, and I know of no better way to accomplish that end than by telling you about the Samuelsons, a big picture organization that has come all the way from England to make movies in our celebrated sunshine.

The Samuelsons, who are operating at one of the big studios at Universal City, brought most of their executive heads, directors and principal players along with them, and they have one of the most efficient and smoothly working outfits I've seen in a long time. G. B. Samuelson is the big boss and director general. Sidney Blythe is general manager.

Madge Is England's Little Mary.

A. B. Sturgess is technical diretcor. W. S. Boylan looks after publicity; and there is W. Basson, a tall chap whom everybody calls "Bill," who said he was stage manager.

I informed Bill that we have no such animal around studios on this side, and after probing into the nature of his duties, I felt sure that no one with the kind of job he's got would be satisfied without a title of director or something or other, but he still insisted that he was stage manager, and I guess I'll have to let it go at that.

Three producing companies are going at full tilt at the Samuelson studio. One of them is headed by Madge Titheridge, who is to the cinema fans of England what our own Little Mary is to the movie fans of America.

Miss Titheridge is making a film entitled "Her Story," a tale that starts in this country and winds up in Russia, with much action of an adventurous nature in between.

Peggy Signed Dotted Line.

C. M. Halliard, a name to conjure with in dear Ole Lunnon, the hero of many a Drury Lane melodrama and the disturber of many romantic hearts, and Campbell

Let the Recorders Write: "First Photograph Taken in New Fox Studios."

Gullen, whom Bill Basson declares to be the best character actor of England, are the chief supporters of Miss Titheridge. G. B. Samuelson is directing the picture personally.

One of the first things the Samuelsons did after their arrival in Los Angeles was to Hunt up Peggy Hyland, who made her first reputation as an actress on the English stage, and get her signature to the dotted line of a contract.

Miss Hyland, who is making "At the Mercy of Tiberius," under the direction of Fred Granville, heads the second company. Both the Titheridge company and the Hyland company were out on location the day I visited the studio and I did not get to see them, but I did get to see the third unit of the organization, the one where the leading part is played by Maudie Dunham.

Maudie Dunham Promises Well.

Maudie is petite and piquant, and has golden hair that reaches to her knees, and she rides a horse like any of our Western cow-girls. Back in London, Maudie is the idol of the Gaiety Theatre Musical Comedy crowds, and I can see where she is going to be just about as jake with Yankee film fans when they see her in "The Night Riders," the picture she is now engaged in making.

Alex Butler is the director and Ronald McGaskell is assistant director of the "Night Rider" film, which tells a story of the cattle country of Alberta, Canada. Mr. Butler plays the part of Red Mark, the chief of the Night Riders, and one of the principal parts in the picture, as well as directs the action.

He was wearing a natural but somewhat brutal set of whiskers that the part demands when I saw him, but this did not seem to be any handicap to him in handling the big crowds of people in the big scenes he was making.

Reproduce Frontier Town.

Butler has a remarkably realistic se representing a frontier town in the Northwest, built up on a steep slope, with a tall and noble looking foothill as a background that should show up like a million dollars from a photographic standpoint.

Some of the important action of the story is worked out in this set. Albert Ray is playing opposite Miss Dunham. Gordon Russell is the heavy and William Ryno has the part of an old cattleman who has grown so old that he can no longer ride a horse. A fine characterization, and Bill is doing full justice to it.

Al Ray, who was supposed to be lying off in the brush about two miles away with a bullet in his hide, and was not in the action that Director Butler was shooting while I was on the set, says that the "Night Riders" is going to be a good film, and from what I saw of it, I'm inclined to agree with him. I hope it is shown on this side as well as on the other side of the water when it is finished.

Capitol Books Flynn Series.

New York theatregoers awoke on Saturday, February 7, to be greeted in their morning paper by an advertisement of goodly size announcing the fact that "The Silkless Banknote," a Chief William J. Flynn story in picture form, would be exhibited to them for a full week at the Capitol Theatre, on Broadway. Every daily paper carried the ad acquainting picture patrons with the date upon which the Flynn series, starring Herbert Rawlinson, would open for a run on Broadway. The information was also given that "The Silkless Banknote" would be followed at the Capitol by the balance of the Flynn series, or eight pictures in all.

Buffalo Has Theatre Building Boom; Niagara Falls Awaits Mammoth House

THE theatre building boom goes merrily on in Buffalo. Plans are completed for the new Shea Metropolitan, work on which will begin May 1; the new Loew house will be under way on about the same date, the Capitol is expected to open early in the spring in the South Park district, and on April 1 the Rivoli will open its doors to the residents in the vicinity of the Broadway market. Now comes to the news of two more local houses and another big one at Niagara Falls.

Erection will be started on May 1 of a motion picture theatre in Broadway, between Detroit and Townsend streets, which is in one of the most thickly populated sections of the city, by Jacob Rosing & Sons, part owners of the Olympic, Lyric and Fillmore theatres, and former proprietors of the Plaza Theatre in William street. The ground floor of the new house will have a seating capacity of 2,500. The dimensions of the lobby are 29 feet by 130 feet, and of the auditorium 110 by 120 feet. The house will cost about $250,000. A glass dome fifty feet in diameter, will be a feature of the interior decorations.

According to Mr. Rosing, the theatre will be patterned after the Capitol in New York. "We intend to present high-class motion pictures only," he said. Mr. Rosing entered the motion picture business in 1909.

Famous Players House Rumor.

There is a report current that Famous Players-Lasky will erect a new house in Buffalo. The Buffalo Express published a story on Sunday, February 1, that H. B. Kelly, of the corporation, has been in Buffalo to consult with the company's attorney on the progress of the project. According to the Express story, Mr. Kelly is quoted as saying that the site for the new theatre has been decided upon, but because of the fact that negotiations for the transfer of the land have not been completed, no definite announcement will be made yet as to the exact location.

Plans for the construction of a mammoth theatre and business block in Niagara Falls on the site of the Prospect Park Hotel, between the Cataract Theatre building and Croy's drug store, have been accepted by A. C. Hayman and Joseph A. Schuchert, of the Cataract Theatre Company. Bids have been asked for and contracts will be let soon. The whole theatre and business block enterprise will cost more than $500,000. The plans call for the erection of a four-story business block in Falls street, housing six stores with a court at the rear, and the construction of a theatre with a seating capacity of 2,600. There will be 38 individual exits. The Cataract Theatre Company, it is announced, has signed up with the Associated Exhibitors.

To Have Electric Scenic Dock.

The interior of the new house will be beautiful in design. Auto loges, the latest thing in seating, will take the place of boxes. The theatre will have the latest heating, ventilating, refrigerating and ammonia cooling systems. A mezzanine floor will occupy the space between the lower floor and the balcony. Lounging rooms, retiring rooms and a promenade will be located on the mezzanine floor. Fourteen stairs will lead from the mezzanine to the balcony.

The dimensions of the theatre will be 110 feet by 112 feet. In its construction one of the largest girders ever manufactured will be used. The stage will be equipped with an electric controlled scenic dock, which will handle all scenery automatically. The Cataract policy will be vaudeville and exclusive high-class pictures.

Mr. Schuchert is interested in several Buffalo theatres, among them the Columbia, Colonial and Elmwood. He is a veteran in the motion picture business, being at one time manager of the old General Film office in Buffalo. Mr. Schuchert has recently purchased a fine residence in the Central Park district.

Selznick Adds to Press Staff.

W. Robert Golden, well-known New York newspaper man who was recently a member of the New York Herald staff, has been assigned to the Selznick Fort Lee and Bronx studios to represent the publicity department of Selznick Pictures. Katherine Ann Porter, who formerly held that position, is now associated with the home office publicity staff as a feature writer.

Neilan Signs J. Barney Sherry.

J. Barney Sherry has been signed by Marshall Neilan to play prominent parts in all the forthcoming Neilan productions. Mr. Sherry was recently engaged for an important part in "The River's End," Neilan's first independent production, and so well did the producer like Sherry's acting that he signed him to a long time contract.

Took Two Full Pages in One Issue to Boom His Recently Opened House

MAKING enough money with his old house to build a new and modern theatre, A. L. Middleton, of De Queen, Ark., is now spreading all over the paper to put the Grand on the map. When he started the Queen Theatre he went strong on printer's ink and it worked so well for him that he was able to begin a new house. Recently this was opened and now he is working harder than ever. Advertising is only twenty cents an inch, with a six column page, but even at that it take some nerve to use two full pages in a single issue, for twenty cents an inch in a small town means just as much of a gamble as two dollars an inch in a larger place. The proportion is the same, but Mr. Middletown took a full page lately to advertise his coming attractions and another full page for his current Pickford. And the editor threw in the major portion of a front page column reader and probably gave Mr. Middleton a cigar to boot. In the old days Mr. Middleton used to be a regular, but he has been too busy building to send in stuff lately. Now that the house is running we hope that he comes back into line, for he has good ideas.

Program Display Should Be Small to Get the Most Into Space at Command

ADMITTING that while it may be more blessed to give than to receive, he thinks the small town man must take because he has so little to give, A. N. Miles, Eminence, Ky., comes in with a new program and a throwaway he used in place of a herald, and asks for an opinion. The throwaway was to replace a herald on "The Miracle Man" which the exchange could not supply. He combined a press book cut with phrases from the same source and got something we think helped him more than the average herald. Mr. Miles is fortunate in having a good printer. He was less successful with his program.

The house runs three days a week and has been using a vest pocket card. Now he is trying a ready-print cover with a day to a page. He writes that he wants more space for copy. He gets the space with this little four by five, but he does not use all the space he gains. He takes a day to the page, with the front for the next good underline. One thing Mr. Miles overlooks. Where he has no competition in type, an eighteen point is plenty large enough for the page. The 36 point he uses is entirely too large. A thirty-six is all right for the newspapers, where he has to fight a mass of type, but in a program even a good twelve will be plenty large enough for stars and titles. Larger is not only a waste of space, but it gives a badly balanced page.

If we had to get out a program for a house with only three shows a week, we think we would use a nineteen em column instead of the fifteen this printer uses. This would better fill the page. We would set the stars in ten point, the casts in six point and use the same face for the argument. With a light line cut off rule between the days we would get all three on the same page, using page three. Then for page two we would write some snappy chat about the house and the current show.

The dogged determination of Stradivarius O'Day with his rule of never trying to do more than one thing at a time, and the way he conquers fate and wins against almost overwhelming odds, form an excellent motive for the plot, which is embellished with many laughable incidents and a comedy finish of unusual humorous possibilities. The fun is always clean and lively, and the entire picture furnishes entertainment of the most wholesome order.

A Program Which Does Not Work to Capacity.

On the back we would tell about next week's show and some of the good things coming. And we would go out and shoot the printer so full of holes that they couldn't embalm him the first time he used a 36-point type on a page 3¾x5. If we didn't have the nerve to shoot we would use poison. There is no need for such huge faces. It is like trying to give an elephant his Saturday night wash in a baby's bathtub. It does not fit. We cannot understand how the same printer could make so good a job with the throwaway and so poor an attempt with the program—which is the more important. But Mr. Miles is wrong about the small town man having little to offer. Some of the best stuff we get comes from the small towns.

Plays Up One Theatre at Expense of Sister House to Gain Effect

REID and Yemm, of Duquoin, Ill., send in a throwaway used for Christmas and ask for comment. It is a 5x11 slip advertising two houses, and in general it is well laid out, though the border is rather old-fashioned in these days of the A. T. F. material. It is printed in green to get a Christmas atmosphere and this is played up through the copy. We think that the top line for the Majestic is an error of judgment. It runs "Majestic theatre picks a winner for Christmas Matinee and Night." This gives the impression that the Grand did not have the same good fortune and that the Majestic has the better offering.

Of course the money goes into the same pocket, but the man who fails to get into the Majestic and has to turn to the Grand will feel that he is getting the worst of it. As a matter of fact we think the brisk comedy a better offering for the day than the heavy northwestern story, but the reverse impression is created. Typographically the general display is a little better than the average, but the lines are too crowded. The slip is made to work too hard.

—P. T. A.—

Compare This Reverse Cut With the Clean-Cut Type and Line Display

COMPARE these two displays from St. Louis, both done by the same management, and remember that here the reverse cut looks much better than it does in the newspaper. In the latter a yellowish print paper has been used, which further kills the whites and the press work is so poor that the intending patron actually has to puzzle over the playing dates. The title stands out well because it is short and gets a sufficiently large letter to be conspicuous.

The "Evangeline" is not so well displayed in the script, but it will get over at first glance, and the clear lettering, followed by the distinct type, gives every line a full value.

The line cut is very advantageously placed and it fits into the subject and the display. It is an exceptionally neat advertisement and probably worked several times as hard as the blackface cut. This chain of houses usually does such work that a slip into reverse is notable, but these two displays serve to point a moral. About once in a thousand times the reverse cut will work in a newspaper. The other 999 times it should be reserved for magazine advertising, where good ink and good press work will give it a proper value.

Detroit House Follows Buffalo in Lightline Hand Lettered Display

WERE it not that January sixteenth has passed into history, we would imagine this copy from the Madison, one of the Kunsky houses in Detroit, to have been done by an artist verging upon a delirium. He did all right with the house signature and got started on "Starting today" but then his pen started in to do a serpentine dance and worked over into the shimmy. At that it is an effective adaptation of Harold B. Franklin's style, but a cleaner letter would have contributed to the effect. This deckle edged letter is not easily readable, especially in the lighter lines. Very evidently they turned things loose for this with a real horse race on the treamill effect invented by Niel Burgess for "Vim" and later done in Ben Hur as a prologue to the film. And in passing, why doesn't someone dig up Burgess' "The County Fair" for production? It should clean up with a five or six reel presentation as well as "In Old Kentucky."

John L. Johnston's Open Displays Give Greatest Selling Arguments

JOHN L. JOHNSTON keeps working away with his open front advertising for the Congress, of Minneapolis and St. Paul houses he does the press work for, and he is getting more expert all the time in handling the open spaces. He does not say much, as a rule, but he has the trick of saying much in little. In the Aster space, for example, he puts in a "Don't let this slip by unseen" that is quiet and yet a powerful suggestion. It means more to the average reader than would a lot of puffery no one will believe. Downright praise will seldom sell. The most effective argument is the seemingly careless but carefully planned suggestion which does not seem too eager and yet which carries weight precisely on this account.

McCormick Turns to the Cartoon Ad. for Effect

CARTOON advertising worked so well for "A Virtuous Vamp" that S. Barret McCormick decided to try it again and he used the same idea for "A Daughter of Two Worlds," and got as much out of it. Cartoons will work, but only if they are good cartoons. It takes more skill to draw badly than to draw to form, and there must be a smartness of line or the effect is ruined.

One of Mr. McCormick's New Cartoon Ads.

The McCormick ads are really clever and for a change they will get more attention than the best straight work. The idea may not last as long, but it will attract powerfully while it is running. This reproduction is about the best of the set, but there were two almost as good and all three carried the halftone picture of the star, and he surely had a halftone to make your eyes water. Even in the newspaper work it came out like a magazine cut on plate paper. For Fairbanks in "When the Clouds Roll By" he used the horseshoe as the main point in all his displays and turned out a series of attractors that got attention.

Handsome Border Design Gives Distinction to Ad.

ALTHOUGH art work cannot sell tickets by itself, it can help sell tickets if used properly and we think that three tens from E. E. Bair, of Loew's Euclid, Cleveland, is one of the best examples of artistic border we have ever reproduced in this department. It is both simple and artistic and the black and white has been handled with rare intelligence. The picture itself is not striking. If it were too conspicuous it would defeat its own ends. It is because it is not too striking that it serves so well to enclose the text. It does not detract from the printed word, but rather it displays and enhances the message without taking attention from the type.

It is a border in the true sense of the word and as nice a piece of work as you could ask for in a magazine page. A few of these in assorted depths and of different column widths would solve the problem for those who wish to get a distinctive advertisement without elaborate art work. And don't forget that often you can get magazine pages from which you can lift the frames and have these reproduced at no cost other than for the engraving and mortising. Try it some time. It will repay you.

A Bunch of Stunts from Pat Argust, of Colorado

ADMITTING that perhaps his stuff is too undignified to please some, Pat Argust, of the Princess, Colorado Springs, sends in a bunch of ideas with the further remark that Pike's Peak Avenue may not be quite the same as Broadway or Philadelphia's Market Street. Advertising is pretty much the same the world over, and the circus feature is the same on Broadway as on Main street—only you have to make it a little heavier on Broadway because you have so many more people to hit. The man who does "dignified" advertising and nothing else may be all right for a bank or a church, but he is out of place in the amusement business.

One of Mr. Argust's stunts was an interpolation on the Christmas bill which is good for any time. He started things by having Santa Claus greet the holiday patrons, but when the Arbuckle comedy broke right in the middle of the subject and the lights went up and "Fatty" himself walked out and roasted the projectionists browner than most Christmas turkeys, the audience was in an ecstacy of mirth. The man made up well as the comedian and the apparently impromptu stunt went over big. For "When the Clouds Roll By" he got out a one-side extra very closely approximating the local paper when folded. The part shown carried a three column head "An entire town swept away by a mountain of water." This referred to a scene from the play, but in the mountain district between cloudbursts and irrigation dams, such a head will get more attention than American participation in the League of Nations.

Reprinted from The Colorado Springs Evening Telegraph editorial December 29, 1919.

THE MOVIE OASIS

America's sixth industry is doing something else besides supplying wholesome amusement, pleasant entertainment and enlightening education.

For the movie palace, in the city, serves as a dropping in place for the weary, a resting spot that has come to be appreciated. In the small towns the movie house has always been more or less of a social center, where friends and groups of friends are sure to meet "of evenings."

With the passing of the saloon all over this country men more and more are sure to take to the movies at the lunch hour. Women shoppers long ago discovered that the movie manager catered to this "drop-in" spirit.

Here, in the semi-darkness, is balm for the soul-weary as well as for the leg-weary, a safe retreat where one may think and for the hour forget his troubles. Millionaires who enter the movie palace for just an hour of peaceful reflection without regard to the pictures, come out dyed-in-the-wool movie fans.

Make the Princess Theater your dropping in place, your resting spot. You will always find a Paramount-Artcraft picture. The Princess Concert Orchestra for your musical entertainment. Courteous service. Rest room, public phone and place to check your parcels.

"PAT" ARGUST, Mgr.

A Three Eights Playing up an Editorial On Picture Theatres.

Lately one of the newspapers ran an editorial referring to the picture house as a substitute for the saloons. Mr. Argust promptly reprinted it in a three eights, with appropriate comment. Possibly you can get your own editor to make some similar comment with the understanding that you will play it up later. Coming from the paper itself, it carries greater weight than the best argument you can offer on your own account, and the editor will be well within the truth. Mr. Argust also sends a photograph of the lobby display for "Broken Blossoms," recently described. Turn back to page 623, January 24, for the description. The "sacred arch" seen in the foreground was a real clean-up stunt and should be within the reach of any house. Paint it a very bright vermillion red and pick out in gold, tell

There never has been a time when comedies could not sell some tickets the feature could not reach, but the demand is now more and more for comedy and the wise manager caters to this demand by giving more space to his small stuff. More than once the comedy has topped the five reel feature on the general proposition that the feature can take care of itself, and in every instance the additional space has paid. Gave Double Program to Celebrate Anniversary

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Palace, Wichita, sends in a set of advertisements for his fourth anniversary which are good enough to be used as a complete set if only we could persuade the boss to give us that much space. Mr. Chambers went into it the right way. He did not make the event the excuse for raising prices. He slapped the newest Pickford and the newest Chaplin on one bill and then announced "It's our treat," and forgot all about an advance in prices. "Pollyanna" and "A Day's Pleasure" on one bill for a regular admission should be a knockout anywhere. And Mr. Chambers pollyannaed the editors by taking extra display spaces to get the glad news over.

One good design was a seven sixes with a birthday cake and candle trimmings. Mr. Chambers does not usually go to drawn designs, for he knows that type pays him best and he runs mostly to type. He simply stuck largely to type even for this, but he wanted a good splash and he let the artist run up a bill on him. The design is effective, and reasonably light, though we think a heavier outline around those white letters would have helped. Another display was better in that it ran to type announcement and got the idea over better. This was a three nines. The anniversary announcement is drawn to represent the smoke from the candles. A four fifteens was a combination display with a page boy holding the cake and with the two stars at the top in a drawn design.

A Three Nines With a Better Display.

A special prologue with a rainbow effect and with a kewpie bearing the cake was used to preceed the film and with a slight alteration the opening title for "Pollyanna" was made to apply to the celebration. The entire picture worked the "glad" angle and could not have been better had it been planned. On the closing day — Saturday — there was a special morning performance for the orphans at which some of the Wichita society leaders acted as hostesses and gave distinction to the event. You can imagine what a crowd of amusement-hungered orphans did to a combination of Pickford and Chaplin. It was a great week for the patrons and the house alike, and Mr. Chambers was tired, but happy, at the end.

Combination Ad Displays Title and Scene Hint

FROM the Alhambra, Utica, N. Y., comes a five nine which compromises between drawn and type display. The sketch gets over the title very nicely and stays away from the type talk. The latter is hurt by too many all capital lines. Cutting down to an upper and lower case would have given greater legibility and better display to those lines remaining in upper case. It works both ways. But this display sells more on the title than the argument. People know the book and will want to see the play. This is a Monday space and not a Sunday advertisement, as its size would suggest.

Six Sheet Action Bill Will Help Box Sale

DIFFERING from the clinch, this six sheet gotten out by American for a Pathe-released picture should sell tickets. The suggestion of action is strong and there is movement to the poses of the figures. The rest of the paper does not give as much action, but this six sheet is an unusually good example of what an action bill should be.

Graveyard Sleeping Contest Was a Sensational Clean-up for Saenger

ALTHOUGH the press stunt devised by C. L. Yearsley, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for "The Greatest Question" has been cleaning up all over the country, it remained for New Orleans to work it to the limit, and there it shared space with one of the strongest gubernatorial contests ever fought. It got the front page of the New Orleans Item day after day, and its star reporter was assigned to write the stories. The press angle was held back until the story broke, and after that all that was necessary was to see that the police reserves were on the job before the doors of Strand were opened. That was all, except counting up the money, and that took considerable time. It probably brought more column inches of pure reading matter than any stunt ever pulled off in the Crescent City.

Foster Olroyd, of the Strand, and L. H. Granjean, chief of publicity for the Saenger houses, were quick to see the possibilities of the Yearsley idea and put an advertisement in the Saengerette, the house organ for the New Orleans houses in the Saenger chain. This merely offered $25 to any white man or $50 to any colored man, $75 to a white woman and $100 to any colored woman who would spend a night in a graveyard chained to a headstone. The day after the Saengerette appeared the same advertisement occupied a modest space in the Item.

Newspaper Takes It Up.

Even before the paper was out a reporter was around to see what it was all about, and when the details of the scheme were explained to him and were carried by him to his chief, it was decided to play up the story from the human interest angle. Tom Dabney, a star writer, was assigned to the story, and he wisely took a semi-humorous angle to avoid the gruesome. Some fifteen hundred applications were received by mail, wire and in person, and Dabney interviewed the pick of these, using the interviews as the basis for a series of stories which ran day after day on the front page, sharing the space honors with the political fight. Of course the greatest question was whether any colored person could be induced to enter a graveyard after nightfall, let alone sleep there.

So great was the pressure of applications that it was necessary to advertise that no more letters could be considered and that any person having a question to be asked could send it in and the person chosen for the experiment would propound it if opportunity offered. This turned up a new angle, "What is your greatest question?" and brought new interest to the stories.

Colored Women Barred.

The only difficulty encountered was obtaining the use of a graveyard, but through the backing of the newspaper three cemeteries were put at the disposal of the theatre, and a white man and woman and a negro man were selected for the experiment. It was not considered advisable to take chances on a colored woman, though many made application.

The location of these three cemeteries was carefully kept a secret, but hundreds visited the different cemeteries for several nights in the hope of watching the sleepers.

On the night selected a rain was falling and army pup tents were borrowed to shelter the cots. One experimenter was placed in each cemetery and secured to a headstone by a padlocked chain terminating in a handcuff.

What the Watchers Saw.

In the morning Dabney collected the stories. The white man had a lantern in his tent and he declared that this was repeatedly extingushed. He saw nothing else. The negro was willing to swear that something vague and shadowy remained at the foot of his tent for more than an hour, but the chain held. The woman saw nothing, but slept comfortably. In the morning a bouquet from one of the graves was found on the foot of her couch, though the committee declared that no one had gone near the tent.

The stories made a tremendous sensation and the house advertising campaign was launched the day the stories appeared. It was the first definite connection of the story with a theatre, and it was then too late for the theatrical angle to hurt the story. The town was all agog. Better still, the stories had been copied into newspapers all over that section and paved the way for the local use of the stunt after the film had been shown in New Orleans. There are Saenger houses all through that part of the country and they all profited from a story which represented only $150 in cash and for one day even swamped the contest for governor. In New Orleans the film played to the utmost capacity of the house for the full seven days, the police reserves being on duty constantly.

It is one of the best and at the same time one of the cheapest press stunts ever devised, and it will be long before something better is offered.

Try This on Your Local School Board Sometime

PLEASED with the result of permitting the school children to attend the performance of "Huckleberry Finn" at the Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, when the schools were closed a half hour ahead of time to permit them to be in time for the matinee, Prof. Prout, Superintendent of Public Schools, is arranging the same thing for the forthcoming production of "Treasure Island." In a recent interview he said:

> I find that by showing the moving picture version of these American classics, we can reduce the time of study devoted to the books by one to three weeks. It is a wonderful help. By the theatres showing these pictures, the schools are actually saved a great deal of money, because we would want to show them if the theatres did not. I am a motion picture devotee and I can truthfully say that in the last few months I can remember only one picture that I would be doubtful about my children seeing.

Try this on your own school board. It has worked and will work again.

Hook-Up Drug Stores for "Male and Female" Run

HOOKING UP drug stores is one way of getting over "Male and Female." In Cincinnati, where the production ran for two weeks at the Strand, six huge windows in as many stores of a chain drug concern were filled with toilet articles and hooked up with the bath and boudoir scenes in the play by means of signs and stills. Any live drug or department store will welcome this sceme and it will work in places of any size. These displays were arranged for the Strand by the Cincinnati branch of the Famous Players-Lasky.

Minneapolis Manager Recalls Old Days

Bottle and Glass Revive Memories and Advertise "Fair and Warmer"

PERAMBULATING thermometers, bottles and glasses were used by Charles C. Perry, of the New Strand, Minneapolis, to boom the advent of "Fair and Warmer" with May Allison. A cocktail brings about the complications in the Metro production and this suggested the idea of the bottle and glass. They were huge props and were labeled "This bottle held the famous cocktail in 'Fair and Warmer' at the Strand." The glass was similarly lettered and the top also carried an advertisement for the play.

In addition to the perambulating thermometer, the lamp posts in front of the house were enclosed with four-sided boxes also carrying theremometers on each face with the spirit indicators trying to crawl through the tops of the tubes.

The theremometer in some form is the obvious method of handling special advertising, but the bottle and glass made the big clean-up, and they were taken all over the business section day after day and never seemed to lose their pulling value.

A couple of days before the run was ended, when the perambulators had done their work pretty thoroughly, Mr. Perry played a new angle and revived interest for the last days. The two props had become common on the street and were ceasing to attract attention, but when the glass appeared alone and Mr. Perry came out with a statement that the bottle had been stolen, interest was revived and this was built upon by the advertisement offering the glass to go with the bottle, if the culprit would come forward to claim it.

All of this looks like "big time" stuff which the small exhibitor cannot afford to copy, but not elaborate property room is necessary for the preparation of such devices and even the smallest house can work one now and then. Any carpenter can construct the frame, over which cloth is stretched while the patent kalsomines, with a liberal addition of glue for sizing, can be used for the colors. The thermometer is within the artistic reach of almost anyone, but it will be found that even the bottle will not offer many difficulties. Mr. Perry reports that the trio of money bringers did not cost $25 and they, more than any other single factor, were responsible for crowded houses for a week. They were timely and amusing, and they gained attention.

Not all features lend themselves to this style of advertisement, but where a suggestion is offered by the title or subject, something a little out of the ordinary will greatly increase business. It does not have to be as elaborate as this bottle. The big idea is that the specially advertised picture suggests a picture especially worthy of exploitation, and it is this angle which sells the tickets.

Uses Plugger Song for His Advance Advertising

INSTEAD of using the plugger song merely as a window hook-up for his attraction, C. F. Linnert, of the Wade Park Orphehm, Cleveland, has a song fest a week or ten days in advance of the showing when a girl singer gives the verse and chorus and then hammers the refrain into the audience in a tactful way.

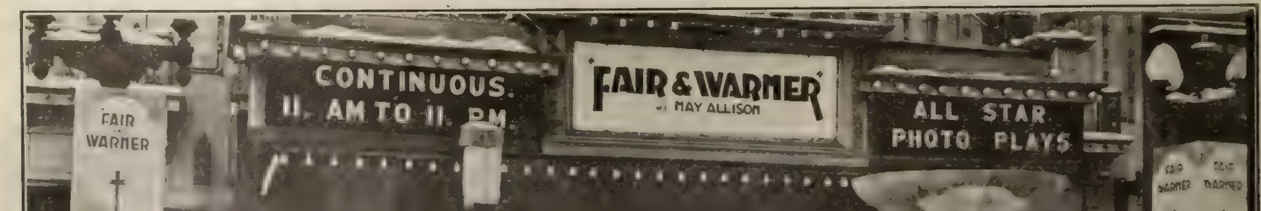
As a result, instead of waiting to buy the song, the crowd is familiar with the chorus before the attraction comes and each time the chorus is sung or whistled it serves as an advertisement for the feature, while at the same time it seems to help the sale of the song in the stores. A local singer is employed and made a feature and the cost is but slight in comparison with the results. Mr. Linnert first used the idea with "Daddy Long Legs" and has since employed all of the First National songs in the same manner.

Planning Now for Next Summer Auto Business

M. L. STOCKLEY of the Princess, Hopkinsville, Ky., is wading through such snowdrifts as he can find to plan for next summer. Last year, just as the cold weather drew down, he took an auto ride and made the interesting discovery that the road runs both ways, so he made an experimental drive on business for "Daddy Long Legs" and "Shoulder Arms" before the weather grew too chilly.

The results were so unexpectedly good that he is arranging now for painted signs in a twenty-mile radius. As he seldom runs an attraction more than two days, he is making his theatre rather than his shows the basis of his boards and they will be permanently lettered with such signs as "There is no pleasanter way of spending a hot afternoon or evening than at the Princess Theatre, which shows the best productions of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, Marshall Nielan, Constance Talmadge, Norma Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald and all the best in motion pictures."

For smaller stands he merely mentions the house as the objective for the drive, but the cool off is always the feature. He is planning to supplement this with a carefully compiled list of auto owners in the territory who will be circularized as circumstances warrant.



Now How Can a "Cold Bottle" Be "Fair and Warmer"?
How a Minneapolis theatre brought joy to the people by sending these perambulators through the snowdrifts to talk of "Fair and Warmer."

Variety in Appeal Makes Booming Easy

Variety in Booking Makes It Easy to Exploit Because of Contrasts

FACILITATING exploitation through the correction of an exhibitor practice of long standing, the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., under the management of Frank Buhler, has taken a long step in showmanship that is of keen interest to exhibitors in that it means invigoration of box office receipts at practically no expense.

The general trend of exploitation activities is either toward the selection of a certain attraction which afterwards proves to be of exceptional box office merit or the intensive promotion used with any given attraction. In the case of the Stanley Theatre, the novelty is the fact that exhibitor judgment which planned three weeks ahead saved thousands of dollars of physical exploitation expense.

A regrettable error arising from the fact that exhibitors have wearied the public through the presentation of the same style of picture week after week, is the principal reform accomplished by Mr. Buhler when he selected three different types of pictures in "The Thunderbolt," starring Katherine MacDonald; "The Daughter of Two Worlds," starring Norma Talmadge, and "Back to God's Country," the Curwood-Carver attraction, all of which were distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Sameness Old-Fashioned.

The practice of specializing on certain kinds of pictures is a shadow of the less progressive era of motion pictures, according to Mr. Buhler. Nearly two and a half years ago, when the vampire type of picture was popularly acclaimed, many exhibitors never missed an opportunity to play this sort of attraction, and in some cities competition was rife as to which exhibitor could afford to pay most for this particular kind of picture.

The time when a definite kind of attraction week in and week out can be relied upon to bring crowds has passed.

And now, according to the Stanley Theatre's corps of expert showmen, the time is ripe when the exhibitor must select his various programs with the same care as though he were dealing out reading matter for the public. The book fan uses a variety of fiction.

All Are Different.

"The Thunderbolt," Katherine MacDonald's initial First National effort, is a strong drama of appealing sex interest. The elements of mother love and revenge are equally featured in this picture. The beauty of the star and the unusual theme of the attraction formed the basis for the newspaper exploitation.

It was therefore not difficult a week later when "The Daughter of Two Worlds," Norma Talmadge's first picture dictributed through First National, was shown at the Stanley, to play up the angle of romance in the climb of a daughter of the underworld to the pinnacle of New York's society. Furthermore, Leroy Scott's novelized version of "The Daughter of Two Worlds" had been running in serial form in the Evening Public Ledger for the past month. This attraction broke all attendance and box office records during its week's run.

And different from either "The Thunderbolt" or "The Daughter of Two Worlds" was "Back to God's Country," the Curwood-Carver attraction, which portrayed a drama of love and hate in the far northlands. This picture was distinctive from the sex drama and the romantic picture in that it pictured scenes in the Arctic regions and featured more different wild animals than have ever been seen in a motion picture.

Vary Your Appeal.

The art of exploiting special feature attractions will forever hold an acehigh place in the world of showmanship. But good judgment that enables the exhibitor to select his subjects in such a manner that each is distinctive enough in itself to arouse additional and a different kind of interest from the picture just preceding.

The attraction that is hard to exploit is the picture that is so like the preceding pictures that it is hard to get a novel angle for exploitation. There are essentially only a comparatively few different types of motion pictures and the far-sighted exhibitor will select them and book them in such a manner that an elementally different picture is seen each week. It is this rotation of varied subjects that makes exploitation easier and more congenial to public tastes, according to the Stanley management.

Willow Tree Book Will Bud Real Dollars

ALTHOUGH it is sadly overworked, "one hundred per cent." is the right description for the press book of "The Willow Tree" just issued by Metro. It is packed with ideas, cuts and paper reproductions and the stunt ideas are just as practicable as the cuts, which run from a half column to a half page layout. And the cuts and layouts are a treat, for the subject lends itself particularly well to pictorial advertising and there is not a design which does not carry a suggestion of the Japanese atmosphere. The manager who cannot make such a press book boom business for him could not sell Barnum and Bailey's circus for a ten cent admission. All the stuff is there. All that is needed is the energy to get it over to the house patrons. The sheet is an exceptionally good production. It was written to help the exhibitor and not merely to impress the man who pays the salaries.

David was not as big as Goliath, but he had the punch. Make your ads work like David.

Ever Try Postcards Mailed Out of Town?

Brand New Wrinkles in Postcard Publicity from Lynch Theatres

POSTCARDING patrons is no new idea. According to some press books you should send three postcards and a letter for every attraction, but postcards work best when more sparingly employed and if they are used only to give special emphasis to an engagement. Like everything else, they become common if used too regularly.

Improving on the local postcard, two of the houses in the Lynch chain report success from the out-of-town card. The most novel idea comes from J. S. Hursey, of Spartanburg. He had "The Greatest Question" for an attraction and went to the trouble of having cards specially written by hand which read:

"Dear L.:

"Received your message and thank you for the good wishes. Am having the time of my life on this trip. By the way, have just seen Griffith's new picture, 'The Greatest Question,' and it's great, but awfully queer. Be sure and see it if you have the chance. Regards to all. H."

These cards were addressed to a selected list and sent to New York, Atlanta and Ashevelle for mailing. They arrived just as the feature was advertised at the local house and practically no one realized that there was any connection between that fact and the mailing of the card, but puzzled over the identity of the unknown correspondent.

Try Picture Cards.

And even better would have been the employment of colored souvenir postals from the cities in which the batches of cards were mailed. These can easily be secured in advance. Where there is no circuit of houses the local exchange manager can get them if the house is not too close to the exchange city, or can write some other exchange if it is desired to go further away from home. There is some labor entailed in writing all of these cards by hand, but by employing girls the cost is slight and the ushers can be used in a pinch since the list is seldom large.

Working another angle, Phil Gersdorf, of Jacksonville, sent the Atlanta office a package of cards to be mailed from there. These were less effective in that thre was a too apparent hookup with the film, for they read "What's your husband doing?" and was signed "Doug and Dorris." The cards were sent only to married women and there was some danger that there might be a widow or two on the list who would reflect upon her husband's past life and resent the question.

Get the Right Addresses.

Like all mailing stunts the value of the idea depends upon the accuracy of the list, but there are many ways of checking these lists and keeping them up to date, and the out-of-town postmark will help wonderfully to create a new interest. With the postcard habit so common it is seldom that the recipient will not be puzzled if the message is not too intimate. It should be fairly general, in order that it might fit a number of acquaintances. It must offer no clue.

Like most special stunts it cannot be repeated often, but used once it may get an entire town speculating, and the larger the place the better the idea will work, though it will work even in the smallest places.

Space Stealer O. A. Doob Gets Half Page Novel In

OSCAR A. DOOB, of the Cincinnati Paramount exchange, not only gathered in six free stories as a series for "Male and Female," but he followed that up by getting a half page in the Cincinnati Post for the condensed novel of the play.

The Post, largely because Doob gives it such good stuff, is very friendly toward the pictures, in pleasant contrast to many mid-western papers, some of which brag that they run no unpaid material. Its editors know that the pictures are something vital to a large percentage of its readers and they make space for good picture stuff, but a half page; a four column spread is going some even for a friend in these days of white paper conservation.

How Oscar A. Doob Got a Free Page from a Cincinnati Paper.

And the most remarkable part of the story is the fact that the Post held back publication a couple of weeks that the Strand, the local house having it for first run, might profit by the publication. It's a great stunt but it will nearly always be found that where the stuff turned in is right and the pressman tactful the editor can be reached. Generally a lockout follows a friction between the house and the editor. And almost always the breach can be healed if the proper approach is made.

Blizzard-Bound Victims Housed in the Theatre

DURING the recent blizzard thousands of persons were unable to get home on trolley cars and trains. J. J. Cahill, of the Strand, Brockton, Mass., was quick to see the publicity angle of the situation and he instructed his engineer to keep steam up all night and notified the police stations that he would take care of all sent him after the evening show. Several hundred persons passed the night in a comfortable orchestra seat instead of on a hard bench in the railroad station or police headquarters, and went out in the morning to spread the fame of the Strand far and wide. It was a simple thing, but timely and of far-reaching effect. Keep it in mind next time your own city faces any similar crisis.

Press Sheets for Reissues

PREPARING press sheets for reissues is something new, but Bert Ennis sends in good four page broadsides for Chaplin in "The Champion" and "Carmen." For the latter they also have a plugger song by William J. McKenna, and in addition to a chorus trailer they have miniature scene cards with a scene on one side and the chorus on the other; a novel idea which will probably be copied now that it has been brought out.

Hung Up Prize at Track to Boom "Old Kentucky"

HELPING to boom "In Old Kentucky" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, Anita Stewart visited Ascot, the local track, and offered a prize to the winner of one of the heats. A mounted jockey distributed handbills to the racegoers and Miss Stewart was not only introduced to the throng but was given several opportunities to get into the limelight in the course of the afternoon.

Another good angle, and one which appears to have worked wherever shown, was a prologue of negro singing and dancing. Ministrelsy still holds a powerful grip and even those who do not care for blackface performances in their entriety found the brief interlude to their liking.

Carrying out the racing idea one of the advertisements was in racing chart form and "The Good Luck picture of 1920" was made the slogan in all advertising.

Added Some Real Nymphs to Fox Celluloid Fairies

REVIVING Annette Kellermann's "A Daughter of the Gods" in his New York houses, William Fox has given it the prevalent girl angle by prefacing the film with a production in which a number of shapely girls disport themselves in a skit entitled "The Sea Nymphs of a Daughter of the Gods." Singing and dancing predominate in the spectacle, which introduced a number of novel feautres. Girl acts seem to be growing increasingly popular as adjuncts to photoplay programs.

Practical Stunts for Men Who Know How

Alabama and Nebraska Get Crowds with Well Written Classified Ads.

CLASSIFIED advertising as supplemental to display spaces recently appealed to managers as widely separated as Montgomery, Alabama and Omaha, Nebraska. In the latter city Harry H. Goldberg took six spaces under various headings for "Soldiers of Fortune." Under the situations wanted a young man advertised for a job as usher preferably in a theatre where he could see "Soldiers of Fortune," and in the lost and found a woman offered to let the finder keep her pocket book and two five dollar bills if he would return her theatre tickets. Others were in the help and situations wanted, calling for people to see the play. In each instance the telephone number of the theatre was given, and the number was used to make reservations.

This was merely a side angle to the Boy Scouts stunt and the more notable invitation to General Pershing to attend the performance. The classified columns alone will not carry an attraction, but they can help a lot to clinch the effect of the display and stunts. A surprisingly large number of persons read these advertisements whether they want a situation or not, and a large proportion of these do not read the theatrical advertisements. They are reached by means of these smaller spaces much more advantageously.

Wanted a Husband.

The Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., one of the Lynch houses, used the classified columns in a more pretentious way to get over the advance splash for "Wanted, a Husband," with Billie Burke. This stunt was worked by Mary R. Cannon, who has charge of the Lynch publicity in Montgomery.

It started with a six-line twelve point announcement that a young woman of personal charm desired a husband. Replies were to be sent to B. B. in care of the paper. This was followed by two and a half inches the next day, set with white space and with a change of copy. The third day the space was increased to five inches, mostly white space, and half the town was talking. Two more days and the whole town was wondering why B. B., who seemed to be attractive, had to waste so much space in order to do her leap year duty.

The last want ad was run Saturday and announced that the desired husband had been found and that a full explanation would be given in the Sunday paper. Of course this spilled the fact that it was an advertising stunt, but it did not tell just what it was, and they were all ready for the Sunday space; a full page hook-up, which told all about it in the centre of a display which included a number of merchandizing announcements which ran with the title. The entire cost, including that portion of the Sunday space taken by the theatre, was only $94.43, yet the display got as much attention as could have been attracted by five times the amount of display work.

This is not to be taken as indicating that the dramatic column can be deserted for the classified spaces, but it does drive home, with emphasis, that anything out of the ordinary run will arouse curiosity and help the display.

And the best curiosity getter is the teaser in some form. It works about 999 times out of every thousand and would work the thousandth time if done right. It does not have to be exceptionally clever, though the results are in proportion to the cleverness of the idea, but it does have to possess some form of novelty. It must get people guessing, and whether it is in the classified pages or run of paper as a straight teaser, it must be framed to hold the interest from day to day without permitting it to sag.

For this reason the Billie Burke stuff probably drew better than the Omaha stunt, for it held the interest for a week, where the other ran only for a day, but in each instance it was something out of the ordinary and it worked because it was that.

Try Animal Crackers to Pull Up Circus Plays

ONCE upon a time the Princess Theatre, Rockland, Ohio, ran three days a week to about a show and a half a night with a 168-seat house. Then J. D. Smith took the house over, started in to use publicity and he is playing to three full houses six nights a week and is beginning to wonder about matinee stunts.

Just as a sample of how he does it, he had Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth." A novelty store had some toy animals, so he organized a circus in its window with a barrel stage ring and a doll audience. Then he induced a local grocer to give small bags of animal crackers—with his own advertisement printed on the bag—as souvenirs, and he did an extra $20 on a blizzard night, which makes a pretty good return on a few pounds of crackers.

Don't say your town is too small (or too large) for publicity stunts. If there are only two other people in your town you can get one of them to interest the other. And it means money.

Uses His Underlines to Give Class to Program

USING the coming attractions to guarantee the current offering is the scheme of Jack Boyle, of the Strand, Fort Madison, Iowa. Recently he booked in all the First National attractions and gives the list of coming features in his daily advertisement; not the bill for the next week, but his big underlines for weeks to come.

He argues that it pays the drama houses to announce their coming attractions and that the same idea will work for the picture theatres even better. He points out that the smaller houses use the attractions some weeks or even months after the nearest large town shows them. Film fans know that the large cities are showing certain films. If they see these advertised in the announcement of the local house as having been booked, they feel that the current attraction is in the same class.

He took a page to advertise his First National contract and every space carries the titles of some of the current shows in the larger cities to prove that he offers the same programs even if there is some delay in the showing.

There is sound logic in his position. The daily papers and the film magazines all deal with the current releases. By advertising these at the time they are being mentioned, Mr. Boyle hooks his house up at the most advantageous moment. His patrons are willing to wait, but they like to know that they will see the stories they are reading about.

You cannot sell a film you do not believe in yourself. Don't book that sort.

The Lowdown on How to Light Your Lobby

Psychology of Colored Lights Is Explained in Application to Signs

ALTHOUGH most exhibitors know that some lights show up better than others on house fronts, few of them realize that there is a definite psychology of colors. Lem L. Stewart, publicity chief of the Lynch theatres, has dug out Francis William Vreeland's studies for the benefit of the local managers in The Enterprise Square Dealer, the Lynch house organ.

Red, he explains is known as an advancing color, and points out that if you stand upon the rear platform of a speeding train at night, the eye picks up and holds the red better than the other colored signals and it seems to keep up with the train instead of receding into the darkness as does the green safety signal, for which reason green is termed a receding color.

For this reason it would appear that red would be the best for house fronts, but red is an angry color as well as the generally accepted symbol of danger and of the underworld just as green stands for safety and police protection alike. Red, save in moderation, is not an attractive color for fronts.

On the other hand a mixture of yellow and red, or yellow tempered with red, gives the attractive orange, which is better than white not only because it is warmer, but because it is more distinctive. It stands out better against the straight white or yellow lights, suggests warmth and life, and a welcome generally.

Green in Winter.

On the other hand a certain amount of green in the globes works well in the winter time when the vegetation is gone and the color suggests the dominant summer tint, just as blue suggests softness and is cool and soothing in its lighter shades, indicating its use on hot summer days when red and green are too angry and suggestive of heat.

"Mama's Little Angel Baby"
Getting his health back in Robertson-Cole's "Seeing It Through."

Purple has the strength of red with some of the elements of blue, but should be used mostly for plays suggestive of passion and is not, on that account, as generally available as the other colors. Shades off the primary colors can be used to suggest modifications of these basic emotions. A mixture of lights can often be used to better effect than a straight mass of a single color, particularly where it is designed to suggest the oriental or unusual.

Try Color Schemes.

Mr. Stewart only touches upon the surface of the psychology, but he gives rich food for thought along the lines suggested some fifteen years ago by a Berlin theatrical manager who used a series of lights and colored posters to advise his patrons of the quality of his productions. In this latter scheme a family could attend a light blue performance, the more daring could go to green shows and only the hardened were advised to purchase tickets when the lights were red.

Working to a more logical conclusion, it might be possible to establish a series of color schemes for house fronts and lobbies which would serve as an attraction as well as an index. Certainly a summer time audience would be more likely to wander into a theatre the lobby of which was a haze of soft blue, while a flood of orange light, picked up with red, would be far more attractive on a blustery night in winter. A vivid green light would send patrons in to see a mystery play in the right frame of mind and soft rose lights would suggest romance even to the unthinking.

Vari-colored lights would form a fitting background for comedies while a deep blue would help along a marine picture.

The experiment is worth trying. Lay in some extra lights and see what you can do.

Tell Us, Too.

Whenever you put over a good idea in exploiting or advertising a picture, let Metro know about it.

What will often seem to an exhibitor in Texas to be an old, though effective, stunt, will be a brand new one for someone in Indiana or Massachusetts. And vice versa.

The important thing is to get in the habit of EXCHANGING IDEAS.

If you contrive to get an extra big spread in the newspapers, let's know how. If you hit upon some novel device for making your lobby more magnetic, or strike a hunch for a good street stunt, or a teaser series—anything that has to do with our common business, that of selling motion picture entertainment to the public—we'll all gain by your co-operating.—Metro Press Sheet.

Overhead Lobby Worked Where Frames Did Not

BECAUSE the fire department regulations of Utica, N. Y., forbid the use of frames in the lobby during the hours of performance, the Colonial, managed by Sim Allen for Wilmer & Vincent, cannot usually do much for its attractions in the lobby. There is plenty of room, but the frames have to set flat against the wall.

But when "Back to God's Country" came along, Mr. Williams saw what he could do if he could advertise, and he saw what fine cut outs he could get with those animal heads, if only he could use them. He was determined to use them, and he wanted to hard enough to find a way. He figured out that even if the house caught fire few would attempt to leave by way of the ceiling, so he strung wires and ranged the animal cut-outs on these, well above the heads of the patrons, but low enough to be seen without neck strain. With lettered cards to back this display he not only filled his lobby, but the lobby filled the house for the four-day run.

New Masked Woman Angle Won Tacoma Publicity

USING the same old masked lady in a slightly new way got a lot of front page publicity for the Victory Theatre, Tacoma, lately. A. A. Bruce donated $25 to be hung up in prizes by the Tacoma Times to the six persons who guessed the identity of the masked woman shown in a cut. The mask was of generous size, but not too large to wholly screen the identity of Dorothy Dalton, although some fifty other names were guessed at. The contest ran about a week and was decided the day the first advertising was done for "L'Apache." It brought one double column and half a dozen single column cuts on the front page and a column story the day the first advertising flashed, and it aroused a very great deal of interest in the identity of the player which, of course, reacted to Miss Dalton, the theatre and the play. It cannot be done every week, but the point is that it can be done once—then you can think up something else.

Soda and Sundaes Sold Nazimovas in Ripley

HOOKING up with the soda fountains, Billy V. Maddox, of the Gayety, Ripley, Ohio, had every dispenser in town serving Nazimova Soda and Nazimova Sundaes as a prelude to a strong newspaper campaign for "Eye for Eye," and then he went out, pleased with his success, and booked the entire Nazimova string; which proves that the sodas sold not only the public but Mr. Maddox

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Since the Trouble Department

ROBY KNOPF, Horton, Kansas, who has been absent in Europe, making the Hun hunt his hole, arises to remark:

This is my first letter to the department which I have read ever since it was the "Trouble Department," and which same has helped me over many a rough spot in days gone by. The same is true of the Handbook, a copy of each edition of which I have had since 1910.

For equipment, I have two Powers 6-B projectors, motor driven, taking current from 3-phase, 220-volt lines through a Transverter.

Use about forty amperes at arc. When so doing the voltmeter varies little from the fifty mark. Use two 7.5 condensers spaced fraction over 1-16 of an inch apart.

Have 5.75 E. F. objectives, and it is 15.5 inches from front of condenser to aperture.

Find enclosed fifty cents for lens chart, as a friend borrowed mine and forgot to return it. (He might about as well, friend Knopf, as you don't seem to have followed it anyhow, or else you have certainly changed your combination good and plenty since you lost the chart. Two 6.5 plano convex with 18.5 from center of condenser to aperture, with a 2-inch-diameter objective, or a 6.5 and 8.5 M. Bi-C., with 21 inches and a 2-inch-diameter objective is your correct combination. In your case I think there would be little gain by using M. Bi-C.—Ed.)

Ran into Trouble.

I ran into a peculiar trouble recently.

At one of our houses we have a Powers 6-A, using 60 amperes of 110 volt A C, through a Ft. Wayne compensarc. Formerly used Speer carbons, but recently bought some National Special A. C. White Light. For a couple of reels they work fine, then they start to pencil down for about two inches, both top and bottom, and finally burn clear off and put out the arc. Can find nothing wrong.

Use same carbons in spot, under exactly same conditions, except take current through rheostat instead of compensarc. Have suggested that we lay the specials aside and use ⅝ corde Nationals until the seat of trouble is discovered. Looked back through departments but find no answer which seemed to fit. By the way, when in army I missed all the "Worlds" except now and then one.

What will it cost me to get back numbers from August 5, 1917, to May 9, 1919?

Afraid It Can't Be Did.

Will refer your request for back numbers to subscription department, though I'm afraid it can't be did.

As to the carbon matter, I am not quite sure as to your meaning as to "burning clear off." Presumably, you mean the both carbons pencil and that the point finally burns or breaks off.

Penciling is usually pretty conclusive evidence of overloading, but may be superinduced by poor contact with carbon jaws.

I am referring your letter to the National Carbon Company, requesting immediate attention and suggesting that a few carbons one size larger be sent for trial.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two to three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth avenue, New York City; Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill., or Wright & Callender Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

The National Special A C White Light is a good carbon and is being used successfully all over the country.

I do not at the moment remember whether it has lower current capacity than ordinary carbons, but certainly ⅝ should be large enough for forty amperes A C.

Poor lamphouse ventilation would also be a possible answer, especially as the carbons work for a time. Excessive heat in lamphouse lowers carbon capacity.

Parabolic Mirrors vs. Condensers

John Griffiths is experimenting with Mazda light source. He writes that he is trying out parabolic mirrors, and that there are great possibilities in them.

He remarks that they are practical with a stationary light source such as the Mazda.

Well, John, mebby, mebby. That has been pretty well tried, however. We thought the same thing and really don't see why it is not, but such folks as the National Lamp Works turned it down so—well, we shall see what we shall observe.

Information Desired

Robert P. Smith, Jacksonville, Florida, arises to remark:

(A) I pull about forty amperes through a G. E. mercury arc rectifier and use A C through a Ft. Wayne compensarc for change-over.

When making the change there is a bad flicker until I am able to get the switch over to the rectifier side.

The flicker is much more pronounced than I have ever seen, one which was due to A C alone. Current is 60 cycle and we use 2-blade shutters.

(B) When starting arc on Powers projector it requires a much longer time for the arc to settle down and give satisfactory illumination than it does on the other projector. All Powers connections seem to be in good shape. I renew lamp leads often and scrape carbon jaws.

(C) When rectifier tube becomes slightly blackened is that an indication that it is not delivering maximum amperage and that it should be replaced? I have no ammeter, hence cannot check up, but am certain the rectifier is not delivering its rated amperage.

(D) With incandescent equipment at its present stage of development what do you regard as the maximum size picture and length of throw which will give satisfactory results?

Wants to Eliminate "Growling."

(E) Can you suggest some way of eliminating a "growling" noise in the Powers, bearing in mind the fact that my employer is adverse to buying new parts as long as the present will hold together.

The trouble does not line in the mechanism or motor but is somewhere in the speed control.

(F) Can you give me the ratio of speed of Simplex intermittent?

(G) Would it be practical or advisable to place a shield on arc side of arc condenser to cut off a part of its outer diameter from the light. Could I do this and move my crater enough nearer the lens to compensate for the loss so occasioned?

(H) Where can I purchase a book on optic projection?

Does Not Ask Much.

The good brother does not ask much—not very much anyhow, so I'll do the best I can as long as the typewriter ribbon holds out.

(A) The only possible cause for flicker when on A C, under the circumstances, is, so far as I can see, that the A C supplies the more brilliant light, and that hardly seems possible. Can any one suggest a better answer?

(B) If the connections are in equally good condition, the insulation in equally good condition and the lamphouse ventilation equally good on both projectors, then there would seem to be no reason why the Powers arc should act a bit differently from the other projector. If you were using A C I would suggest magnetic effect, due perhaps to position of wires in Powers, but you only use A C for starting and as I understand it the trouble continues after you are on D C.

(C) Blackening of rectifier tube does not necessarily indicate any deterioration in the tube. Maybe you have an old style rectifier in which the amperage delivery is changed by changing regulating reactance connections, and that there is need for adjustment. Better have G. E. Company, Schenectady, New York (address mercury arc rectifier department), send blue print of regulating reactance connections and directions. It is contained in second edition of handbook, but not in third edition because that type of rectifier is out of date by several years.

Refuse to Be Interviewed.

(D) I refuse ot be interviewed. There is too much variation in ideas as to what constitutes "satisfactory results."

(E) See Instruction No. 1, page 507 of handbook. Your trouble is probably due to friction material being in bad condition.

(F) Hope all that dope will be available for publication soon. Can't do it right now, though.

(G) It would depend upon circumstances. Your question has suggested a possibility which we shall make the subject of an editorial soon. In cases where the amperage is heavy and distance condenser to aperture therefore short, and the working distance of objective such, that it cannot pick up the entire ray, the diameter of the condenser might as well be reduced. Query: Would that permit of advancing the crater. If it would, would there be gain?

And there you are.

The World Do Move

Brothers Fred O. Slenker and Ross E. Hughes, Rock Island, Illinois, have the following to say, and say it:

This old world do move. From operators we become projectionists and go on learning forever and a day.

We hand you herewith drawings, of what we call the "Lightning Change-over" a device developed by We, Us and Company, viz: Ross O. Hughes and Fred O. Slinker. Brother Hughes is Chief Projectionist of the Colonial Theatre, while I have to content myself with being its mere house manager, advertising manager, cashier and general nuisance.

We recall, and with much pleasure, the one day we were fortunate in having you with us; also the snappy address which convinced us we really did have a lot to learn.

The Invention.

But getting back to the invention, in your travels you have no doubt observed many schemes for change-over, ranging from connected dowsers to elaborate electrical devices, all of which answered their purpose, at least in some degree, and some very well.

In the Lightning Change-over we have, what we firmly believe to be the fastest, handiest nad most thoroughly reliable and accurate little device ever used for the purpose of changing from one machine to the other.

The device is designed to be mounted on the projection room wall in front of each projector, in such manner that the light ray may be instantly cut off, or allowed to pass to the screen, by means of a shutter mounted in such manner that it passes in front of or away from in front of the lens instantly upon the pressing of a push button.

The push buttons are mounted in convenient position so that when the time comes to change the projectionist starts the idle projector, opens the dowser and presses the button, whereupon the change is accomplished instantly and without the least evidence of it on the screen.

How It Is Done.

We use two solenoids of equal strength, which are mounted on a base. A movable soft iron core is provided, of such length that when at one end of its stroke just sufficient is left in the other solenoid to pull it back when the coil is energized by pushing the button.

Shutter blades are attached to the solenoid rod, as shown. The solenoids take power through a low voltage transformer attached to the incandescent circuit, which permits installation with bell wire and without conduit.

The solenoids may be made to provide any length of throw, dependent upon diameter of light ray to be covered.

Gone One Better.

Brother Hughes and myself have gone one better and have provided ourselves with an electric motor switch which is attached to the dowsers, so that all that is necessary to change-over is open the dowser and press the button on the change-over, a job accomplished with two moves of the hand.

We have succeeded in arousing the envy of brother projectionists who have seen the device in operation and have threatened everything from murder to kissing us if we don't loosen up with details of its construction.

Should you give this space tell brother projectionists that full particulars, if more are needed, may be had by addressing Brother Hughes or myself, Colonial Theatre, Rock Island, Iowa.

Have read the department since 1909.

Seem to Be Practical.

The device seems to be entirely practical.

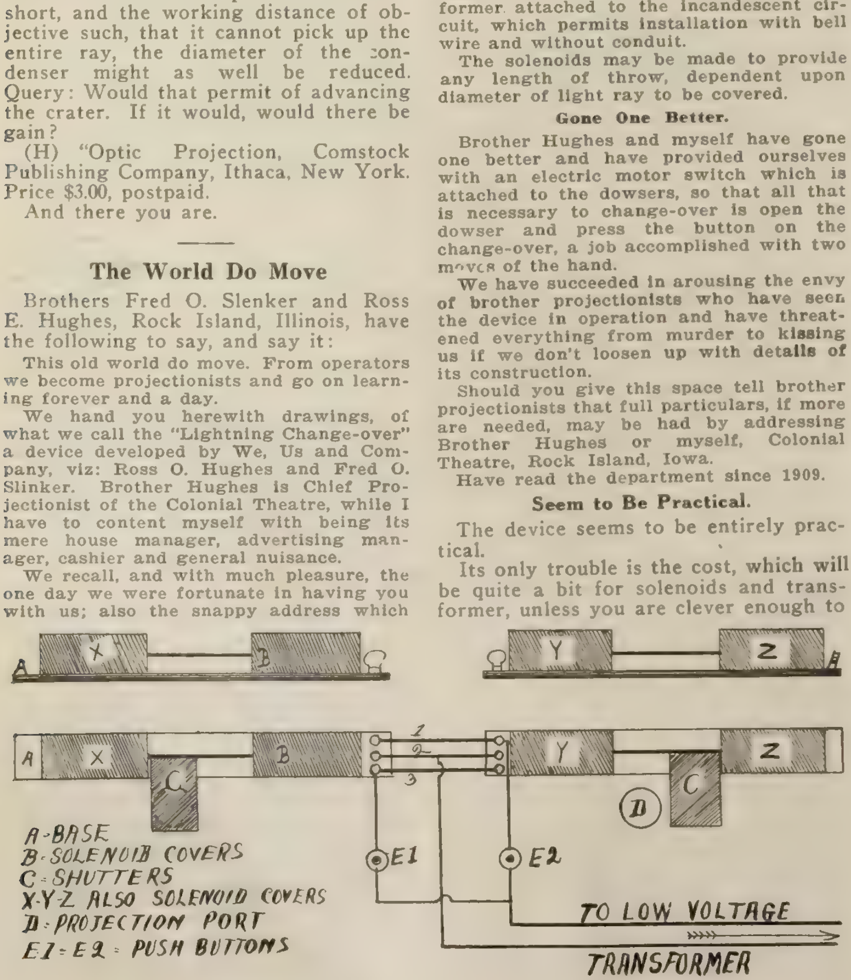
Its only trouble is the cost, which will be quite a bit for solenoids and transformer, unless you are clever enough to make your own, and few will tackle the transformer I suspect. Evidently all the wiring does not show.

As I understand it wire 2 carries one end of all solenoid coils, wire 1 carries the other end of coils X and Y and wire 3 the other ends of coils B and Z.

If this is true it will be seen that pressing button E1 would throw rod A and the shutters to the right, while pressing button E would reverse the action.

Maybe, I'm wrong, but that is the way I dope it out.

My regards to you, gentlemen, and to all my friends in Rock Island.



Trouble with Motiograph

Albert C. Dreher, Kennebec, South Dakota, says:

The latter part of December we installed a Motiograph De Luxe and are now experiencing considerable trouble in getting desired results.

Our distance of projection is approximately sixty-five feet. The picture is a twelve footer. The rheostat is a Motiograph 25-55 amperes. The objective is about 27 inches below the ceiling line. As to condenser, we have tried every combination known, and find two 6.5 plano convex lenses to do best.

The trouble is this: We are unable to get a light which is in proportion to the aperture. It is too wide, and not of sufficient height.

The manufacturers sent this machine equipped with two 7.5 condenser lenses. Even when using lenses used on an old machine the edges of cards still have deep shadow.

We use ⅝ cored above and 7-16 below. Can our trouble be with the carbons?

Data Inadequate.

Your data is inadequate; also it is pretty badly mixed, but the trouble is not, I think, due to the machine itself, but to faulty adjustment.

You have not told me at what point you use the rheostat, hence I cannot even make an intelligent guess at your amperage, and even if you did tell me it would not do much good, because a rheostat of that size is apt to vary considerably—meaning, that if it is from 28 to 55 ampere capacity, it may actually have a very different range.

This is true for two reasons, viz: possible voltage variation in your supply, and the fact that the resistance of a rheostat changes with use.

There should, by all means, be an ammeter in every projection room. The very first requirement for intelligent adjustment of an optical system is at least reasonably accurate estimate of amperage. If you are using 25 amperes the right thing would be a 5.5 and a 6.5 plano convex, with 22.25 inches from center of condenser to aperture.

If you use 55 amperes, then the requirement is a 6.5 and a 7.5, with 16.25 inches from center to aperture.

Possible Faulty Carbon Setting.

You made one remark which seems to indicate your trouble, viz: "It (light on aperture) is too wide, and not of sufficient height." This would indicate faulty carbon setting or insufficient lamp angle, or both. The spot (light at aperture) is a photograph of the crater, and the more nearly round the crater "looks" to the condenser the more nearly round the spot will be.

Summary: Try giving your lamp a greater angle and try advancing your lower carbon tip a trifle more to force the crater to front of carbon point so it will face the condenser more nearly square.

If this does the trick, as it should, well and good. If not, send further data. Meanwhile, I would recommend that you study "Setting the Carbons," pages 290 to 302, the Handbook.

Machine manufacturers have been sending out optical systems which were not based on the requirements of the conditions under which the machine was to work, or anything else except the fact that something just had to be supplied.

Two of the leading manufacturers (Powers and Simplex) have just purchased a large supply of lens charts and will send one with each machine—a big jump ahead, if you ask me.

Can Any Local Union Use This Man?

H. G. Hogwood, 430 South Laurell street, Richmond, Va., writes:

I regard you as a friend, even though we have not met. I have been in the business ten years and have always kept up with matters in the projection department, though this is my first attempt to make use of it.

I am a member of local union 370, a bit back in dues just now because I have been unable to obtain employment since last September, until quite recently when I got a "job" at the princely salary of $18 per week. I think you know how far that will go when one has a wife to take care of.

What He Wants.

What I want is just this. Is there not some local union which can place a man, who can and will prove his ability and make good, at a wage which will, at least, provide for decent living, and which will extend its brotherly spirit sufficiently to do so?

I do not know the brother personally, hence cannot vouch for his ability, but his letter "reads well" and I have a bushel of sympathy for any man who attempts to support a family on eighteen dollars a week now—in a city at least. Anyone who can use friend Hogwood can reach him at above address.

Albany, New York

Yes, you could connect a fifteen ampere, 110 volt rheostat and a fifty ampere, 110 volt rheostat in multiple (parallel) on 110 volts or in series on 220 volts, though the latter would be a rather queer thing to do.

I cannot advise you to spend money experimenting on what you suggest. It has been thoroughly tried out and tens of thousands of dollars and a great deal of time have been expended on that particular thing already, without success.

Why They Spark

J. L. Brunell, New Orleans, La., says:

I have a motor generator set which has been running very nicely until a few days ago, but now the brushes spark badly and I can't seem to do anything to stop it.

Commutator is smooth and everything seems to be in good shape.

There are a great many things which may make brushes spark. Here are some of the possible causes:

Overload. Dirty commutator or a semi-insulating glaze of dirt and oil on ends of brushes. Brush sticks in holder. Copper dragged across, insulation between bars. Brush tension too weak. Brushes do not fit curve of commutator. High commutator bar or high insulation. Commutator bars worn down too thin. Rough or eccentric commutator. Brushes have too high resistance. Short circuited armature coil. Loose armature coil. Armature coil burned out. Reversed armature coil. Weak field. Too much vibration in machine due to poor foundation. General instruction No. 8 on page 372 of Handbook gives remedies to apply for these and other causes.

Condenser Combination

Frank L. McKiel, Chief Projectionist, Tyler, Texas, member local union 222, ordered a handbook and lens chart and says:

Am using a 220 volt M A rectifier at approximately thirty amperes. Have no ammeter or voltmeter, but my judgment is that the drop across the arc is between 48 and 53 volts.

Have been using 6.5 and 7.5 condenser combination but in order to have a clear slide I was obliged to change to two 7.5s as I was unable to get crater close enough to lens to get a clear field with the other combination.

At Expense of Efficiency.

You can use two 7.5 lenses all right, but only at the expense of some efficiency because it locates your crater further from the lens.

The right thing to do is to put in the correct combination as per lens chart and then establish a third condenser so that it will line with the others when you shove over to the stero, thus making a 3-lens condenser combination for the condenser.

Exactly what focal length lens you would require for the front stero condenser I am unable to say, but I can see no reason why a 7.5 would not be all right if set close to the other lens, curved side toward it, of course.

Maybe, however, a lens of longer local length would be better. Let us have the dope on such a combination from Griffiths, if he will be so kind.

Lens Charts Cannot Be Improved

John Griffith says:

I do not think that the lens charts can be improved upon. The more I dig into the projector optical system the more things I find which confirm my former findings.

That, friend John, is good as far as it goes, BUT what we do need is a concrete statement as to why it would be impractical to extend the charts to cover amperages above sixty.

John has already told us, but has not yet put the reasons into shape for publication.

Unionville, Missouri

Yes, a wire coil rheostat will set up some choking effect when used on A C, but the A C arc voltage is lower, so the one thing probably would pretty nearly balance the other and make amperage delivery of the rheostat the same on A C or D C.

New York State Exhibitors' League to Convene on March 9 in Utica

THE coming state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, which will be held at the Utica Hotel in Utica on March 9 and 10, bids fair to develop into an event of prime importance.

The record for successful state conventions is held by last year's state gathering which foreshadowed the coming of liberal Sunday legislation. It is almost a certainty that the 1920 convention will foreshadow legislation affecting the industry more vitally even than the law of last year. When the joint session of the legislative and executive committees recently held at Albany adjourned, every member had pledged himself to bring the greatest possible attendance of exhibitors to the Utica convention.

Linton Plans Entertainment.

A most enthusiastic worker for a record convention at Utica is the treasurer of the organization, William H. Linton, one of whose theatres is situated in Utica. Mr. Linton has gone ahead with elaborate preparations for the reception and entertainment of delegates and exhibitors generally. The people of Utica at the recent referendum on the question of Sunday opening voted a decided majority in favor of having the motion picture houses open.

The Utica press unanimously supported the liberal side of the question. As a result, the entire population of Utica is looking forward to the convention, fully resolved to give the attending exhibitors the freedom of the city.

Preparations are under way for securing the attendance of prominent stars to shine at a "Movie Ball" where they will be introduced by prominent exhibitors. The ball will be held in the State Armory and promises to be a social event of the first magnitude. It is expected that officials representing the national, the state and the city government will be in attendance at the opening of the convention. The address of welcome on behalf of the city will be made by its mayor.

To Invite Prominent Men.

It is proposed to extend invitations to men of national prominence who have heretofore proven themselves to be champions of the motion picture screen and its rights and privileges. It is proposed to have a formal dinner on the first evening of the convention and the "Movie Ball" on the second. This program, however, is still subject to change.

Personal invitations are being sent to every motion picture exhibitor in the state both by the executive committee of the league and by Mr. Linton and the Utica Exhibitors Association. Mr. Linton has sent out a letter to every motion picture exhibitor in the state with a blank postcard for a return answer. He is personally in charge of the work of making reservations for all who signify their intention of attending.

Signs for Entire Circuit Output.

George Hall and George Haney, managers of the Maxine Theatre at Buffalo, N. Y., have signed a contract with P. H. Smith, manager of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit Exchange at Buffalo, calling for the entire output of First National attractions for the ensuing year to be played at the new Piccadilly Theatre, being erected.

Messrs. Hall and Haney plan to make First National attractions one of the exclusive features of their new theatre, which is to be ready early this spring.

Consignment of Power's Lost.

Nicholas Power Company is advised that the S. S. Marne, which sailed from the Port of New York about January 13, carrying a consignment of Power's motion picture machines, was scuttled by fire and sunk off the coast of Cristobal, Panama.

Lost a Ticket Seller But He Found a Wife

IF you were the manager of a moving picture theatre and had a pretty ticket seller to grace the entrance of your theatre, and business was good and things were moving along in a grand way, wouldn't it break up your little old house of cards if some competitor came along and stole your ticket seller and put her brown eyes and curly hair in his own box office?

That's what happened to George Christmann, manager of the Gayoso Theatre at Kansas City, recently. But George found a way to foil the efforts of his rival, when he reported one morning to find that Miss Dorothy Way, his ticket seller, had felt the lure of "more money" and had gone to another theatre.

It was a month ago that the Gayoso lost the services of Miss Way, but Christmann didn't halt in the counter attack. He laid his plans to get her back and success crowned his efforts a few days ago when he took Miss Way to the court house in Kansas City and there secured a marriage license. The loser in this little battle on Twelfth street was Archie Josephson, owner of the Victory Theatre.

Mayer Succeeds Rice as Universal's Publicity Head

J. H. MAYER, who has been acting as eastern district publicity manager for Universal has been appointed director of publicity succeeding Harry Rice, who returns to Chicago as district publicity manager for the middle west. Mr. Mayer has been with the New York publicity department of Universal since last summer, coming here from Cincinnati where he was in charge of publicity for the local exchange.

It will be remembered that Mr. Rice was seriously injured in an automobile accident early in August and at that time Tarkington Baker, general manager for Universal, had supervision over the publicity department. Mr. Baker picked Mr. Mayer to carry on Mr. Rice's work during his absence, selecting him from a list of twenty-six exchange publicity managers. Upon Mr. Rice's return to his desk in October, Mr. Mayer asked to be returned to the Cincinnati exchange, but upon the insistent requests of both Mr. Baker and Mr. Rice, that he remain in New York, he brought his family on.

This High-Class Theatre, Though Small, Makes Money

IS it a paying proposition to use a high-class five-piece orchestra in a house seating 462 in a village of 2,800, with high-class pictures?

The Cathedral, in Waterford, N. Y., is doing it and bringing in a handsome return to Fred Kavanaugh, owner of the house, the only one in town. And what is more, Mr. Kavanaugh is charging from 11 to 25 cents for his productions and packing the house with every performance. He is a firm believer in showmanship and is backing his belief by attracting a patronage from North Troy, Cohoes and Mechanicsville, seven or eight miles away.

Mr. Kavanaugh decided to try an experiment after taking over the house. After giving the house a thorough cleansing, his first move was to install a five-piece orchestra. Proprietors of other houses, with small orchestras, predicted that the new owner would "go broke." Instead, the house has been packed at every performance, and, as a result, the owner is not only giving his patrons a splendid musical program, but has been able to put on first-run releases and stage others in a most attractive way.

As an example of Mr. Kavanaugh's activities, when "The Lost Battalion" was shown he secured an automobile truck and gave a noonday parade, with a band, in Cohoes and Troy, advertising a matinee at reasonable prices to attract the women and children, as well as those men who were employed on night shifts in the factories. He also erected a twenty-four-foot stage and gave a band concert. The house could have accommodated double the seating capacity.

Mr. Kavanaugh has owned the house for a year. His bank account is the best testimony of his success.

Give Circuit Picture Week Runs.

Heavy box-office receipts and the sale of standing room for First National attractions has led the Strand Theatre at Louisville, Ky., to adopt the one-week stand policy, with reference to the Circuit's releases. Six First National attractions will be seen at the Strand during six consecutive weeks.

"Heart O' the Hills" starring Mary Pickford will follow a one week engagement of Anita Stewart's "Mind the Paint Girl." Then will follow Charles Chaplin's "A Day's Pleasure," D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Question," and Norma Talmadge's "A Daughter of Two Worlds."

Finis Fox Recovering from Accident.

After escaping death when his roadster was demolished by an electric train in a heavy fog near Culver City, Cal., Finis Fox, Metro scenario writer, is remaining at his home for a few days by his physician's order. Mr. Fox suffered minor injuries and was severely shaken up.

Police Active in Ottawa.

For a long time the exhibitors of Ottawa, Ontario, aroused little if any official attention on the part of the local police department, but several times recently local theatre managers have been penalized in the police court for permitting people to sand in the rear of the orchestra seats, because this is said to be an infraction of the law. Recently, practically all theatres have been visited frequently by policemen and the exhibitors are having extreme difficulty in preventing the collection of standing crowds.

The argument that tickets are not sold for more people than can be accommodated in the seats and that some patrons refuse to take the seats available, does not save the theatre managers, and the usual fine is $20 and costs.

Many Angles of Appeal in American's "Honey Bee"

"THE HONEY BEE" has many angles of interest through which to make its bid for popularity. The American Film Company believes it has been particularly fortunate in its choice of story and cast. An actress of world wide fame with an excellent support, a story by a noted author, requiring deep thought yet sparkling with quick brilliancy and humor—this is offered in six acts in the latest "Flying A" Special. There is scarcely a phase of the human equation which is not touched upon in one production.

Madame Marguerita Sylvia in the role of Hilda Wilson portrays the successful business woman who at heart is the natural, primative female impelled by the hunger for love and motherhood. This role the diva handles with an understanding and finesse. Thomas Holding is the serious, scholarly man of affairs in the play, Harris Doreyn, whom the heroine loves against her will, while empty marriage rites bind him to a frivolous, young beauty.

Nigel Barrie takes the role of the profesional pugilist, Blink Moran, strong and manly. Albert Ray and George Hernandez, the empty headed, insolent, young dancer and the alert and kindly representative of a New York mercantile house, respectively, intersperse the otherwise emotional and intellectual theme with some funny predicaments.

Kid McCoy, the celebrated middleweight, and Nigel Barrie put over four rounds before a large crowd of spectators, many of them in evening dress according to the French custom. The production was directed by Rupert Julian.

Strong Cast for Lloyd Hughes.

No detail of production is being spared to insure the magnitude and box-office qualities of "Wheelbarrow Webster," the first production in which Thomas H. Ince will present his new star, Lloyd Hughes.

Under the direction of John Wray, the picture entered production last week on location on a farm near Sawtelle, Cal., where the first scenes depicting Mr. Hughes as a rugged son of the golden west take place.

The supporting cast includes Gladys George, Jack Nelson, Fred Gamble, Charles Mills, Lydia Knott, Edith York, Gordon Sackville, Willis Marks and James Gordon.

Here Are Some New and Big Stars—Messrs. Ibanez, Loew and Rowland

IF the next novel of Vicente Blasco Ibanez—it will be about the United States—should touch at all on the American industry of motion pictures, it will not be surprising if he gives us the viewpoint of the motion picture actor.

The brilliant Spanish novelist recently acted in a number of scenes at the Metro studios in Hollywood, together with Marcus Loew, Richard A. Rowland, June Mathis, Viola Dana and Maxwell Karger. For all, except Miss Dana, a Screen Classics, Inc., star, it was probably a first appearance before the camera.

Mr. Karger, Screen Classic director general, directed the author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," as well as acted with him. He told the cameraman where to set up. He bustled about the setting—one used by May Allison in "The Cheater"—and moved lights and furniture. Then the rehearsal began.

"Tell Senor Ibanez that he is to sit a moment, thinking," Mr. Karger told the interpreter, "then he looks up and smiles as Mr. Rowland comes to greet him."

They're Off.

While the interpreter relayed these directions, Mr. Karger turned to the others.

"Dick, you heard what I said. Marcus, you come on from the other side; then I'll come on; then June, then Vi. All right! Are you ready!" he shouted to the cameraman.

The Bell and Howell commenced to whir. Senor Blasco Ibanez, unaware of this, yawned unconsciously and the "gallery" of electricians and other stage workers snickered. Immediately he assumed his pose of thoughtfulness. Then he glanced up and his face lighted. He arose and greeted Rowland, the Metro president.

"Come on, Marcus!" shouted the director, and Mr. Loew entered from the other side.

"Don't stand there and do nothing, Marcus!" shouted Mr. Karger as he strode into the picture, apparently uttering words of welcome to the distinguished visitor. "Look interested! Look as though you'd bought another theatre!" Smiling, Mr. Karger then grasped the hand of Ibanez and shook it warmly, at the same time shouting to Miss Mathis, who was behind him.

Viola Dana Surprises Author.

"June! Come on! Make it snappy, now! Come on, Vi!"

June Mathis and Viola Dana joined the group.

Mr. Rowland whispered in Miss Dana's ear.

"Sure, I will," she laughed, and greeted the visitor with, "Como esta usted, Senor?"

Before the delighted Spaniard could respond, Mr. Rowland broke in with a fusillade of facetious remarks, and fumbling in his pocket, with a noble gesture presented the key to the studio.

"All right, cut!" shouted Mr. Karger. "Let's do it again—for the European negative—and for heaven's sake, Dick, try to be serious!"

Blasco Ibanez, who speaks not a word of English, composedly acted his part through all this bedlam, pretending to chat volubly with the others. The glaring lights may have tortured his unaccustomed eyes, he may have wondered why the American director shouted so in greeting, but he did not say what he thought of it.

The film made at the Hollywood studio will be used as a pre-release trailer when "The Four Horsemen" is distributed. Neither Senor Blasco Ibanez nor Mr. Loew had "acted" before. They tucked handkerchiefs in their collars while Miss Mathis applied powder liberally to their faces. This was to eliminate the "black" effect that the powerful studio lights give to human skin. Viola Dana assisted Messrs. Rowland and Karger in the makeup.

Things You Seldom See—No. 1: Doug Fairbanks in a Serious Mood.

You recognize him without the smile, just as we did, but it's strange that Doug had these taken just after his great United Artists' "Cheer-Up" production, "When the Clouds Roll By."

Mary Pickford Laughed and Cried, Seeing Herself as Happy Pollyanna

HENRY L. DOUGHERTY, special writer and motion picture critic of the Los Angeles Evening Express, had the most unusual experience of his life, he says, on the occasion of the opening of "Pollyanna," at the Clune Auditorium, Los Angeles. The experience was that of seeing "America's Sweetheart" laugh and cry with the rest of the audience, during the time she herself was witnessing the performance.

Here's what Doughtery himself has to say in his criticism of her production:

"Perhaps the greatest tribute that can be paid to Miss Pickford's human interpretation in this play is the fact that the little star laughed and cried with other members of the audience at Clune's Auditorium yesterday afternoon. She attended the first showing of the picture together with her mother and a few friends, and the writer of these lines, being only a few seat away, was afforded a rare opportunity of studying the star, both on and off the screen. Evidently Miss Pickford forgot that she was also out there in the picture for she sympathized and laughed and cried with Pollyanna just as others did all about her."

"The Pathos Reaches One's Heart."

In his criticism of the production Mr. Dougherty said: "Mary Pickford's first film play of the "Big Four" program is the crowning achievement of her screen career. And that is saying all that can be said for a motion picture. The little star has made us laugh and cry and smile in the days gone by, but never before has she aroused so much sympathy for a character as she does for 'Pollyanna,' the glad girl, the orphan, the child who can always see sunshine ahead, although the rain is pouring in torrents. And that, to my mind, is the secret of her phenomenal success in 'Pollyanna.'

"It is one of these rare gems where tears, like precious diamonds, are set in a golden background of smiles. The pathos of the story reaches down into one's heart, and the characters, as they pass before us, seem like real people we have met."

Two Big Hampton Productions Playing First Run Engagements in Los Angeles

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S Emerson Hough story, "The Sagebrusher," is the attraction at Lesser & Gore's Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, during the present week and Mr. Hampton's production of Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" is playing its second continuous week at the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles. The Zane Grey picture, incidentally, broke every existing record for patronage at the Alhambra and H. H. Bosley, manager of the Alhambra, has kept a third week clear for his run of this picture.

Bookings of both productions were made by F. A. Wagner, Los Angeles manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and immediately following its first run in Los Angeles "Desert Gold" goes to the Johnson Theatre, Pasadena, for a widely exploited full week's first run.

"The Sagebrusher" was the first big production booked by Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers upon their acquisition of the Kinema Theatre from T. L. Tally, former owner of the house and the First National Franchise for Southern California and Arizona. The picture was opened after a heavy bill board and newspaper exploitation campaign and one result was that the house coming under new ownership started off with a convincing winner that received the unanimous approval of the Los Angeles dailies.

Among the important first runs that have signed for "The Sagebrusher" during the past few days are Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C.; Jake Wells' Granby, Norfolk, Va.; the Majestic, Jackson, Mich.; the Liberty, Sacramento, Cal.; the Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; the Auditorium, South Bend, Ind.; Poli's Theatres at Scranton and Wilkesbarre, Pa., and the William Penn, Chester, Pa.

Mrs. Thorp Doesn't Hesitate About Dates; Showed Films Back in 1904

THE fact that women can make a success of the business of showing pictures to the public has been demonstrated in several instances in this country, and is once more brought to light in the career of Mrs. A. E. Thorp, who started in with a small house in Bucyrus, O., in 1904, and is today president of the Bluebird Theatre Company of Richmond, Va., controlling the Bluebird theatres in Richmond and Petersburg.

Women are usually reticent about dates, but Mrs. Thorp had no hesitation in telling a representative of Moving Picture World that it was sixteen years ago she first screened pictures for her patrons.

Ten Dollars Outside Price.

From Bucyrus she went to Newport News, and in 1907 she took up the exhibiting art in Richmond. Her theatre was called the Dixie, and its only competitor for some time was the Theato.

"I certainly reaped a harvest in those days," said Mrs. Thorp. "There was really no competition. I gave my patrons one-reelers. A two-reeler then was a 'special program.' I used a phonograph to attract the attention of the passers-by, and it worked finely.

"Ten dollars was the outside price on productions in 1907. You couldn't pay the reel tax with that today. The Kay-Bee pictures were the big features then, and most of them were better than our present Western films."

Asked what her advice to other members of the fair sex would be in regard to conducting a picture theatre successfully, Mrs. Thorp said: "I would tell them this: Study your territory and your patrons. The rest will come."

William Davidson with Selznick.

William Davidson, well-known leading man and character actor, has been selected to play the character "Macy," in the new Selznick production, "Prince of Pines," according to D. L'Estrange, casting director at the Selznick Fort Lee studio. This production is to be directed by Ralph Ince, who is now in New Hampshire taking exterior scenes for the production.

Singer Midgets Frolic in Fox Sunshine Comedy

THE advent of the Singer Midgets as a sensational feature of a yet unnamed Sunshine special just completed at the West Coast studios of Fox Film Corporation is a landmark in comedy production. The midgets are among the most remarkable aggregation of small people that ever stepped before an audience.

The special comedy is the most expensive ever screened, according to the producer. Five months were spent in staging it. Every member of the Fox Sunshine Comedy forces, including the Sunshine widows, was recruited for this laugh-raiser. In addition, the company was enlarged by additions such as the famous Singer Midgets.

The rapid-fire comedy of the troupe of little folk runs through the whole production. What they lack in size they make up in side-splitting fun. They are loved all over the world as a refreshing entertainment novelty. Europe has laughed uproariously at their dignified antics.

Made Vaudeville Reputation.

They came to America to fill a season's engagement at the New York Hippodrome. Their popularity there led to an extended engagement at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre, where they again proved their phenomenal drawing power.

The entire troupe was engaged for the Fox Sunshine Special, nineteen in all. With them Mr. Fox also engaged the group of animals that goes with the Midget show, and the equipment carried by the Singer company on its vaudeville circuits.

Lists Many Repeat Bookings.

Repeated calls for return engagements of First National attractions has led Lee L. Goldberg of the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee to install what is known as the "repeat page" in his daily booking schedule. The system enables Mr. Goldberg to keep records of attractions that have been re-booked two, three and four times in one city, and gives him a line on just which of his attractions are breaking "repeat" records.

700-Seat Theatre for Ellenville.

At Ellenville, Ulster County, New York, the Shurter Theatre Company, Inc., composed of local business men, is erecting a new theatre to be devoted to motion pictures, musical and other attractions. The theatre will seat 700. Construction is fireproof and modern in every respect. It is expected that the new house will open about May 15.

Two Scenarists Prepare "The Memento" Script

BY the addition of Rod La Rocque, formerly leading man for Marguerite Clark, Constance Binney, Madge Kennedy and other stars, Vitagraph has completed the cast for "The Memento," Corrine Griffith's next feature. He will be seen as Arthur Lyle, a minister, one of the most important characters in this novel story by O. Henry. The leading role of Brad. Mortimer will be taken by Earl Metcalfe, and Sallie Crute will be seen as Lynette. Miss Griffith, of course, will be Rosalie Ray, the vaudeville performer, who deserts the stage for a small village only to find that men are the same the world over.

Miss Griffith and her supporting company are now at Saugerties, N. Y., where the rural scenes are being taken. The interiors will be made mostly in and around one of New York's largest theatres and at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. An unusual feature of the picture is that the scenario was written by two men. Lucien Hubbard arranged the action for the city and theatre scenes, while the small town episodes are the work of William B. Courtney. Edward Griffith is directing the picture.

James O'Neill Injured by Northwest Sled Dogs

JAMES O'NEILL, who is playing Mukoki, the faithful Indian guide in "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," James Oliver Curwood's famous novel of recent publication, which Vitagraph is producing for the screen with a special star cast, is back in Hollywood badly injured as the result of an encounter with a pack of sled dogs.

The accident happened in the vicinity of Truckee, where Director David Smith had taken the company for the snow and mountain scenes. Mr. O'Neill was severely bitten, but it is not thought dangerously so. The remoteness of the location where the accident occurred and the consequent delay in obtaining immediate medical assistance, added to the danger of infection.

Sled dogs play an important part in Mr. Curwood's new story of the great Canadian Northwest. The dogs were starved for three days so that they were ravenously hungry. They were supposed to attack Mukoki. Raw meat and fish had been hidden in the actor's clothing. In their eagerness to get it, however, the dogs ripped and tore at O'Neill's clothes and he was severely bitten and lacerated. Mr. O'Neill was unconscious by the time the dogs had been driven away.

Build India Street for "The Hope."

A portion of one of the principal streets of Peshawar in the Province of Punjab, India, has been duplicated on the grounds of the Metro studios in Hollywood for "The Hope," the Drury melodrama now being produced by Screen Classics, Inc. The street is 150 feet in length. On both sides are buildings of East India architecture occupied by shops where pottery, rugs, vegetables, sweetmeats, grains and brasswares are sold. There are also a two-story hotel, numerous residences, the village well and a part of the army barracks.

Personality Portraits.

It was a terrible strain to pose before the camera for this exclusive panel, so Louise Glaum had to save her title cry to pay up. Glimpses as she worked on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," J. Parker Read's Hodkinson.

Mrs. Drew's Comedies Are Booked by Capitol

REPORTS from Pathe Exchange, Inc., indicate an unprecedented demand for clean, wholesome comedies and the better class theatres everywhere are eagerly seeking the series of Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies featuring John Cumberland to meet this popular desire. Leading exhibitors, who have seen the first picture of the series, "The Charming Mrs. Chase," say that it is certain to meet with wide popular approval, and many important bookings have been received.

Among the more important houses to book the entire series of eight pictures is the Capitol Theatre, of New York City. The management, after the private showing of the first picture, expressed the belief that it was one of the finest comedies produced in a long time and was precisely the thing to fill a real public want. The series will begin at the Capitol with "The Charming Mrs. Chase" on February 15.

Mrs. Drew wrote the scenarios for and directed all of the comedies in which she appeared with the late Sidney Drew, and in her new comedy creations she is the power behind the action. "The Charming Mrs. Chase" was written by Julian Street as a short story, but Mrs. Drew directed the screen version and personally supervised every detail of the making of the picture.

Trade View of Lewis Film Results in Heavy Bookings

WITHOUT any publicity heralding, the Des Moines office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., recently staged a special showing of Edgar Lewis's first Pathe special, "Other Men's Shoes," for the benefit of the trade and press. The only emphasis laid on the production was that it was an Edgar Lewis offering. As a consequence, critics and exhibitors were overwhelmed by the strength of the picture, and the following day the Des Moines Evening Tribune paid the following tribute to the production:

"Throbs and throbs of heart interest make 'Other Men's Shoes,' in which Crauford Kent plays a double part, one of the most fascinating stories recently filmed. He first appears as the sweet and spiritual Stephen, the young minister who is not strong and forceful enough to meet his problems. An intensely dramatic situation is introduced when the twin brother returns to visit his sister and steps into his brother's shoes.

Bookings began piling up in the Des Moines territory and a noteworthy record undoubtedly will be attained there.

"Grocery Clerk" Making Decided Hit.

"The Grocery Clerk" Larry Semon's latest Vitagraph comedy got off to a good start at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it was featured and made a big hit. Its showing in other parts of the country, following its general release, was also the occasion of general approval. Mr. Semon is now at work on another comedy in which much of the action takes place on the roofs of several of the tallest buildings in Los Angeles and incidentally requires the comedian to do the human fly act up the front of the First National Bank building.

Resting Up Between Thrillers.

Made Manager of Moore Company.

Fred Almy, Jr., has been named manager of the Owen Moore company, which is now in the midst of a production on the West Coast called "Love Among the Chickens." Owen Moore is the star of this Selznick Picture, which is his third for the organization. Harry Rapf, who is in charge of production at the Selznick West Coast studios, announces that work is going along smoothly, and that the production will be completed in ample time to hold its release schedule in accordance with Lewis J. Selznick's recent announcement that release plans permit of no delays in prints reaching branches.

Author Praises Work of Mary Miles Minter

GRACE MILLER WHITE, author of "Judy of Rogue's Harbor," Mary Miles Minter's current release for Realart Pictures Corporation, viewed a private showing of the screen adaptation of the story recently in California.

She expressed satisfaction over the production and said that Mary Miles Minter had made an ideal type of heroine. William D. Taylor directed the production.

"It was such a relief to see the picture put on so perfectly and without mutilation of the story," Miss White said. "Mr. Taylor's direction was wonderful and Miss Minter in the part of 'Judy' is the living embodiment of the sort of girl I had in mind while writing."

Hallmark Release Has Strong Cast.

In the cast which will be seen in Frank G. Hall's February release of the Famous Directors' series, "Chains of Evidence," will be seen Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell, Anna Lehr, Wallace Ray, George Cooper, Joseph Granby, Edward Elkas, James F. Cullen, Peggy Worth, George Brownlow and Glenn Kunkel. "Chains of Evidence" is a screen version of an original story by Leon Britton and is produced under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Louis B. Mayer Executives Occupy $100,000 Administration Building

THE recently completed $100,000 administration building of the Louis B. Mayer Company, 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles, are now occupied by the studio administration forces. The building is one of the most beautiful studio buildings in the industry.

The architecture is of the French medieval period and presents an imposing appearance in the stately grove of California eucalyptus. The offices are located in the thirty-five acre estate of Colonel William N. Selig and new roadways are being graded connecting the buildings with Mission Road.

A large throng of visitors took part in the opening. Among these were Lois Weber, her husband Philip Smalley, Grace Miller White and her husband and Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Hoffman. Lois Weber, who first starred Mildred Harris Chaplin, spent the entire morning at the studio with her former protege.

Dr. and Mrs. Hoffman made a special trip to the studio for the purpose of seeing Mrs. Chaplin on a set. Dr. Hoffman is a nephew of the president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and is an enthusiastic movie fan, though not financially interested in pictures. The meeting of Mildred Harris Chaplin and Grace Miller White was interesting as Mrs. White wrote "Polly of the Storm Country" especially as a starring vehicle for the little blonde star.

Two Floors of Dressing Rooms.

Two floors of the new administration building are devoted exclusively to dressing rooms. These are well ventilated and equipped with hot and cold running water. The top floors of the building are devoted to the housing of excutive and technical offices, as well as rooms for directors and cameramen.

In the rear of the building the brick cutting rooms and laboratories to be presided over by Billy Shea, chief cutter, are nearing completion. Individual dressing bungalows for Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin are now being furnished according to the individual taste of the stars. Three enormous dark stages have been completed and the fourth will be started soon.

Three pictures, "The Inferior Sex," "Polly of the Storm Country" and "The Fighting Shepherdess" have already been completed and two new First Nation releases are in the making.

The officials of the new studio are: Louis B. Mayer, president; Milton Schwartz, assistant; Bennie Zeidman, vice president and general manager of the Chaplin-Mayer unit; Rudolph Cameron, manager of the Anita Stewart unit; Millard Webb, studio manager; Earl Sibley, art director; Jack Neville, publicity director, and Charles R. Condon, publicity man for the Stewart unit.

Circuits New York Branch Moves Into Larger Quarters

THE First National Exchange of New York is to occupy larger quarters on and after February 12. The new offices will be on the eleventh floor of 729 Seventh avenue.

"For the convenience of the trade," said Joseph Klein, manager of the New York branch, "and the fact that we have been doing tremendous business has necessitated our moving into larger quarters. In the new offices there will be ample room for individual offices for the sales force, private offices for the executives, and a large reception room. These rooms will increase the efficiency of the sales force, and the handling of film and posters will also be given private offices, all of which can be favorably compared with the finest in New York City. We will occupy about 8,000 square feet of floor space."

The sales force headed by General manager R. H. Clark, and Mr. Klein as manager of the New York City exchange, consists of Aaron A. Corn, Harold J. Carlock, George Carter, A. J. Herman, Ben Levine, J. Mendelson and S. Rubenstein.

M. M. Katterjohn Adapted Harold MacGrath Story

ACCORDING to advices from the Louis B. Mayer studios, Monte M. Katterjohn has written the screen version of Harold MacGrath's "The Yellow Typhoon," which is now in course of production with Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., will be released as a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction.

In securing Mr. Katterjohn to prepare the screen version of "The Yellow Typhoon," initially presented as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Mayer followed out his policy of guaranteeing good production by having the elements that figure in it of certified excellence.

Monte Katterjohn is universally recognized as a scenario expert. This reputation comes to him from such screen masterpieces as "The Flame of the Yukon," with Dorothy Dalton; "The Clodhopper," with Charles Ray; "Puppy Love," with Lila Lee; "The Source," with Wallace Reid; "The Patriot," with William S. Hart; "Madam Who," with Bessie Barriscale, and other successful productions.

Duncan Working on Mountain Exteriors

Railroad scenes in the beautiful mountain country of California have been occupying the attention of William Duncan for his new $1,000,000 Vitagraph super serial, "The Silent Avenger," recently. Mr. Duncan is planning to make this the greatest serial of his career in this type of motion picture entertainment. He expects to multiply the many thrills of his successful, "Smashing Barriers," serial recently completed.

Mr. Duncan is again directing his own picture. Edith Johnson is again his leading woman and Jack Richardson and Virginia Nightingale play the respective heavies.

"Below the Surface" Completed.

The Thomas H. Ince special production, "Below the Surface," featuring Hobart Bosworth, has been completed and is now in the hands of the editor.

Clara Kimball Young to Romance at Capitol in "Forbidden Woman"

THE impetus given the new Equity Pictures Corporation by reason of its policy of "few but great" productions, which was heightened by the advent of Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth," was further strengthened when Director General Edward J. Bowes of the Capitol Theatre, New York, booked the second Clara Kimball Young film, "The Forbidden Woman," for first run at the Capitol.

"The Forbidden Woman" marks the second step of the Equity Picture Corporation to identify itself with nothing but big sensational, yet dignified film plays. The play was screened from the original story of the same name by Lenore J. Coffee and was produced under the personal supervision of Harry Garson, with Arthur Edeson and John W. Voshell at the camera and on the technical side.

In the cast are Conway Tearle, Milla Davenport, Kathryn Adams and other noted screen figures, and the story, while of an entirely different type from "Eyes of Youth," is along more romantic lines and is of the style of picture in which Miss Young made her greatest hits. The story opens at Paris with Miss Young in the role of Diane Sorel, a successful actress, who is besought by many suitors.

Has Good Exploitation.

The story unfolds in a majestic manner and is said to constitute Miss Young's smoothest running, best staged and most elaborate romantic production. Miss Young is seen in no less than fourteen different apparels while the remainder of the cast are dressed in commensurate manner. Many unusual publicity and exploitation aids are to be tried out during the run at the Capitol.

For four weeks Equity has been carrying on a blind campaign in the New York daily papers, stating that the color of the sky on February 21 would denote at which house a certain film would be shown. This campaign was scheduled to terminate night of February 14, with blazes of green color thrown on the heavens by means of ten huge army search lights placed at ten different spots throughout New York.

A series of "talking ads" in the newspapers will be conducted before the opening and a number of direct house-to-house ideas will be launched to aid the Capitol keep its 5,000 seats filled each day.

On the same date, throughout the country, forty-one prints will be working at forty-one first-run houses, and even the business done by "Eyes of Youth" is expected to be exceeded.

Legion Members See First Showing of Official Films

THE first public showing of the official record films of the activities of the United States Marine Corps in France and Germany was recently given before the S. Rankin Drew Post, of the American Legion, at its general meeting and monthly dinner at Keen's, New York. As a section of the war records of the Navy Department, of which the Marines are a part, these films were ordered made by a detail in command of Lieutenant Commander Wells Hawks, U. S. Navy.

He was assisted by Lieutenant C. E. Ruttan, officer in charge of aerial photography in France. The photography was done by Chief Yeoman Harold Wenstrom, who before going in the service was a Metro cameraman, while the stills were made by Chief Printer J. J. McCutcheon.

Film Follows Track of Marines.

There are seven reels showing all of the battlefields from Belleau Woods to the crossing of the Meuse on the morning of Armistice Day, the route of the march to Germany, the Rhine River patrol and the Marines in occupation as a part of the Second Division. Four sham battles in the hills along the Rhine and in the Weid Valley are shown as an illustration of what warfare would have been there. The party travelled over 8,000 miles in a truck carrying out the order.

Marine Corps Recruiting Films Edited by Fox

AN acknowledgment of the services of Fox Film Corporation in editing the pictures is carried on every one of the films to be exhibited broadcast in conjunction with the big national recruiting drive of the United States Marine Corps.

The picture is called "The Fighting Marines at Work and at Play" and the contents bear out the title fully. It shows the training of the men, and several sham battles are staged where the training is put to effective use. There are numerous scenes of life and work and recreation at points in the American possessions where marines are garrisoned.

The film will be a chief feature in the drive. Three companies of enlisted men, each known as the "Roving Marines," have been sent on tour and will visit every city and town in the United States. A jazz band and a minstrel show by service men will constitute the entertainment. In addition, each of the touring groups will carry a motion picture outfit and a print of the picture.

The picture was put together and edited by a Fox scenario man who was formerly a lieutenant in the army, Ed. Sedgwick. Each film carries on its title the line "Edited by Fox Film Corporation."

Give Dinner to J. D. Williams.

J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit was recently tendered a dinner at the Seelbach Hotel in Louisville, Ky. Representatives of 200 motion picture theatres attended the dinner.

Among the party was Nathan Gordon, of the Gordon Amusement Company, Boston; William Siever, of St. Louis; E. M. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland; Judge Wilkerson and Frank E. Dowler, of the Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga; Col. Fred Levy, president and Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange for Kentucky and Tennessee.

Matt Moore Supports Enid Bennett.

Enid Bennett's latest Thomas H. Ince starring vehicle, "Hairpins"—which entertaining script is hot off the C. Gardner Sullivan typewriter—promises to be one of the most popular of the always delightful Bennett pictures.

Mr. Sullivan's story is a clever one, in which continually-slipping hairpins and the resultant untidy coiffure figure largely in a domestic near-tragedy.

Miss Bennett, under the direction of her husband, Fred Niblo, is supported by Matt Moore, Grace Morse and Margaret Livingston.

Burton George Goes to New Hampshire for Scenes

BURTON GEORGE, who was selected by Myron Selznick to direct the special production "Prince of Pines" has gone to New Hampshire to make several exterior scenes which are necessary in the drama. "Prince of Pines" was written by Willard Mack and recently purchased by Myron Selznick.

The interiors are to be made at the Fort Lee studio, work on them being scheduled to begin within the next ten days. The cast, which has six important roles, has not been announced but it is known that it will be an all-star one. Mr. George is to have charge of the selection of players.

Mr. George was selected to direct this production because of his wide experience in handling big productions. He has been associated with many of the larger companies, such as World, Universal, Fox, Lubin, American, and Edison and has directed some of the screen's greatest stars. R. Cecil Smith adapted and wrote the continuity.

News Notes from National.

Ashley Cooper, from Australia, is doing comic characters with the National Film Corporation. Jack Sherwood, a former Canadian soldier, is National's new title artist. Bernie Burton has been placed in charge of all comedy continuity and cutting at the National studios.

Palace Books Harold Lloyd Comedies.

Many Pathe features and short subjects have been booked by the new Palace Theatre in Cincinnati, which was recently opened by I. Libson. This theatre has a seating capacity of 2,000, and is one of the most palatial motion picture houses in Ohio. "My Husband's Other Wife," J. Stuart Blackton's feature starring Robert Gordon and Sylvia Breamer, is the latest Pathe feature booked by the Palace. The first six of Harold Lloyd's new series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, beginning with "Bumping Into Broadway," have also been carded by the Libson house.

Myron Selznick Buys Several More Stories

MYRON SELZNICK continues to seek and purchase new stories that he considers worthy of using for vehicles of the Selznick stars. Following a recent announcement, which contained the titles of a large number of stories he had purchased, comes the announcement that he has purchased a comedy in the form of an original unpublished story written by A. Guisti. "Charlie's Ward" is its title.

Contrary to the usual announcement, this one does not state that the writer is well known. Mr. Guisti is a San Francisco writer who has recently entered the screen story field. Mr. Selznick states that "Charlie's Ward" should make one of the best comedies of the year. The story tells of the adventures of a wealthy young man who suddenly finds himself appointed as guardian to a mad-cap girl, 19 years of age.

"Hearts Aflame" is another original story which has been purchased by Myron Selznick This story was written by Robert Alexander Wason, who has contributed a number of stories to various popular fiction magazines.

Lewis Allen Browne, of the Selznick scenario staff, and the author of the initial Americanization picture, "The Land of Opportunity," has sold a story to Barry McCormack for stage production. It is called "The 100 Per Cent. Girl" and will go into rehearsal early in February.

News of Ray's Affiliation with Kane Evokes Many Praising Letters

CHARLES RAY, announced last week as the first big star of the newly formed Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is drawing to the young producing company many telegrams of congratulation on its initial acquisition.

Harold B. Franklin, the progressive theatre man from Buffalo, N. Y., whose picture presentation at the big Hippodrome is regarded as among the best in exhibiting, has varied his usual practice of reticence in the praise of stars and producing organizations by coming out strongly for Charles Ray. In a telegram to President Kane, Mr. Franklin foresees great financial success coming out of the acquisition of Ray.

"I congratulate you on your latest acquisition," wired the Buffalo showman, "and I have no doubt that it will result in great artistic and financial success to your company."

In Lowell, Mass., Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Strand Theatre and one of the best posted exhibitors in the country, came out strongly for Ray In a letter to Arthur S. Kane, concerning Ray's affiliation with the new company, Mr. Soriero wrote: "I congratulate you. He is a wonderful bet. In fact, not knowing that you were interested in him, I have been negotiating for his pictures, just for Lowell. I am all the more keen for him now that you are connected with them."

Ray a Popular Favorite.

Another exhibitor noted for his progressive methods of picture presentation and his success as a showman of high grade pictures who has found the tie-up of Arthur Kane and Charles Ray a portent of big possibilities, is W. S McLaren, manager of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Mich.

"Allow us first of all to extend our sincere congratulations to you upon the formation of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation," wrote Mr. McLaren to President Kane of the young producing company. "It has indeed been a pleasure to the writer to have done business with you in the past, and I trust that these pleasant business relations may continue into the future Charles Ray has always been one of our favorites."

Among many other exhibitors who foresee big possibilities in this tie-up are Max Marcus, of the United States Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio; F. T. Bailey of the American Theatre, Butte, Montana; J. C. Clemmons, manager of the Jefferson Amusement Company, Beaumont, Texas, and N. M. McCullough, of the Riviera Theatre, Anderson Indiana

"Daredevil Jack" Bookings Expected to Break Record

THE serial sales department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is authority for the statement that reports from the various branches indicate that "Daredevil Jack," with Jack Dempsey, which will be released February 15, will smash the company's booking records for serials.

The reported general character of the bookings, it being claimed that interest in "Daredevil Jack" is not confined to large cities or small towns, neighborhood houses or those catering to a transient patronage, but are evenly distributed over all territories, is pointed to by Pathe as a realization of the claim made when Dempsey was first signed by the concern that he was unquestionably a most potent box-office attraction.

The cast supporting Dempsey is headed by Josie Sedgwick. Ruth Langston has the other important feminine role. Aggie Herring, a character actress, is entrusted with the character part. Herschall Mayall in a heavy role, Frank Lanning, Albert Cody and Frederic Starr are other members of this cast.

"Daredevil Jack" was directed by W. S Van Dyke. The scenario is the work of Jack Cunningham from an original story by Frederic Chapin and Harry O. Hoyt.

Prepare Blue Prints for Pittsburgh Film Building

PITTSBURGH is to have another film building in the Forbes street section. The new structure will go up on the site originally intended for the World Building, adjoining the Paramount Building, which fell through for some reason or other. It is said the contractor sunk a small fortune in the excavating and foundation of the proposed building and that as the old World Film Corporation had financial reverses the work was never completed.

Inasmuch as most of the exchanges will be obliged to move from the Ferry street section, owing to the widening of the street, other quarters had to be secured. James B. Clark, of the Rowland & Clark Theatres, has taken the matter in hand and arrangements have been made to complete the building. Work will be commenced at once and present indications are that it will be ready for occupancy about July 1.

The new building will be one of the best in the country. Architects connected with the Paramount Corporation and the Eastman Kodak Company are working in conjunction with the Board of Fire Underwriters in preparing plans.

No reservations have been made as yet. The blue prints are being prepared now and until they are completed nothing will be done in the matter of allotting space.

First Cunard Two Reeler Titled.

Grace Cunard's first two-reel feature, now in production at the National Film Corporation of America studios, for Marion H. Kohn, 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, will be "The Gasoline Buckaroo." This will be a sensational comedy-drama, full of thrilling incidents, according to studio advices. Miss Cunard will be supported in all her pictures by Cole Herbert. She will direct her own pictures.

Fairbanks Starts Work on His Next "Big Four" Picture; No Title Given

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has resumed his activities before the camera following a rest of eight weeks, during which time the story for his third United Artists production has been in preparation.

While the title has not been announced for the athletic star's next "Big Four" picture, it is known to be an original story by Fairbanks, the screen version of which has been prepared by Tom Geraghty, editor of productions.

The greater part of the action takes place in the West, with a generous share of the story dealing with outdoor scenes, thereby affording the star large scope for a lot of new stunts which have been cleverly worked out.

Many new faces will be seen in support of the star. Also a new leading woman, drawn from the legitimate stage and declared to be a "find," has been added to the Fairbanks organization. Frank Campeau has an excellent part giving him an exceptional opportunity for his particular character of "villainy."

Victor Fleming is Director.

Victor Fleming, who made his initial bow as a director in "When the Clouds Roll By," will shoulder the same responsibilities again, with Ted Reed assisting. William McGann and Harry Thorpe, who were responsible for the excellent photography in the last Fairbanks offering, will again do the camera work.

Few scenes will be filmed at the Fairbanks studios in Los Angeles. The story is of a character requiring considerable location work, much of which will take the entire company to Arizona and the East.

It is planned to spend from three to five weeks in the desert. Robert Fairbanks, manager of productions, under whose supervision the little community which was destroyed by flood in "When the Clouds Roll By" was built, is already engaged in the construction of the necessary accommodations to house the company in Arizona.

Following the completion of the work in the desert the company will go East and spend about two weeks filming another episode of the story. Three cities are being considered for this purpose, with Brooklyn, N. Y., the most probable location.

While no specific date has been set for the completion of the third United Artists production, it is believed that about ten weeks will be required to do the entire story.

Record More Big First Runs on "Lone Wolf's Daughter"

INCREASED momentum was given to the success of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, second Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" this week when it was booked for first runs by Frank L. Newman, the big Kansas City exhibitor for his Newman Theatre; by Charles H. Miles for presentation at the Miles, Cleveland; by Jake Wells for his Granby, Norfolk, Va.; and his Colonial, Richmond; the Savoy, Wilmington, Del.; the Walnut, Louisville, Ky.; the American, Terre Haute, Ind.; and the Colonial, Seattle, Wash.

To date this production is outstripping Mr. Read's previous Louise Glaum success, "Sahara," both in the performance of the theatres in which it is presented and in the promptness of its play dates. Exhibitors either through hearing of its success with other first runs or through their own confidence in its drawing power have pushed other productions back to make way for "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

Other important first runs were contracted for by the Grand, Williamsport, Pa.; the Nixon, Erie, Pa.; the Lyric, Lincoln, Neb.; the Strand, Far Rockaway, L. I.; the Jackson, Lebanon, Pa.; the Strand, Oneonta, N. Y.; the Princess, Charleston, S. C.; the Liberty, Walla Walla, Wash., and the Montauk, Passaic, N. J.

Sullivan Sets March 1 as Date for World Tour Start

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN has set March 1 as the day of departure for his long anticipated trip around the world. The Thomas H. Ince scenarioist will leave Los Angeles for New York, where his itinerary calls for a brief visit. From the metropolis, Mr. Sullivan will sail for London and a tour of the principal centers of Great Britain. He then will proceed to France and gradually wind his "searching trip" to the colorful environs of the Orient.

The coming vacation is the first in many years for Mr. Sullivan. It will represent a combination of pleasure and business. About eighteen months will be consumed in the coming Sullivan tour, after which he will return to the Ince Studios.

Power's "Traveling Sales Convention" Hits Coast

SOME weeks ago S. S. Cassard, sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company, left New York for a trip to the Pacific Coast and reports from these sections indicate that he has "arrived." As he goes along he leaves a trail which is extremely beneficial to his company, for Cassard is one of the authors of that popular publication "How To Make Friends at a Glance." That is why President Earl made Cassard his sales manager some time ago and started him off on these trips which someone has described as "Power's traveling sales conventions."

As Cassard goes along, he sends in reports reading something like this: "White Way All Power's," or such and such a circuit "will standardize on Powers," or "the brand new Palace, the newest, largest and finest in this locality, will open with Power's projectors."

Mr. Cassard, however, does not make these trips to take orders for Power's machine but to look over the field for Mr. Earl and get in touch with the dealers and distributors of the Nicholas Power Company. The orders are taken by the large supply houses who are Power's distributors or dealers, and the confidence, energy and enthusiasm which Cassard creates are responsible for the orders that follow. He will be away several weeks.

Two Prominent Dancers in Cast of "Very Idea"

DANCERS are prominent in the cast of the newest Taylor Holmes production, "The Very Idea," picturized from the successful stage comedy by William Le Baron.

Virginia Valli will play opposite to the comedian as Edith, the wife of the mollycoddle husband, Gilbert Goodhue. Miss Valli is a Chicago girl. She was educated there for the stage, where she began early to specialize in interpretive dancing.

The role of the dancer, who Edith comes to believe has "vamped" her susceptible spouse, is enacted by Fay Marbe, prima donna last season in the musical comedy success at the New Amsterdam, in New York, "The Velvet Lady."

Interesting to note in mentioning the cast is that it includes an A. E. F. veteran, Lieut. Jack Levering, who was decorated by King George, of England, for bravery under fire at the front. Mr. Levering plays the part of the physically perfect man, the chauffeur in the childless Goodhue household. The girl he is to marry, Norah, is portrayed by Betty Ross Clarke.

Others with responsible parts in the photoplay are Jean Robb, Edward Lester and George Cooper. Lawrence Windom is directing.

Simpson Succeeds Quive.

It has taken Ben F. Simpson just seven months to discover that there is "no place like home." He is now firmly entrenched in the Realart offices in San Francisco.

At the first meeting of the San Francisco film board of trade attended by Mr. Simpson since his arrival, he was unanimously elected secretary and treasurer. He succeeds Ralph B. Quive, previously San Francisco manager for Realart, who was transferred to Detroit on January 15.

Pathe Issues Statement Showing Business Done by Its Short Subjects

An analysis of Pathe's strength in the field of short subjects is issued this week by Pathe Exchanges, Inc. Basing its figures on the approximate 8,000 motion picture localities in the United States, Pathe claims superiority in this particular field.

Analyzing first the Pathe News, the statement shows that the topical reel is supreme in sixty-five per cent. of the 8,000 localities.

Even more imposing are the figures presented on the single reel comedies, which indicate that, in seventy-five per cent. of these localities, the Pathe laughmakers have the fullest representation.

But, considering the short life of a news reel, it is the wide distribution reported on the Pathe News that is regarded distributing organization as its most noteworthy achievement.

On other of its short subjects, particularly the Pathe Review and Topics of the Day, Pathe also offers an imposing record. Neither of these subjects has as yet attained the thorough distribution of the Pathe News nor the one reel comedies, but this is because they virtually are infants.

Review But One Year Old.

The Pathe Review only recently celebrated its first anniversary, and it is less than six months that it has been established as a weekly feature, being previously issued as a semi-monthly release. However, in that brief space of time the Pathe Review has become solidly planted in the admiration of the principal motion picture theatre owners in every section of the country, and it is only a matter of a short time before the Review's record will be just as remarkable as the Pathe News or the single reel comedies, is the claim of Pathe.

Regarding Topics of the Day, Pathe asserts that no short subject it has ever handled, has met with a more spontaneous approval of exhibitors. A large majority of the leading theatres of the country have established this little feature as a main part of their programs each week.

Without the effective sales organization Pathe has built up under Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., it would have been impossible to obtain the wide distribution accorded all its subjects. Pathe lays claim to the biggest chain of exchanges in the country, having thirty-two on its list. This system pulses directly through the home office, with Mr. Brunet ever directing the machinery which operats every branch.

Charles Ray to Continue His Characterizations

Charles Ray, in his forthcoming pictures for First National release, will continue to present the human personality which he has made famous on the screen. President Arthur S. Kane of Kane Pictures announces that the recent affiliation of the star with his new producing company will in no way terminate Ray's previous efforts to build up an unusual character of universal appeal and consistent box-office value.

Under the new auspices, particular attention will be paid to story vehicles that have been popular in play or novel form. By the addition of a strong title and story to the popular appeal of the star, himself, the combination will have unlimited possibilities. The forthcoming pictures of Ray, it is expected will develop this additional and powerful selling point.

The local Kane offices are already negotiating for the rights to several Broadway plays which are not only especially adapted to the appealing work of the star, but which because of interest and entertainment qualities have been long successes in New York City and later have had extensive runs on the road. The name of the first Charles Ray vehicle will be announced immediately it is finally decided upon.

June Caprice Stars in Pathe's "In Walked Mary"

Oliver D. Bailey's stage play, "Liza Ann," which has been enacted in almost every city or town in the country, has been made into a picture drama, with June Caprice as the star. Under the title, "In Walked Mary," Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will distribute the production through Pathe. Release date of the play, which was directed by George Archainbaud, has been set for March 7.

"In Walked Mary" marks the debut of Miss Caprice as a star in her own right, in the list of Pathe features. Heretofore the young star has shared the honors with Creighton Hale, but her consistently charming and capable performances won her the recognition of all, and Mr. Capellani decided to star her alone.

Thomas Carrigan has the most prominent part in the support of Miss Caprice. As the dashing Northerner, who invades the South and carries off the biggest prize Dixie has to offer, he is in his element, and gives a rousing performance. Stanley Walpole shares with Vivienne Osborne, and Frances M. Grant the remaining honors in the support.

Remarkable Advertising Benefits Nazimova Film

Advertising extraordinary even for a Nazimova picture, reviews of a uniformly and decidedly favorable nature and even special editorials have appeared in the newspapers of Illinois and Iowa in the wake of the passage of "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's latest and greatest screen triumph, through that part of the United States.

The Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill., managed its advertising and publicity campaigns with splendid results. The manager of this theatre got over far more space in the news columns, including cuts and advance stories, than he bought in the advertising columns.

The Liberty Theatre, Davenport, Ia., which played "Stronger Than Death" for a solid week, led off on the day of opening with an unusual advertisement. An enlargement was made from a Nazimova head in a scene still and reproduced in a picture six by seven inches, this surrounded by a restrained, well-done, pen-and-ink art border and the advertising copy. The photograph, though printed with a coarse screen cut, was singularly striking, giving the impression of a painted portrait rather than a photograph. The entire advertisement was three-quarters of a page deep and seven columns wide.

Leonard Starts on Fourth Episode.

Benny Leonard has started on the fourth episode of the fifteen episode serial, "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell and produced by Ascher Enterprises, Inc., and Frank G. Hall. The producers have completed all arrangements for Leonard and his company, consisting of Stuart Holmes, Marie Shotwell, Ruth Dwyer, Mme. Marstini, Walter Horton and Leslie King, to leave for the Coast to complete the production.

"Sporting Duchess" in Cutting Stage.

"The Sporting Duchess," Alice Joyce's special production which Vitagraph has made from the Drury Lane spectacular melodrama of the same name, is now receiving the final touches. The picture practically was completed when the race scenes were taken in New Orleans, but a few interiors remained to be made at the Brooklyn studio. Now that these have been taken the picture is being cut and will be ready on schedule time.

Barbara Chambers on Scenario Staff.

Barbara Ann Chambers, who under the stage name of Livia Nye, obtained considerable prominence on the dramatic stage, has been engaged as a member of the reading staff of the Selznick scenario department. Her dramatic experience and the fact that she has written a number of stories which have been published in the popular fiction magazines cause her to be especially fitted for her new work.

Start Work on New Moore Play.

Announcement is made that Owen Moore will be the star in "The Wilderness Fear," a story recently purchased by Myron Selznick. Harry Rapf, manager of the Selznick West Coast studio, reports that work on the production will begin within a short time.

Mary Miles Minter Is Honor Guest at Luncheon

MARY MILES MINTER was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Alexandria Hotel given recently by the Advertising Club of Los Angeles. More than 300 of the prominent business men of the city attended the luncheon, which was the occasion for boosting "A Greater Los Angeles in 1920." Among the prominent speakers were Dr. J. A. B. Scherer, president of Throop College, Pasadena; John P. Carter, internal revenue collector; John F. Murray, United States investigator in Europe of child conservation, and Motley H. Flint, vice president of the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank.

Miss Minter was not only the guest of honor but the sole representative on the program of the motion picture industry. The subject upon which she spoke was "My New Year's Dream of Los Angeles in 1920." Her speech dwelt upon the great progress made in recent years in Los Angeles business affairs. but called attention to the still pressing need for more and larger buildings and housing conveniences. She praised the various department stores and business houses and congratulated Los Angeles business men on furnishing the motion picture industry with facilities for buying commodities and clothing equal to New York City.

Cast for MacLean-May Picture.

When the new Thomas H. Ince production featuring Douglas MacLean and Doris May, temporarily titled "Shakespeare Clancy," is released the public will have the opportunity of seeing an unusual cast in support of these popular stars.

Otto Hoffman is cast in a prominent role. William Courtright is another of the cast. Others include Lew Morrison, Wilbur Higby, Monty Collins, Joe Hazelton and Bert Woodruff.

"Woman God Sent" in Cutting Room.

The production work of the picture "The Woman God Sent," has been running so smoothly that it is already in the hands of the cutting room, according to report from the Selznick Bronx studio. Director Larry Trimble, by systematizing the work, succeeded in getting ahead of the schedule for a few days. This is a Selznick Special production in which Zena Keefe and Joe King, juvenile star, have the leading roles.

Buys Story for Edythe Sterling.

Republic Distributing Corporation, in an announcement, made known the purchase of an original script to be used as a starring feature for Edythe Sterling.

The name of the new story is "The Girl Who Dared," and is described as a story of the great West. The theme centers in the capture by Miss Sterling of a wild but beautiful horse which roams the plains. The picture is to be directed by Cliff Smith.

James Oliver Curwood Forms His Own Company to Picturize His Own Novels

FOLLOWING close after the success of his first personally produced super-feature, "Back to God's Country," which was backed by a Canadian company filmed by Ernest Shipman, James Oliver Curwood has formed the James Oliver Curwood Productions, Incorporated, under which corporation his future personally produced super-features taken from his successful novels of the great out-doors will be filmed. Mr. Curwood has associated with him David M. Hartford, as director, and Ernest Shipman, who will be in charge of the publicity and sales departments, with headquarters in New York.

Mr. Curwood was one of the first of America's prominent authors to realize the absolute necessity of an intimate co-operation between author and director in order to achieve the greatest results; and when "Back to God's Country"—a First National Special that has created a sensation—was filmed on the edge of the Barren Lands of the far north, it was Mr. Curwood, with a record of fifteen years of exploratory work and adventure behind him, who went ahead with Mr. Hartford and worked hand in hand with the director for the biggest possible results. In filming Curwood's big stories of nature Mr. Hartford and the author "sit in" together at every stage of the game.

Big Head Will Cause Downfall.

"Egotism is the deadliest enemy a man can have," says Mr. Curwod. "In other words, big-head—and jealousy. Any man who says that two heads—each skilled in its profession—are not better than one must be an idiot. Just that minute a director gets bloated up with his own importance you can make up your mind he is going down-hill—and will toboggan fast. And the same holds true of an author. Not until authors and directors get together in this way, each giving to the other the best that is in him, will the greatest results be achieved in picture making.

"We do not expect to make more than two pictures a year for it is our determination to make the Curwood nature stories stand out on the screen, like "Back to God's Country," as the classics of the wilderness. If it takes us an entire year to make one picture, and make it as we want it made, we will take that year. We are going to let the other fellows do the hurrying.

"Our next big super-feature, now in process of making for First National, will be my novel "Nomads of the North," a big human drama with wild animal action in it. We expect it will take us six months to make this screen story as we want it made."

Bradley Forms Company to Produce in Cleveland

CLEVELAND now enters the ranks of many other American cities as a legitimate producing center, with the formation of the Bradley Features Company, a concern that plans to make from four to six big productions a year. Samuel Richard Bradley is president of the company. Bradley was formerly known as Brodsky. He directed "The House without Children" and other pictures, the productions being made in connection with parties identified with the Argus Enterprises. The new concern is the outgrowth of the success of Bradley's efforts and the directors of the company are Fred Desberg, E. P. Strong, Joseph Laronge, Robert McLaughlin, Arthur Brereton, H. H. Cudmore and S. R. Bradley.

Announcement was made that a lease has been taken on the Andrews property on Euclid avenue where a permanent studio will be fitted up. For each production a special company of talent will be obtained with a well known star. Special attention also will be given to the stories, in an effort to get an even balance as to quality between star and story.

In honor of his election to the presidency of the concern and as photoplay director, Mr. Bradley gave a dinner at the Hollenden Hotel, Monday night, February 9, which was largely attended.

Ince Adds to Scenario Staff.

Miss R. Carol Kapleau is the latest addition to the Thomas H. Ince scenario department. Miss Kapleau comes to the Ince Studios after a year of similar work with a large company in New York.

Receiving her education at the University of California, Miss Kapleau has had a number of years' experience in writing scenarios as well as being a playwright of recognized ability. Two of her skits are now appearing on the Keith Circuit in the east.

Treatment for Rent Profiteers.

In "Raise the Rent," the Rolin Comedy, released by Pathe February 22, "Snub" Pollard shows how rent profiteers should be dealth with. He is supported by Marie Mosquini, new leading lady, Eddie Boland and Sunshine Sambo, the diminutive colored comedian.

"Honey Bee" Starring Mme. Sylva Answers Wide Appeal for Novelty

THE American Film Company, Inc., in line with its announced policy of devoting its entire Santa Barbara, Cal., studios to the production of special features, now announces that it has ready for release "The Honey Bee," an adaptation of the novel by Samuel Merwin. This subject, which is published by Bobbs-Merrill Company, is said to be one the six best sellers in the United States.

The cast introducing this special six-reel feature is headed by Mme. Marguerita Sylva, the famous grand opera star. The direction was in charge of Rupert Julian, who established himself in his direction of "The Beast of Berlin" and "The Fire-Flingers." Included in the cast are such favorites as Thomas Holding, Nigel Barrie, Albert Ray, George Hernandez, Harvey Clark, Dell Boone, Ethel Ullman, Charlotte Merriam, Ruth Maurice, Harry Tenbrook and the noted pugilist, "Kid" McCoy.

In discussing the presentation of "The Honey Bee," Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who recently returned from California where he supervised production of the subject, said: "I believe we have accomplished in 'The Honey Bee' what the high-class exhibitors throughout the country have been asking for. Many of the larger exhibitors have said to me time and again: 'Give us novelty! Give us something out of the beaten path. Most subjects are too much alike, too much along the same lines!'

Answers Appeal for Novelty.

"In 'The Honey Bee' I believe we present the answer to the exhibitors' appeal for novelty. For here is a subject by one of the most popular writers in America—Samuel Merwin—that draws an analogy between human life and the life of the bee. It points out the powerful moral lessons concerning which Maeterlinck comments so graphically. Mme. Sylva portrays the title role in a masterful style which proves her immense dramatic versatility. It is, as one might imagine, a difficult role to perform, that of a business woman who finds, like the bee, that the true mission of a woman in life is motherhood.

"The story relates of a fight in Paris between Carpentier, the French champion, and the American champion. To portray the role of the French champion, we secured the famous pugilist, 'Kid' McCoy. The part of the American champion is taken by Nigel Barrie. The fight was staged in our big glass studio. An andience of more than 3,000, most of whom were in formal evening dress, makes this one of the most elaborate prize fight scenes I have ever seen staged for pictures.

"Additional information can be obtained from the American representatives at the Pathe exchanges, and I feel confident that exhibitors throughout America will agree that we present in 'The Honey Bee' a theme which is exceptionally unusual and which will prove a substantial box-office success."

"Daredevil Jack" Has New York Trade Showing

THE first two chapters of "Daredevil Jack," the fifteen-episode serial featuring Jack Dempsey which Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release on February 15, have been screened at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, at a special performance for the trade. Exhibitors of Manhattan, Brooklyn and New Jersey, taxed the capacity of the auditorium and greeted with applause the first efforts of Champion Jack Dempsey as the hero of Frederic Chapin's adventure story produced by Robert Brunton.

The showing was conducted under the direction of W. E. Raynor, manager of the Pathe New York exchange. After the performance, Mr. Raynor was congratulated by many of the exhibitors upon the fine quality of the production

Mr. Raynor said: "In all my experience with serials, I never before encountered so much enthusiastic praise for a production from exhibitors. I rather expected Jack Dempsey would register a hit by his acting, but it was a surprise to me to find that he had made such a decidedly favorable impression. All the exhibitors had only the highest praise for Dempsey as a screen actor, while the story met with general applause and the production was pronounced excellent. I expect this picture to prove the biggest money-making serial Pathe has ever offered the exhibitors of this country."

Among the exhibitors present were the following: Traubb and Flaume, Grand Opera House, New York, and Olympic, Brooklyn; John M. Squire. Union Hill; Frank Keeney, Keeney Theatres, Brooklyn; Fred Mertens, Jersey City; Weiss Brothers, Greenpoint; Barr Brothers, Brooklyn; Edward Bimberg, Bimberg Circuit; Robinson and Burns, Jersey City; Abe Franchi, Consolidated Circuit; Mr. Motta, Peerless Theatre, Broooklyn; Henry Bishop, Hoboken; representatives of the David Picker Circuit, Mr. Moody, Orient Theatre, Brooklyn, and a number of others of equal prominence as exhibitors in the New York district.

Capitol Theatre Books "The Luck of the Irish"

FOLLOWING the policy adopted by Realart Pictures Corporation of giving its productions box-office try-outs before general release, "The Luck of the Irish," an Allan Dwan production, was booked for the Capitol Theatre for the week of February 8.

The first test of this Mayflower Photoplay Corporation special was held recently at Sid Grauman's million dollar theatre in Los Angeles where it is said to have played to large crowds.

"The Luck of the Irish" probably will be released about February 22. Returns on its box-office value will then be available to exhibitors from the most important trade centers in the East and West. J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, in a letter to branch offices of the company, quotes Grace Kingsley critic of the Los Angeles Times, as saying: "See it and be charmed completely away even from the remembrance of the high cost of living. You're lucky to have the chance."

The cast of "The Luck of the Irish" is composed of Dan Kirkwood, Harry Northrup, Anna Q. Nilsson and Ward Crane.

Return of "Hoodlum" Breaks Records.

The "first runs only" policy of the Victoria Theatre at Rochester, N. Y., experienced a sudden change recently when Manager Jack Ferren was persuaded to try "The Hoodlum," starring Mary Pickford and distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for a second run.

The return engagement of "The Hoodlum" broke records for the Victoria, and as a result Manager Farren has applied for re-bookings of "Daddy Long Legs" and "Heart O' the Hills," also Mary Pickford Productions distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Terriss Working on Big Production.

Tom Terriss is just about commencing work upon a big special production for Vitagraph. The choice lies between the two stories, "The Great Divide" and "The Great Ruby." This will be the most ambitious production that Mr. Terriss has yet worked upon and will be the first production since he completed Winchell Smith's play "The Fortune Hunter." This picture is to be presented in seven reels, which constitutes something of a record for a comedy.

"Burning Daylight" Ready for Production by Metro

THE scenario for "Burning Daylight," first of the four Jack London novels that Metro will produce on the screen for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., has been completed by A. S. Le Vino and production will start next week at the Metro studios in Hollywood with Mitchell Lewis starring.

C. E. Shurtleff, who controls picture rights to the unfilmed works of the late novelist; Edward Sloman, who has been engaged to direct the productions, and Mr. Le Vino held a conference at the Hollywood Hotel and discussed the filming of the initial Jack London picture.

Jackson Rose has been engaged as one of the cameramen for the production. Mr. Sloman expects to start the picture before the end of next week. "Burning Daylight" is a story of the far Northwest and of New York City. The first episodes will be photographed at the Metro studios. Later the company will go to some northern California location for snow scenes.

Favorable Report on Trademark Bill.

The House Committee on Patents has made a favorable report on a bill to extend trademark privileges. It provides that where any person has registered a trademark upon the ground of its use for ten years prior to February 20, 1905, as to certain articles or classes of articles, and shall thereafter and subsequently extend his business so as to include other articles not manufactured by him during that time, registration of the trademark in the additional classes is to be permitted. It is required however, that the mark shall have been in actual use for two years.

Goldwyn Names Famous Plays Listed as Current and Future Productions

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has gone to many sources for dramatic and comedy material to turn into photoplays during the coming months. Popular books, great plays that have been numbered among the biggest stage successes of the generation, and original stories by the most fertile creative brains of the day, all contribute to the remarkable list of productions, current and to come, announced by Goldwyn this week.

With the all-star pictures, adaptions of renowned plays, the Eminent Authors contributions of their novels, the great screen stories selected for the Goldwyn stars, the Booth Tarkington two-reel "Edgar" comedies and the product of the Bray Studios, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is offering a program of variety and interest that meets the needs of exhibitors.

In tabulating productions, present and future, Goldwyn has included only such works as will reach exhibitors within a comparatively short time.

Suggested Selections.

From the viewpoint of the exhibitor looking for feature pictures it would be difficult to make a stronger selection than Hall Caine's "The Christian," "Milestones," the remarkable study of changing generations by Edward Knoblock and Arnold Bennett; "Bunty Pulls the Strings," conceded to be a most sympathetic study of Scotch character, and "The Tailor-Made Man," the Cohan & Harris comedy that played for several seasons. These four renowned stage successes are placed among the all-star pictures, along with "Black Pawl," by Ben Ames Williams, and "The Branding Iron," by Katherine Newlin Burt.

No less important are the other stage plays recently secured as vehicles for the Goldwyn stars. "Madame X" will be filmed with Pauline Frederick in the character played on the stage by Dorothy Donnelly. "Officer 666," the Cohan & Harris farce-comedy by Augustin McHugh, has been assigned to Jack Pickford, whose "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" is now awaiting release. "The Double Dyed Deceiver" and "The Man Who Had Everything" are other stories chosen for him.

Tom Moore in "Stop Thief."

Tom Moore will be seen in "Stop Thief," and later in a picturization of Ben Ames Williams' "The Great Accident." His current release is "Duds," a thrilling story by Henry C. Rowland. Clyde Fitch's "The Truth" will afford Madge Kennedy one of her best roles, Other stories that promise to reveal her at her best are "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness," by Octavus Roy Cohen, and "Trimmed With Red," now in preparation at the Goldwyn studio in New York.

Then there is "The Slim Princess," the George Ade-Henry Blossom success in which Mabel Normand will interpret the character made famous on the stage by Elsie Janis. Several more works suitable to Miss Normand's individual style of comedy expression have been secured.

Will Rogers, who has rapidly advanced in favor as a screen comedian, is well supplied with material to follow W. R. Leighton's "Billy Fortune" story, screened under the title of "Water, Water, Everywhere." "The Strange Boarder" is already complete and the work is progressing on "Jess' Call Me Jim." Geraldine Farrar's next release will be a spectacular and colorful romance, "The Woman and the Puppet," by Pierre Louys and Pierre Frondais.

Much may be expected from the Eminent Authors whose novels are being transformed into pictures by Goldwyn. Rex Beach will follow "The Silver Horde" with a comedy, "Going Some;" the scenario of Rupert Hughes' next offering, "Scratch My Back," is now in the hands of Director Sidney Olcott; Basil King has written a remarkable story in "Earth Bound," to be released after his "The Street Called Straight;" Mary Roberts Rinehart has contributed "Dangerous Days," Leroy Scott is represented by "Partners of the Night" and Gouverneur Morris contributes "The Penalty."

Pauline Frederick's Emotional Power Once More Dominates in "Roads of Destiny."

Better Co-operation with Small Town Showmen Planned by Metro Officials

S. A. SHIRLEY, district manager of the central west for Metro, returned from a week's trip through that territory Monday, February 2. He was accompanied on the tour by E. M. Saunders, general sales manager for Metro. The cities visited were Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City and St. Louis. From St. Louis Mr. Saunders went on to Cincinnati, where he joined W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager of the territory supplied by Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit, and these cities were also visited.

Mr. Shirley and Mr. Saunders were engaged in a special drive, in the cities visited by them, and they held a special sales conference in each city with the Metro exchange manager and all salesmen connected with his office. This special drive had to do particularly with the Metro policy of fewer and better pictures.

Mr. Shirley states that they discovered there was no trouble with any of the offices visited, so far as closing up all the key cities—or larger towns in the district—was concerned; but they found that while doing this the smaller towns had been somewhat neglected. The conferences, already referred to, were therefore held for the purpose of devising ways and means for getting into closer touch with exhibitors in these smaller towns.

Closes for Big Business.

Mr. Shirley says that on the trip Mr. Saunders and he came in contact with many prominent exhibitors, both in the larger and smaller towns, and that they were very successful in closing quite a volume of business, which had been hanging fire for some considerable time past.

In Minneapolis they found that the working organization of the Reuben & Finkelstein enterprises had undergone wonderful improvement, under the very efficient management of General Manager Hays. By the way, Mr. Hays was formerly manager of the Garrick Theatre in St. Paul. Mr. Hays has installed systems and methods for handling the extensive bookings of the firm which are marvels in their way, Mr. Shirley informed me.

Mr. Shirley sold the entire output of his pictures to the Reuben & Finkelstein firm for Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. He found a strong demand for Nazimova's latest feature, "Stronger Than Death," for Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way" and for Alice Lake in "Should a Woman Tell?"

In Des Moines the Metro officials called on Abe Frankel, owner of the Rialto and Majestic theatres, who contracted for the entire output, opening with "Stronger Than Death" Sunday, February 8. A. H. Blank, owner of the Des Moines, Garden and Palace theatres, was also visited. He owns the franchise for First National in his territory and reported excellent business in both the theatre and exchange departments. Mr. Blank uses Metro features in Sioux City, Ia., and in Columbus, Neb.

Metro Pictures Fill the Newman.

At Omaha, Harry Goldberg, who owns the Sun, Moon and the Muse theatres, among the finest in the city, contracted for all the recent Metro releases. He opened at the Sun with "Stronger Than Death" Sunday, February 1.

Kansas City was next visited. There Frank Newman, owner of the Newman Theatre, had already booked the Metro recent releases and reported excellent business for all of them. Sam Harding, who owns the Liberty, and Richard & Flynn, owners of the Twelfth Street and Wonderland theatres, contracted for the second run of all recent Metro productions.

William Siever, of the New Grand Central, and Harry Koplar, of the Greater Amusement Company, at St. Louis, had already contracted for all the recent Metro output when seen. The Greater Amusement Company controls sixteen of the leading houses in St. Louis in the suburban districts. "Nothing But the Truth" was playing simultaneously in seven of these houses when the Metro visitors were in the city, and four prints were used for the occasion. Relays of bicycles were employed to deliver the films at the appointed hours at the theatres. Mr. Moskowitz, manager of Loew's Garrick, was also visited. He was showing to capacity business with a program of vaudeville and pictures.

District Manager Shirley reported excellent business, generally, throughout the central west. At least that was the condition before the "flu" scare came. While in St. Louis the schools were being closed and all theatres were compelled to close one hour daily for thorough ventilating and disinfecting purposes. Exhibitors everywhere were extremely optimistic over business prospects for the approaching season and Mr. Shirley found conditions really excellent, notwithstanding the epidemic.

Mary Kelly Gives Vivid Sketch of Riviera's Prelude

THE atmosphere of movie houses is changing—and for the better. A recent visit to the Riviera, one of Chicago's most magnificent theatres, on the North Side, warrants the happy assurance that a devotion to artistic ideals is supplanting the old rampant spirit of commercialism.

From the moment of entrance one is impressed. There is something in the surroundings, the lights, the music that appeals to the finest sensibilities of the visitor. Here is no ordinary amusement hall, one thinks, but a stately temple of art. Here are results which money alone has not brought, but which would be achieved only by a fundamental appreciation of beauty and refinement. In other words, the patron gets something that he hasn't paid for.

Just a Moment, Dear Readers, and You'll See Them Throwing the Furniture.

"Because," says Margarita Fisher, "I don't like the color of his shirt"—in American's production, "The Dangerous Talent."

Previous to the scheduled program, pianissimo strains of music from a rear miniature orchestra on the mezzanine, are heard. Overhead the indirect lights shed a pale glow over the interior. The wanderer settles himself for a treat. If he is musical, he listens and forgets everything. If not, he rests himself and his eyes by glancing about at the pastel-tinted decorations of faded rose and gray, brightened with touches of gold.

Presently the music stops. Slowly, very slowly, the curtain rises, and the orchestra members take their places. Lights go on brilliantly, disclosing on the screen the name and composer of the overture. This is always a selection from the classics. Then gradually the light leaves the screen, falls like a curtain upon the figures of the musicians, so that only they are distinctly visible.

The effect is psychological. Because of this arrangement, there is nothing to divert the audience, and the music receives the whole of their attention. For eight short minutes the overture lasts. Then promptly, with a celerity which must be seen to be appreciated, the lights go on, the curtain divides, and there is a vocal solo, duet, quartet or sextet, varying with the weekly change in program. These artists are carefully trained, and maintain in every way the high standard of the management.

Then the screen program starts. Preceding the feature is a group of pictures on travel news and comics that seem to have been culled from the best that filmland offers. For each of these a fitting musical selection has been planned, and is provided by a wary conductor who never misses a cue.

By this time the patrons as well as the stage are all "set" for the feature, which has been formally, pleasantly and elaborately introduced.

Rothacker Prints Rank Very High in Europe

DAVID P. HOWELLS, a well-known exporter of American films in New York, on his return from a recent trip to Europe, wrote Watterson R. Rothacker as follows:

"You will be interested to know that during my recent stay abroad I saw Rothacker prints in London, Paris, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Amsterdam, Brussels and Prague. Everywhere the excellence of your printing was evident and universally praised. I was frequently asked if it would be possible to induce you either to open and conduct laboratories or install your system in existing laboratories in European distributing centers."

Mr. Rothacker replied that he had very definite plans regarding European laboratories, and that London will be the next place after New York.

Hallmark in United Offices.

Hallmark's Chicago force has moved from the Consumers Building to the offices of United Picture Theatres, on the fourth floor of the Mallers Building. The change of headquarters followed the announcement that United will henceforth have charge of the physical distribution of the Hallmark product.

Maeterlinck Gives High Praise on Our Pictures

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, known in filmdom particularly by the production of his story, "The Bluebird," is a great admirer of American made moving pictures. During his present visit he has found occasion to sound their praises, for example:

"Americans do not esteem the really great art of the movies. I find that artists here look down upon the moving picture theatre. They regard it as raw and inferior.

"I do not think so. I think that the moving picture is a great and truly artistic means of interpreting life. It expresses the life of all the people. Some of the movie actors are great artists.

"Of all the cinemas I have seen the American are incomparably the best. They are enormously superior to Italian or French movies. In technique and mechanical equipment, American producers are far ahead. In this respect there is really no comparison between American and European pictures."

Flaherty Appointed Head of Unity Photoplays

FRANK J. FLAHERTY, who has been the efficient manager of the Chicago office of Hallmark Pictures for over a year, resigned that position Saturday, February 7, to accept the management of the Unitey Photoplays Company. This is an independent concern which has been doing considerable business for the past five years in the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Wabash avenue. It is owned by a closed corporation, of which Frank Zambrino is president.

The wide acquaintance which Mr. Flaherty has established among exhibitors throughout the Middle West will make him a most valuable acquisition for the Unity Photoplays Company.

Chicago's Select Office Breaks Former Records

BEN W. BEADELL, manager of Select's Chicago office, announces that all previous sales records were smashed during the week ending January 17. The previous monthly records were also broken by the showing made in January last. In honor of the victory, Assistant Manager Eddie Silverman, the salesmen and the cashier, were entertained at dinner by Manager Beadell.

A trade showing of "The Land of Opportunity" was given Tuesday, February 3, and created such a favorable impression that it was booked solid in a short time. Prints were being requested from nearby Select offices to meet the demand before the week closed.

"Copperhead" at Randolph; "The Gumps" at Orpheum

JONES, LINICK & SCHAEFER has booked "The Copperhead" for a run of two weeks at the Randolph, beginning Sunday, February 8. Lionel Barrymore, who appears in the titular role, is a big Chicago favorite in stage roles and will doubtless draw a strong following to view him in this much advertised feature.

"The Gumps," Sidney Smith's famous cartoon characters, will be seen at the Orpheum concurrently with "The Copperhead" at the Randolph.

The A. A. A. Gives Luncheon.

A luncheon was given at the Morrison Hotel Friday afternoon, January 6, by the Allied Amusement Association, the invited guests being dramatic, vaudeville, burlesque and moving picture theatre managers.

The event was a celebration of the amalgamation of the Chicago Theatrical Managers' Association and the Allied Amusement Association.

Burton Holmes at Orchestra Hall.

The season of Burton Holmes Travelogues for 1920 will open at Orchestra Hall, Friday, February 20.

Since his last professional visit here, Mr. Holmes has motored all over Alsace-Lorraine, northern France, through Belgium and occupied Rhineland. His camera corps has brought back vivid impressions of the sections mentioned and these will be enhanced by word pictures delivered only as Mr. Holmes knows how. "Vanished Russia" is the fifth topic of this year's series.

Altland with National Pictures.

W. S. Altland, formerly assistant manager to F. J. Flaherty in Hallmark's Chicago office, resigned three weeks ago to accepte the position of salesman with National Picture Theatres, Inc.

Marie Schaefer Engaged.

Charles J. Schaefer, owner of the Garfield Theatre, West Madison street, announces the engagement of his only daughter, Marie Schaefer, to Roger A. Bailey, also of Chicago. Charles J. Schaefer is the oldest of the four Schaefer brothers, the others being Peter J. Scaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and Frank and Fred Schaefer. The two last named are also successful picture theatre men.

Covering "The Coast" News Field

Samuel Goldwyn Visiting Coast With Many Conferences Pending

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is expected to arrive from the East one day this week. This is his first visit to the Culver City studio since the Duponts and the Chase banking interests have become financially interested in the Goldwyn orgaization, and Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores, became a member of the Board of Directors.

Preparations are under way at Goldwyn for the accommodation of ten companies to work at the same time. Additional stages and equipment are being built on the new lot recently purchased by Abraham Lehr, general manager and vice-president of the company.

During Mr. Goldwyn's stay new plans will be put in operation, and increased production activities will be tried out. Conferences will be held by Mr. Goldwyn and the Eminent Authors, two of whom, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Gouverneur Morris, are here, with other coming, while he is on the coast. Much importance is attached to these talks.

Ibanez at Metro.

Vincente Blasco Ibanez, noted Spanish author, whose novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has been purchased for screen purposes by Metro, has been in Los Angeles for the past few days, during which time he has spent many hours at Metro's Hollywood studio, in conference with June Mathis, who is putting the story into continuity form, and the visiting officials from the east. Marcus A. Loew, Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger all entertained the distinguished visitor, and appeared with him in a film which will be used to announce the photoplay when it is ready to be released.

New Kinema Manager Arrives.

Jack Calicutt, who has been appointed manager of the Kinema Theatre on Grand avenue by the Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser, recent purchasers of the playhouse, arrived from San Francisco in time to oversee the preparations for the first presentation under the new management, which is a film version of the Emerson Hough novel, "The Sagebrusher." Marguerite De La Motte, one of the featured players in the film, was engaged to make personal appearances in connection with the exhibition of the picture.

Film Exchange Dinner-Dance.

A dinner and dance was given at Christopher's on February 6 by the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade. The organization is composed of exchange managers of Southern California, and the entertainment, which will be followed by other social fuctions, marks the inauguration of a new departure of the association. Maurice Wolf, of the Goldwyn exchange, is president, and the committee in charge of the dinner consisted of A. B. Lamb, Harry Hicks and W. E. V. Mack.

Cody to Finance Aviation Company.

Lew Cody has engaged Lieutenant Ormer Locklear, aviator, to assist in the direction of flying scenes that will be part of the action in Cody's new play, soon to be filmed at the Gasnier studio. Cody is also considering the financing of a new aeronautic company to be headed by Locklear, and which will be operated after the manner of the Mercury and the Syd Chaplin Aviation concerns. Lew Cody and his manager, Louis J. Gasnier, has returned from a trip to New York.

Has Headquarters in Los Angeles.

Sol Lesser, film exploiter and producer of spectacular productions, has transferred the headquarters of his film interests from San Francisco to Los Angeles during the past few days. Since Lesser's purchase, in connection with the Gore Brothers, of the First National Circuit for Southern California and Arizona, he has decided that his new interests can best be manager from Los Angeles, although a branch office will still be maintained in San Francisco. The Los Ageles offices are in the Brack Shops on Seventh street. Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers recently purchased the Kinema Theatre from T. L. Tally, and they are planning to erect a large theatre on Broadway as soon as they can decided on the site for the building.

Sol Lesser and George Beban

To Translate Plays Into Japanese.

Tsuru Aoki, Universal's Japanese star, has been officially requested by a Nipponese Theatrical firm to translate great American and British plays into Japanese for the theatres of Japan.

Edwards to Produce "School Days."

Gus Edwards, composer-producer-actor-manager, has joined the ranks of film producers. While Mr. Edwards was appearing in a local vaudeville house, he organized the Gus Edwards Productions, Inc., with Gus Edwards, Myron Selznick, Harry Rapf, Harry Caulfield and Mike Levy as members of the company. Edwards will conclude his vaudeville tour, then will return to Los Angeles, where he will supervise a film production of his famous stage success, "School Days." The story is now being put into continuity form, and will be ready for filming when Mr. Edwards returns, which will be within a few weeks.

Maeterlinck Comes to Goldwyn.

Maurice Maeterlinck, famous Belgian author, is on his way to the Goldwyn studio at Culver City, to collaborate in the production of a story to be written by him for the screen. Goldwyn players will interpret the action, and a Goldwyn director will have charge of the production.

Henry King Productions.

Henry King, director of "Twenty-three and One-Half Hours' Leave," and other successful film plays, has agreed to direct six Henry King Specials for Jesse D. Hampton Productions, Inc., to be made from famous books with all-star casts. Mr. King's contract is for the duration of two years, and his first production will be from the Frank Spearman story, "Big Dick."

New Writer for De Mille.

Salisbury Field, author and playwright, has joined the literary staff of Cecil B. De Mille, and for the next few months will turn his attention to mastering the details of scenario writing. Mr. Field has contributed many short stories to the popular magazines, and is the author of several plays, including "Wedding Bells," now playing in New York.

Noted Actress Enters Politics.

Mrs. Tyrone Power, now playing a leading role in the Mission Play opposite Frederick Warde at San Gabriel, has thrown her hat into the political ring at a candidate for delegate from California to the Republican National Convention to be held in Chicago in June. Mrs. Power is the wife of Tyrone Power, of stage and screen fame.

Ince Engages Writer.

Joseph Franklin Poland, who has written many screen stories for Mary Miles Minter during her connection with the American Film Company, has been engaged to write stories for Ince productions.

Fox Theatre Manager in West.

John Zanft, general manager of all the William Fox theatres of the country, arrived in Los Angeles last week, and has since spent the greater part of his time out at the Fox studio in Hollywood. Mr. Zanft has not made any announcements in regard to the purchase of a Los Angeles theatre for Fox.

Theatre Man Marries.

Harold Armston, house manager of Grauman's Theatre, was married on January 29, to Miss Catherine Williams. The couple will live in a new bungalow in Hollywood when they return from their honeymoon.

Kansas City Officials See "The Copperhead"

INDICATION of the big publicity which can be obtained by exhibitors showing "The Copperhead," the Paramount-Artcraft super-special, featuring Lionel Barrymore, is given in a telegram received by Al. Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, from Frank L. Newman of Newman's Theatre, Kansas City. Newman's Theatre is showing "The Copperhead" all this week.

Before the opening of the picture, Mr. Newman gave a preview to about 300 persons, representing the leading citizens of Kansas City.

As the most conspicuous feature of Lincoln Week in the motion picture theatres of New York City, "The Copperhead" is enjoying immense popularity at the Rivoli Theatre.

Chicago first saw the production on Sunday last, where it opened an engagement at the Randolph Theatre.

Studio Shots

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART'S next production for Eminent Authors will be made from her story "Empire Builders," and Cullen Landis will play the leading role.

Tom Forman will direct Ethel Clayton in her coming Paramount production, "The Ladder," at Lasky's.

Charles Ray's first independent production will be a film version of "Peaceful Valley," by E. E. Kidder, in which Sol Smith Russell rose to fame on the stage.

The Allan Dwan Company, which has been making scenes for "The Scoffer" on Mt. Lowe, has returned to Brunton to complete the production.

Art Acord, star of the Universal serial, "The Moon Riders," has so far recovered the use of his broken leg that production on the serial will be resumed within a few days.

Lucille Rubey is Neal Burns' new leading woman in Capitol Comedies.

The home of Douglas Fairbanks, which was partially destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, is undergoing repairs.

Edward Jose, directing Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon," is holding up the production on account of illness.

H. B. Warner is supported by Anna Q. Nilsson, Thomas Guise, Adele Farrington, Lillian Rich, Augustus Phillips, Philo McCullough, J. P. Lockney and Howard Davies in "Behind Red Curtains," for Jesse D. Hampton.

Tully Marshall, Hugh Thompson, Russ Powell and Harry Laramie will support Mabel Normand in "The Slim Princess" at Goldwyn.

Cleo Madison, who has been in hospital as the result of being kicked by a horse while working in a serial, is recovering.

Henry R. Symonds, recently of the Henry Lehrman directorial forces, has been engaged as assistant by Marshall Neilan.

David Horsley, film producer, returned from New York last week accompanied by his family.

Sidney Olcott will direct the Rupert Hughes story, "Scratch My Back," at Goldwyn, with Roy T. Barnes and Helene Chadwick in the leading roles.

Gale Henry, eccentric comedienne, has just received word that her husband, Bruno J. Becker, who is also her business manager, is seriously ill in New York.

Syd Chaplin and Mrs. Chaplin gave a dinner to a number of noted guests one night last week in honor of the twelfth anniversary of their wedding.

Dwight Cleveland, scenario editor for Jesse D. Hampton Productions, is in New York hunting new story material for Blanche Sweet, H. B. Warner, William Desmond and the Henry King Special productions.

William Desmond and his bride, Mary McIvor, expect to move into their new home on Hollywood Boulevard early next week, after which they will stage a housewarming for their friends.

J. S. Woodhouse, publicity director at Goldwyn's, has been appointed to the Committee of Publications and Statistics by President McFie of the Chamber of Commerce.

Margaret Loomis is leading woman for Bryant Washburn in "The Sins of St. Anthony," now being filmed at Lasky's.

Ashley Cooper, Australian actor, is doing comedy characterizations at the National studios.

J. Warren Kerrigan has begun production on "The Green Flame" at Brunton, with Fritzi Brunette opposite and Ernest C. Warde directing.

Helen Holmes has begun on her new serial, "The Danger Trail," under Director Gilbert P. Hamilton at the Warner Brothers studio.

Edith Storey and her company, under Director Colin Campbell, have gone to El Segundo for Algerian scenes in "Moon Madness."

Maurice Tourneur has gone with his company to Balboa Beach to make scenes for "The Pavilion on the Links."

The cast for "The Penalty," the Gouverneur Morris story, includes Ethel Grey Terry, Lon Chaney, Kenneth Harlan and Charles Clary.

Sessue Hayakawa, star and producer, was taken suddenly ill while at work at the old Griffith studio one day last week. Nervous breakdown, his physician says.

Al St. John has written the story for his Paramount comedy to which he has given the startling title of "The Paper Hanger."

Marshall Neilan's Studio Policy Gives Credit When Credit Is Due

CRITICISM having been directed against the practice of crediting on the film and in advertising the names of the scenario editors, the cameraman, etc., Marshall Neilan comes through with the assertion that he for one believes in the policy of "Live and let live." Mr. Neilan thus declares himself:

"I do not agree with the premise that the average audience becomes bored when we acquaint patrons with the names of certain individuals who are responsible for some of the most essential features of an entertaining picture. True there is a limit, and to overreach the limit is hardly advisable.

"However, I am a firm believer in giving credit where if is due. I think the general public is honest enough to appreciate the efforts of those who so materially help to make a production worth while.

"To attain recognition in one's particular line of endeavor is the ambition of everyone and photographers and art directors are no exception. But how are they going to accomplish this ambition if the producers deny them the credit they deserve?

"And would it not be unfair to patrons to mislead them into thinking that a single person—the producer alone—is solely responsible for every individual feature of a production?" Mr. Neilan continues:

Believes Reviews Help Sales.

"The critics of today dwell on the quality of the continuity, photography and technical direction almost as much as they do on the direction and acting. The success or failure of a picture very often depends largely on the consensus of opinion of those published reviews so why they should not the names to whose skill this important work is intrusted be brought to the attention of the public.

"It is true that no production ever leaves the studio without the careful approval of the producer himself, and it is he whose reputation will suffer if the attraction should prove unsatisfactory from any standpoint, but, on the other hand, the very fact that he allows a picture to go out for distribution is proof conclusive that he considers the work of his aids well done and it would be decidedly unfair to all if he failed to announce their individual names when introducing the picture.

Wilson Now Owns Own Studio.

Ben Wilson, who is producing his second serial picture, "The Screaming Shadow," for release to Hallmark Pictures Corporation, purchased the studio located on San Monica boulevard, Los Angeles, from the Faust estate. The studio has been occupied by the Bull's Eye Comedy Company.

Petition in Bankruptcy.

The Master Craft Photoplay Corporation, which has a plant on the edge of Middlesex Falls, Medford, Mass., has been petitioned into bankruptcy by three creditors. They are Raymond L. Cleveland, who has a claim of $20,000 for money said to have been advanced and services rendered; Gladys L. Cleveland, who claims $675 for services, and Warren P. Jackson, of Westboro, who asks $300 for legal services.

Jack and Harry Cohn Take Over Production of "Hall Room" Films

JACK AND HARRY COHN, producers of the Hall Room Boys comedies, announce that hereafter they will produce as well as distribute this series independently. They will also organize two other production units for other short subjects. However, the Hall Room Boys will continue to be the principal offering.

A studio in Hollywood, Cal., has been secured, and Harry Cohn will be in general supervision. Henry Bergman, formerly of the vaudeville team of Clark and Bergman, has been appointed general director of production, while Al Nathan, formerly manager of the Broadway Theatre, New York, has been made studio manager. The Hall Room Boys comedies have heretofore been made by the National Film Corporation. However, the contract has expired and the Cohns announce on account of the great success of the series, they have decided to produce these pictures themselves.

Jack Cohn, in charge of the New York office, says: We have determined that this series, shall, through merit and wholesomeness, become one of the most successful in the field. Though still young, compared with other brands, it has already proved a great success. During the coming year, the series will be built around the best stories obtainable, with original comedy situations featuring Neeley Edwards, the boy with the winning smile, in the role of Percy Hall Room. He will be given the support of the most talented company of comedians that can be secured. Beautiful girls, elegant settings, skillful direction and good photography, are to be the features of forthcoming releases.

Grey Tells of Making First Psychic Serial

SUCCESSFUL makers of serials must get a lap ahead in the race for new ideas," says John W. Grey, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc. As pathfinders of serials we are putting over the first psychic serial.

"Today, in addition to being authors and producers of your own story, one must have the gift of feeling the public pulse and getting the jump on its changing moods before any one else can do so. I use the words 'pathfinders of serials' purposely for Arthur B. Reeve and I have been connected closely with nearly all the big serials and a large number of new ideas have emanated from us. Mr. Reeve's 'Exploits of Elaine,' made science familiar to the screen. At the time everyone said 'You can't get it over.' But it went over so big that many serials since have had a scientific angle. 'Elaine' was a new departure, not only in type of story, but it was the first serial booked for weekly release.

"What 'Elaine' did for physical science our new serial, "The Mystery Mind," will do for psychic science. While we have woven a love and adventure story our dominant theme, hypnotism, has been treated seriously and scientifically. As pathfinders we are breaking another new road for the cinema serial. We have become psychopath-finders."

Marguerite Marsh Feature Being Cut and Assembled

HARRY GROSSMAN, president of Grossman Pictures, Inc., announces "Face to Face", the first of a series of eight features starring Marguerite Marsh, is now being cut and assembled at the studio in Ithaca, and will be ready for screening within a week.

It is said to be a picture with wonderful exterior and interior scenes, combined with an interesting story of an entirely different kind from the usual run of pictures.

Mr. Grossman is working out elaborate plans for production of the remainder of the series. "Our project is due to a determination to do our bit to fulfil the demand for better pictures. We realize a star is one of the essentials and were fortunate in securing Miss Marsh for "Face to Face." Three more stories have been accepted and are now being made ready for the screen. We expect to release the pictures one every six weeks.

A trade showing will be announced shortly, to which representative exhibitors will be invited.

Kremer to Have Exchange; Ira H. Simmons in Charge

VICTOR KREMER will open an exchange in the same building as his executive offices, at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, to distribute the Kremer-Chaplin reissues in New York and northern New Jersey. It will be known as the New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc.

Ira H. Simmons has been appointed general manager of the exchange and will be assisted by a corps of high class salesmen, who will assist exhibitors in the exploitation of the Chaplin productions. Mr. Simmons has for ten years been actively associated with the film industry. Recently he handled Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" for New York and New England states, and prior to that was special representative for the New York First National Exchange.

More Sales on Hank Mann.

The Arrow Film Corporation reports the sale of the Hank Mann two-reel comedies for New England to Sam Grand of the Arrow Film Company, 48 Piedmont street, Boston, and for Michigan to Arthur B. Hyman Attractions, Film Building, Detroit. Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin territory has also been sold.

This is said to about complete all territorial rights on this series.

Thirteen Years in the Film Field Is the Record of Joseph A. Golden

PROMINENT among serial directors is Joseph A. Golden, author and director of the new Allgood serial, "The Whirlwind," starring Charles Hutchinson. He has been writing and directing serials and features for more than thirteen years. His entree into the film field was with the old Biograph, for whom he wrote and directed pictures for more than a year.

One of Mr. Golden's first successes was "Monte Cristo" from the famous stage play of the same title, which was a one-reeler. Later, he produced the same picture for Famous Players in seven reels.

Among the stars Mr. Golden has directed are Nat Goodwin, Blanche Walsh, James O'Neill, Helen Ware, Julia Dean, John Mason, Holbrook Blinn, and others well known to the stage and screen. Mr. Golden also wrote and directed "The Great Gamble," a successful serial distributed by Pathe. He also made the "Wolves of Kultur" serial, as well as "The Libertine," Redemption" and "Would You Forgive" feature productions.

"'The Whirlwind,' says Mr. Golden, "I believe to be my best serial as the thrills I thought big in my former serials seem commonplace beside those in 'The Whirlwind'. Charles Hutchinson is a star of an unusual type, he is fearless and possesses nerves of steel. With such a star, plus a fascinating story and well rounded cast, no exhibitor can fail of success if he will make use of the showmanship helps in our great twenty-eight page exploitation book prepared by one of the foremost experts in the film industry."

Six Road Shows for "Carmen" Burlesque

VICTOR KREMER now has under the direction of Ira H. Simmons, manager of the new Kremer exchange in New York, six companies in rehearsal for road shows for "A Burlesque on Carmen." Each company will comprise three principals, two singers, a premiere dancer and a chorus of six girls.

The entertainment will be in the nature of a travesty on the opera "Carmen," with a jazz version of the song "Carmen," specially written.

The show will open in Albany during the latter part of this month. Following this, five other companies will start on tour.

In connection with the booking of the Chaplin attraction will be an exploitation campaign. Several novelties are now being prepared, prominent among which is a press book, dealing entirely with the stage presentation.

Pioneer Laying Plans for Spring Campaign

ACTIVE preparations are being made by Pioneer Film Corporation for a campaign to bring the exhibitors into closer touch with the service the company is offering. Meetings will be held at the various Pioneer exchanges at a majority of which M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the company, will be present.

"Exhibitors will be invited to attend these meetings and express their views as to the ways and means of making the company a greater force behind the exhibitor, without impairing the freedom of action of the individual theatre operator," says an official of the company.

Special service departments will be installed to work with the exhibitor. This plan has already been tried in some of the exchanges and is meeting with great success. This service will be gratuitous.

Mr. Hoffman announces that Pioneer in calling these meetings desires to learn at first hand the kind of pictures, and the kind of service the exhibitor desires to assist him in increasing his profits and rendering better service to his patrons.

National Now Completing "The Kentucky Colonel"

THE National Film Corporation of America first 1920 production, "The Kentucky Colonel," will be completed before February 1, according to William A. Seiter, director, who will commence at once on cutting the picture. Over 67,000 feet of negative are said to have been exposed for this picture, which is a screen adaptation of Opie Read's novel of the same title. The picture will be ready for its first New York preview about March 1, states Mr Joe Brandt, the National's eastern representative.

Reissue of "Tillie" Film Features Five Funmakers

MACK SENNETT once replied to a group of prominent film men on being questioned regarding what in his opinion was the greatest comedy he had ever produced: "Tillie's Punctured Romance"

This production is claimed to contain every element for a successful comedy feature. There is a story that is sufficient in itself. And the cast of five prominent comedians, Charles Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mable Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain, all contribute to bring out the comical situations.

"This production," says an official of Tower Film Corporation, "has been advertising itself from its first showing, and each successive performance has boosted its reputation. A revival of 'Tillie's Punctured Romance' will bring crowds to the theatres that run it. It is a masterpiece that those who see will want to see again."

Much Interest Aroused by Latest Abramson Picture

REQUESTS from exhibitors regarding week-stands and runs, and also inquiries from many state right buyers regarding territory, are reported by the Graphic Film Corporation, regarding Ivan Abramson's latest production, "A Child for Sale," which is promised for release February 15.

In order to reap the benefit of the publicity carried in newspapers throughout the country in connection with an instance which is similar to the one on which this production is founded, and which by a coincidence occurred just after the scenario for this picture was completed, an attractive twenty-four sheet has been prepared and will soon make its appearance on the billboards in New York City.

A campaign book is also being prepared which will lay particular stress on the excellent cast, consisting of Gladys Leslie and Creighton Hale, supported by Bobby Connelly, Julia Swayne Gordon, Anna Lehr, William Davidson, William Tooker and William Bechtel.

Annette Kellerman's Lead Will Be Wheeler Oakman

SOL LESSER, who is producing a series of productions featuring Annette Kellerman, announces the engagement of Wheeler Oakman as her leading man. Wheeler Oakman first attracted attention for his work as the "Broncho Kid" in "The Spoilers," and later appeared in such successes as "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Mickey," "Betrayed," and others.

The Kellerman story was written by Bernard McConville, and is being directed by Chet Franklin at the Brunton Studios, Hollywood. The pictures will be distributed by Sol Lesser.

South Likes "Lord Helpus."

Tower Film Corporation reports receipt of another statement similar to several received recently from exchanges who are handling former title, "Cruel, Cruel Love," which they are now releasing on the Independent Market.

K. & R. Film Co. of Atlanta, Ga., who control their single reel Charlie Chaplin special, "Lord Helpus," for the southern territory to Tower Film Corporation, state that it is being received with enthusiasm, and is proving a big success.

Dorothy Dalton Trains for Stage While Rehearsing for the Screen

By Edward Weitzel

THIS is the second day of the big blizzard, so cold weather stories should be right in line. Dorothy Dalton, one of the trio of stars who is making pictures by day and stage appearances by night, was the heroine of an encounter for art's sake with a combination of fallen temperature and falling rain while at work that would have dampened the ardor of anyone but a true artiste. Sitting inside of the two screens which form her temporary dressing room on the stage of the Famous Players studio she unfolded the tragic tale with deep feeeling and excellent dramatic effect.

"The aeriferous but gorgeous gowns designed by Percy Anderson"

The Blonde Enchantress.
Dorothy Dalton as Chrysis of Galilee in "Aphrodite," at the Century.

"It was at Fort Lee among the Jersey pines," she began, "that I got my first taste of winter as related to posing for the screen. Fresh from the West Coast I contemplated the making of a picture last fall here in New York as I would the same experience in Los Angeles. But I reckoned without the rise and fall of the barometer over in Jersey, where the exteriors were to be shot."

"You don't like cold weather then, Miss Dalton?"

"Oh, yes, I love it—when it's just cold enough to give one an excuse for wearing handsome winter furs."

A Question of Atmosphere.

"What do they do in Southern California—wear 'em without an excuse?"

"Yes—and without a blush. The day before my adventure with iced atmosphere the director remarked to me in a matter-of-fact tone, 'If it's a clear day tomorrow we'll take that rain scene.' Snug and warm in my new furs I smiled sweetly and replied thoughtlessly, 'That will be nice!' That rain scene, according to the scenario was a summer storm and nothing was said about heating the water with which I was to be soaked. The next morning was clear all right—clear, and about twenty degrees colder. 'Just the day for a movie rainstorm,' my director declared enthusiastically, when I reached the studio."

"Why didn't you refuse to go ahead with the scene?"

"Because," replied Miss Dalton, looking at me quite seriously for a second, "moving picture stars are like good soldiers: they always obey orders."

"But, if it's a question of health"—

"Always obey orders is the second Golden Rule of our profession; the first is always keep healthy," answered the actress lady who is now putting in her night and matinee days as the blonde enchantress Chrysis of Galilee, in 'Aphrodite' at the Century Theatre on Central Park West, and wearing with such unconscious ease and grace the aeriferous but gorgeous gowns designed by Percy Anderson.

Rehearsing a Rain Storm.

"But that day when the sun shone and the rain came down: there was not a cloud in the sky as you crossed the Hudson on the Fort Lee ferry, I take it?"

"Not one! But there was a property man with a garden hose waiting for me and an unlimited supply of water and a director to see that I was thoroughly drenched."

"So that's the way a screen shower is made?"

"One-person showers, yes."

"How do you manage it when you want to soak a crowd or a few hundred feet of landscape?"

"Ring up the fire department."

"How cold was it that day?"

"Down to the freezing point."

I tried to look as if I believed this, but realized that I was not making a brilliant success of the attempt and took refuge in the original remark.

"Really?"

Miss Dalton's tone soon convinced me that she was in earnest.

"The property man stood so that the rain he was making soaked the ground under his feet and he had to keep stepping to prevent being frozen to the spot," she said.

"How about you?"

"I had to stand still and take it, and an icicle formed on the end of my tam-o-shanter."

"What did they do with you—get a crowbar and pry you loose?"

"That wasn't quite necessary; but it was the coldest reception I've ever received as an actress. I was telling McKay Morris about it one night while we were rehearsing 'Aphrodite.' The stage wasn't very warm, and he laughed and suggested that the experience would be splendid training for my appearance as Chrysis."

"He referred?—

"To the elaborate scantiness of my costumes."

Teaching an Actress Her Business.

"Has anyone told you how much taller you look on the stage than you are in reality and that the same thing is true about you on the screen?"

"No, but it's nice of you to say so."

"How did you feel the first night you walked out on the Century stage."

"Like a fly on the head of a bass drum. It was so different from screen acting, to face that packed theatre and hear the sound of my own voice."

"Weren't you amused to read in the papers that a movie actress with little or no stage training was the hit of the cast?"

"Why?"

"Because no woman without the necessary experience behind the footlights could have trod the boards so confidently and so skillfully kept her voice at the proper pitch; both of which things you did. Your training may have been intensive but it was in the right school."

"You mean, a stock company," said Miss Dalton: "Yes, that is where I got my early training in acting. Playing leads with an organization which changes the bill every week and appearing as Juliet, Young Mrs. Winthrop, the heroine in 'Paid in Full' and Camille successively either teaches an actress her business or opens her eyes to the painful truth that she has mistaken her calling. I'm not going to say how long I acted in stock, but I did my bit and received an honorable discharge."

Dorothy in Warm Weather Garb.

"I was sure of it. Now tell me something about the picture you are rehearsing."

"Barrie's 'Half an Hour'—I'm delighted with it! The story is so true to life and so dramatic. Come and watch us rehearse this next scene. It's the one where the young wife has learned that the man she has promised to elope with has been run over and killed and the poor woman dare not betray her real feelings."

Moore, of Washington, Attends Meeting of Circuit Executives in New York

TOM MOORE, the well-known exhibitor and owner of five theatres in Washington, D. C., arrived in New York on Sunday, February 8, to attend a meeting of the executive officers of the First National and to close some booking deals for the ensuing year. Mr. Moore has just recovered from a severe attack of the influenza, which laid him up for ten days. It was his intention to remain in New York until February 11 and then proceed to Pinehurst and St. Augustine to recuperate. The business of the First National was so urgent he was obliged to remain until the 16th. Mr. Moore will break ground this spring at Fourteenth street and Park Road, Washington, for the erection of the Parkway Theatre, seating 2,200 and for another in the southeast section of that city to seat 1,400. These two additional theatres will increase his holdings in Washington to seven houses.

Mr. Moore believes the percentage plan of bookings is becoming more popular every day, particularly with super-special films like "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female," etc. He says he ran "The Miracle Man" for four weeks and expects to run "In Old Kentucky" for six weeks. He is arranging for a special stage setting, a colored jazz band and a big exploitation campaign that is unequaled in novelty and sensational effect.

"The past year has been a record breaker for Washington," said Mr. Moore, "and I predict, after talking with many Washington public officials, that 1920 will be the biggest year of prosperity the moving picture industry has ever had.

"The production of too many Bolshevik pictures needs close watching. It is a dangerous subject to picturize. In many cases the intention is good, but should there be anything in the beginning of the picture to antagonize one's Americanism or arouse it, that element will walk out disgusted without waiting to see the finish. From conversation I have had with public officials I am afraid it is a delicate subject and apt to bring federal censorship upon the industry."

Mr. Moore is the franchise holder of the First National in District of Columbia, Delaware and Maryland, and gradually is co-operating with other exhibitors in his territory to extend the First National service to their adventage.

Victory Theatre Opens at Kokomo with Martin F. Gruenewald Manager

THE new Victory Theatre at Kokomo, Ind., one of a chain of five motion picture theatres owned and operated by the Victory Theatre Company of Fort Wayne, was formally opened on Monday, February 2, with "My Husband's Other Wife" as the chief attraction. The premier offering was attended by capacity crowds.

The new Victory has a seating capacity of 1,025 and is one of the best equipped theatres in the state. Extreme simplicity characterizes the decorative scheme of old rose and gold, giving the interior an inviting home-like air. The theatre's emblem, an embellshed golden "V," is much in evidence throughout.

There is no balcony, all the seats being on the ground floor, which slopes from the foyer to the proscenium in such a way that a clear view of the stage may be had from any section of the theatre. The lobby has a width of twenty-six feet and a depth of fourteen. To the right of the entrance are three richly furnished rooms, a rest room, dressing room and a retiring room.

Has Expensive Pipe Organ.

The structure was also designed to meet every requirement of safety, sanitation and ventilation. There are ten accessible exits and all doors are of the "panic" type. The projection room is equipped with two of the latest projecting machines and a spotlight. A pipe organ, said to have been installed at a cost of $10,000, is a feature.

The Victory Theatre Company's general manager is F. G. Heller of Fort Wayne. The other theatres owned by the company are the Fisher Theatre of Danville, Ill.; the Meridian and Starland theatres of Anderson, and the Washington Theatre of Richmond. Martin F. Gruenewald, formerly manager of the Washington at Richmond, has been appointed manager of the new Victory. He is one of the most aggressive exhibitors in the state.

Producers to Invade Hawaii.

A quarter of a million dollar film producing organization is being promoted in Los Angeles for the purpose of producing pictures on a large scale in the Hawaiian Islands. Director William Chaudet is handling the negotiations for taking an entire film colony across the Pacific to do a series of pictures with the islands as a locale, and the stories to be woven around the spirit of the South Seas, but with up-to-date themes.

Judge at Murder Trial Bars Films Depicting Story of the Defendant

THE trial of Mrs. Gertrude Wilson, accused of the murder of Charles Brown, at Marysville, Cal., which has been attracting much attention on the Pacific Coast, has come into even greater prominence through the efforts to introduce moving pictures as evidence. These pictures were made by the defense at the actual scene of the shooting with the assistance of eye-witnesses.

Judge Ernest Weyand permitted the pictures to be shown in court, but had the jury excluded at the time, as well as during the entire half-day given over to arguments for and against their introduction as evidence. He later rendered a ruling against the admission of the film, expressing the opinion that such evidence might tend unduly to sway the jury by its dramatic effect, as well as set a dangerous precedent.

The defense contended that the film showed the occurrence in the exact manner in which it happened and that in no other way could it properly be described. It set forth that twelve men in the jury box from twelve separate mental pictures from spoken testimony, some of which must be inaccurate, while the testimony of an eye-witness in moving picture form would give one clear impression.

Judge Weyand's Opinion.

In giving his decision to refuse the admission of the films as evidence, Judge Weyand spoke at considerable length and went into the matter in detail, stating that he realized that the proposition was a novel and very important one. He quoted authorities on the use of photographs and expressed an opinion that if "juries are naturally prone to accept them as absolutely correct," as is asserted in "Moore on Facts," this would be even more so in regard to moving pictures.

He also directed attention to the fact that an actor always places special stress upon his attempted reproduction of the alleged acts of the person he represents, and suggested that since the actor in the film in question who represented the murdered man had never seen the original, his natural tendencies would be to overact the picture in favor of the side whose version was taken as a guide.

He expressed an opinion that moving pictures had their place in courts as evidence and went into detail outlining the possible use of these. In part he said:

When They May Be Used.

"It is highly proper to use a moving picture in aid of any disputed issue in court in an attempt to have clear and truthful mental picture of the incident under investigation in order to have it clearly and firmly impressed on the minds of the court and jury. Any court that would refuse to allow the moving picture as evidence in such a case would, in my judgment, be committing a reversible error.

"I may give some instances where I think it would be proper: Suppose the method of operation of some mechanical contrivance should be the subject of dispute, and it would be impracticable to show the actual operation of the contrivance to the court and jury; in my judgment, moving pictures that would fully show such operation should be received. Assume that the operator of a moving picture machine were taking a picture on the street showing the movements of men or machines and other movable objects, and an altercation or accident should happen within the scope of the machine, and thereafter the incident become the subject of legal inquiry; it would be gross error to refuse the introduction of the moving picture, if proven to have been honestly taken.

Pictures the Best Evidence.

"I am informed that during a recent strike a moving picture machine was stationed in a secreted position and was made to photograph the actual movements of the strikers. Were this strike or the question as to who may have participated therein or the actions of the several participants to become the subject of judicial inquiry, a picture of the persons, their acts and movements so taken would be the very best evidence in such investigation.

"A picture showing the actual progress of a fire or a flood, or showing the action of a windstorm, should be received when it can illustrate any disputed issue or fact. In all these instances it will be noted that the direct fact in issue is shown in the picture."

Judge Weyand stated that if the question at issue in the trial in progress was, "Could the homicide have so happened," the use of moving pictures would have been permissible, but that this was not the real matter in dispute.

"Live Sparks" Adds to Kerrigan's Popularity

THE volume of contract business received at the Hodkinson home office on "Live Sparks," J. Warren Kerrigan's newest release, is further evidence that the magnetic star is riding on a high wave of popularity and seems to bear out the statement of Robert Brunton, when the first print was shipped east from Los Angeles, that "Live Sparks" is the finest J. Warren Kerrigan production made under Brunton auspices.

Though but three weeks have passed since the date of its release, several first-run theatres have enjoyed highly profitable engagements on the star's latest vehicle, which has already surpassed the spot-booking record on a Kerrigan picture achieved by "The Joyous Liar." Its snappy, attractive title, which "Live Sparks" lives up to in its every situation, is proving an invaluable aid in advertising and exploitation campaigns.

J. Warren Kerrigan believes in permitting his supporting players a fair share of the laurels. In "Live Sparks" such well known players as Fritzi Brunette, Joseph J. Dowling, Arthur Millette, Roy Laidlaw and John Steppling have something more to do than just helping the star to shine.

Pathé Will Shortly Release First of "Bringing Up Father" Comedies

THE unique combination of George McManus and his well known newspaper character, Mr. Jiggs, and the directing talent of Al Christie and Reggie Morris is disclosed in the announcement that Pathe Exchange, Inc., will shortly release the first of a series of two-reel comedies launched under the auspices of the International Film Service. "Bringing Up Father" is the general title of the series, based on the famous comic creation of McManus, familiar to almost every newspaper reader in the country.

The first comedy of the series has been completed under the personal direction of Mr. Christie, and full releasing details will be made known in the near future. They will be issued at the rate of one a month after the initial release. International is backing the series with the entire force of its entire publicity organization, and the newspaper feature will contain announcements of the screen comedies.

Johnny Ray Plays Jiggs.

Playing the role of Jiggs is Johnny Ray, who has played in vaudeville and who has enjoyed a big popularity for twenty years. Maggie is played by Margaret Fitz Roy, also a legitimate and vaudeville player before her first appearance in pictures several years ago. The daughter is played by Laura La Plante, who was selected from the ranks of Christie film follies girls.

In addition to the personal services of Al Christie, Reggie Morris will give his constant personal attenton to the comedies. He was for a long time associated with Mack Sennett and directed many of the biggest comedy successes. Aside from his experience with Sennett, Morris has had a long career as a creator of screen comedies, and big results are looked for from him.

"International could have made no more popular selection of a type of comedy to put into a screen version. I believe there is scarcely a newspaper reader in the United States who is not familiar with Jiggs and Maggie and their beautiful daughter," announces Mr. Christie. Rafferty and Dinty Moore, the outlawed friends of Jiggs, are in the pictures, too. The success of the cartoons and the success of the motion picture should rest upon the fact that the characters are essentially human people. The things they do are not caricatures. They are real human incidents, which every one knows and can understand.

"We have made a study of the McManus cartoons and have based the plot of the first of these two-reel comedies on a combination of four humorous incidents embodied in several of the original comic strips. When photoplay fans see the first of the 'Bringing Up Father' comedies on the screen they will recognize many happenings which they remember from the newspapers."

Large Sum to Be Spent Remodeling Princess

W. W. WATTS, of Springfield, Ill., plans to spend considerable money in remodeling the Princess Theatre, which he recently took over. The entire second floor of the building will be taken out to admit a new balcony which will seat about 500 The lower floor will be extended thirty feet and dropped thirty-two inches which will permit the installation of about 400 more seats. This will make the Princess the largest seating capacity theatre in the city, exceeding the Gaiety, Watts' other big house.

The new lobby will be in the north end of the building. The box office will be moved out to the edge of the sidewalk and the entrance on Capitol avenue will be discontinued. Exits will be installed on that side. A new canopy will be installed over the main entrance. Mr. Watts plans to go over the house from top to bottom and expects to make it the most beautiful theatre in Central Illinois. Mr. Watts' lease on the Princess is a long one. A large orchestra and a new pipe organ will be installed.

Mr. Watts will also take possession of the Lyric on July 1, and will immediately begin remodeling and altering it. It will be ready for opening on Labor Day.

In the near future the Gaiety will also be remodeled and the seating capacity increased.

Ince Buys Three Stories for Early Production

WORD comes from Thomas H. Ince that three new stories representing the best and most popular works of three prominent authors have been purchased as screen vehicles for Ince stars. "The Counterfeit," by H. B. Daniel; "The Incubus," by Marjorie Benton Cooke, and "An Adventurous Day," by Stella Wynne Herron, are the stories purchased by Mr. Ince and scheduled for production at an early date.

In the language of the trade, "The Counterfeit" is a first class "crook story," replete with thrills, mystery and intrigue. H. B. Daniel, well and favorably known for his stories of the underworld, has injected dramatic intensity into an altogether plausible plot which is said to hold the interest from beginning to end.

"The Incubus" has been read in book form by millions of persons. It is considered the most convincing piece from the versatile pen of Marjorie Benton Cooke. Stella Wynne Herron, author of "An Adventurous Day" needs no introduction to readers. Her works have found popularity in 'Pictorial Review,' 'Woman's Home Companion' and other leading magazines. During a contest for short stories held by Collier's Magazine, Miss Herron contributed the prize-winning script. Her work received the personal compliments of the late Theodore Roosevelt.

All-Star Hodkinson Film Blends Humor and Drama

COMEDY and drama have a merry time of it battling for the upper hand throughout "His Temporary Wife," Joseph Levering's screen adaptation of Robert Ames Bennet's popular magazine story, prints of which have just been received at all Hodkinson branches.

With an all-star cast, including Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton, one might be led to believe that comedy would be out of place among such acknowledged exponents of the serious side of theatricals. Yet lively, original humor has no small part in the proceedings, with the famed dramatic artists demonstrating that it is no harder for them to convulse audiences than it is to provoke them to sighs and sniffles.

W. T. Carleton, famous as a character artist, wins many a laugh in a sickroom scene. Mary Boland, now appearing in Booth Tarkington's big stage success, "Clarence," and Armand Cortes also flash some delightful comedy.

Eminent Players with Doris Kenyon.

Two notable women of the stage have a hand in Doris Kenyon's new Deitrich-Beck production, "The Harvest Moon," by Augustus Thomas, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, Theodore C. Deitrich, co-producer, having enlisted the services of Mrs. E. M. Holland, widow of the famous character actor of another generation, and Ellen Olesen, the famous Swedish actress.

Mrs. Holland was herself a player of prominence and often appeared in support of her illustrious husband. The swedish celebrity triumphed for years as the star, of plays produced at the Royal Opera House, Stockholm. Both appear in the Normandy scenes of the Augustus Thomas story.

Mayer Signs Ward Crane.

Louis B. Mayer has signed Ward Crane to play the leading role in support of Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon," which is being directed by Edward Jose. Mr. Crane's recent screen appearances have been in main roles in Allan Dwan productions. In "The Yellow Typhoon," which is a dramatization of Harold MacGrath's Saturday Evening Post serial, he will have the part of the young naval lieutenant and will fall irretrievably in love with Miss Stewart, finally winning her in the end, as a good hero should.

Stage and More Offices Going Up at Metro's West Coast Studios

FIRST steps toward the enlargement of the Metro studios in Hollywood and the general expansion of Metro facilities following the visit to the Pacific Coast plant by Marcus Loew and Richard A. Rowland were taken when the work was commenced on the construction of an enclosed stage to cost $45,000.

Word of this undertaking that reached the Metro home office in the Longacre Building brought with it the announcement that Mr. Rowland, Metro's president, has also authorized the early erection of additional executive offices costing many thousands more to house increased forces in every department of the great western production plant.

The Metro chief executive sends word that the new stage will be 90 by 150 feet, with 20-foot wings on each side, and will duplicate in dimensions the largest of the present structures on the ten-acre lot. There are two of these. These big stages, roofed over and skylighted, are used in the taking of interior scenes by artificial illumination.

Move Was for Self-preservation.

"I went into motion pictures for self-protection," said Mr. Loew. "Metro needed theatre affiliation and Loew's Inc., needed Metro, so that the union of our interests is mutually beneficial.

"Loew, Inc., was practically the last to invade both fields of the motion picture industry—exhibiting and producing. The past year I have seen new affiliations on every side. Exhibitors became film producers. Film producers acquired theatre interests. Studios and theatres co-ordinated. The producer was compelled to own a house in certain large cities to have his first run picture properly presented. The owner of theatres showing vaudeville or dramatic attractions had to buy picture houses and producing organizations to hold his own in his game. My move was simply one of self-preservation.

"I have watched Metro closely since Richard A. Rowland anounced his policy of 'fewer and better pictures,' and started spending three months on a production instead of five weeks," Mr. Loew continued. "The first pictures made by Screen Classics, Inc., impressed me with their beauty.

"Metro still retains its identity. Metro pictures will show in Loew houses. That is all that the affiliation means to the public.

Has Plans for Expansion.

"But it means to me that through my friend, Mr. Rowland, I will have a share in developing a powerful organization. I will leave the executive work to him.

"I plan for expansion of product. Metro will continue to make better pictures—but it will make more of them. As a releasing organization it will handle distribution of worthy productions made by individuals. It will sign more stars, and continue to buy screen rights to the cream of stage plays and novels. All that is up to Mr. Rowland.

"So Loew's, Inc., is now interested in picture production. I value the organization that is working for us. Yet I went into pictures in self-defense."

Mr. Rowland amplified Mr. Loew's statement by announcing the large expansion work to be gotten under way at once at the Metro studios.

"The new enclosed stage will provide room for four or five more companies if needed," he said, "and we are going to put up additional buildings to accommodate the greatly increased executive, directorial and clerical forces required by an enlarged producing organization.

"Metro's expansion is to be not only physical, but along the lines of creative motion picture art; we will acquire more and better literary material for our pictures."

To Produce in the East.

Immediate steps for studio expansion to permit additional producing units had been detailed in daily conferences between Metro executive officers and Mr. Loew. Six companies, headed by Bert Lytell, May Allison, Viola Dana, Emma Dunn, Alice Lake and a Screen Classics, Inc., all-star cast, are now working at the studio. The additional companies are not announced.

Production expansion will not be confined to the West, Mr. Rowland stated. M. P. Staulcup, studio supervisor of art interiors, has left the coast for New York to prepare Metro's Sixty-first street studios for productions.

Director General Maxwell Karger returned to Hollywood from a week's vacation in time to confer with Messrs. Loew and Rowland, and with W. E. Atkinson and Joseph W. Engel, respective general manager and treasurer of Metro. Mr. Karger will accompany Mr. Rowland East, continuing his vacation several weeks before beginning work. Mr. Atkinson will return to New York in three weeks. Mr. Engel will remain in charge of the western studios.

Marcus Loew will go to San Francisco to consult with his Pacific Coast general managers, Ackerman & Harris, returning to New York from there.

Reichert Joins Realart Forces.

Louis Reichert, for many years closely identified with the exchange business of the motion picture industry, has been appointed to assist Harry W. Willard, Chicago manager of Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Reichert has practically grown up with the motion picture business. As assistant to P. L. Waters during his regime as general manager of the General Film Company, he made the acquaintance of theatre owners and managers in every section of the country.

Previous to his connection with the General, Mr. Reichert was for three years manager of the San Francisco exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation, and has held other important posts in the trade.

William Fox Reports Heavy Business on Revivals of Six Super Pictures

NOTHING for some time has been so gratifying to the executives of Fox Film Corporation as have the reports received from all exchanges throughout the country as a result of the first days of the big national drive on the six super-production rivivals.

With very few exceptions these big feature pictures have been contracted for by the exchanges in every city in the country where the Fox company has an office, and many theatre men have closed by wire or mail from outlying points. This, in the estimation of the officials of the corporation, furnished absolute proof that the exhibitor today is a showman with a showman's appreciation of value and a showman's keen knowledge of merit.

These spectacular films, including "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Cleopartra," "Salome," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "The Honor System," have been given a new lease of life inspired by the activities of the producer's branch managers and the sincerity of the exploitation they have received through the advertising department of the company.

Six Press Sheets.

As aids in putting these already successful films over in proper manner, the producer has published six of the most attractive press sheets seen this season. The wealth of material contained in these is bound to aid in the exploitation of the production. There are one-sheets, three-sheets, six-sheets and twenty-fours that are designed on lines to compel the eye, and, according to the advertising department, the international fame of all the films makes it a simple matter to strike a common chord in laying out attractive paper for the productions.

With these accessories combined with the literary and artistic values of the six big specials, the Fox exchanges report more than 1,000 theatres already signed up for runs which vary in length from one day in smaller cities to a week in larger cities. In many theatres where the pictures have already been shown, they have proved as strong attractions as before.

For the purpose of creating renewed interest in "A Daughter of the Gods" the producer has sent out on an extended vaudeville tour a big girl-act. This act, while an extremely entertaining feature in itself, serves also to exploit "A Daughter of the Gods," in which the celebrated Annette Kellerman, most perfectly formed among women, is the featured actress.

Northcliffe's Agents Here.

Among the English film men now in America, of whom there are several representing different interests, W. G. Faulkner and Arthur Levey have come on an interesting mission. They are representing Lord Northcliffe, famous English politician and newspaper publisher.

Mr. Levey is known the world round as an exporter of films and Mr. Faulkner is the official Northcliffe representative. "We come," says Mr. Faulkner, "to create a better understanding between America and England through the medium of the motion picture."

This is not taken to indicate that Northcliffe is "going into pictures," rather it is believed that Northcliffe's interest is in seeing more English films sent to America for the purpose of enlarging upon the understanding of Englishmen and their coutry. Mr. Levey believes in the appeal of pictures to the masses and believes that Northcliffe will find a way to realize his purpose.

"What Does Lawrence, Kansas, Care?"

LIKE every "home town," Lawrence, Kan., is civically proud when one of the "home boys" goes out in the world, "hits the line" and kicks this old world for a goal. There may be many in Lawrence, Kan., who will read with gratification about Jerry Beatty's advancement.

Jerry, you know, has been writing newspaper advertisements for all the great stars that have put the "Famous" in Famous Players-Lasky. John Flinn was the "big boss" and Jerry was the "wheel horse"—and the two have set a shining mark in advertising and publicity the world over.

Between them these two newspaper men devised and executed the first really "nation-wide advertising campaign" filmdom ever boasted. Between them millions of tickets have been sold to Mr. and Mrs. Public—the world over.

Now "the bigger Boss" has advanced John Flinn to a place considerably higher up. And like a duck's foot fits into the mud, Jerry Beatty fits into the position vacated by John Flinn.

Lawrence, Kan., will be glad. And the scores of newspaper men who have worked with, under and around Jerry Beatty will be glad —and the legion of friends he has made on his way from Lawrence, Kan., to the position of director of publicity and advertising for Famous Players-Lasky will congratulate him.

For Jerry is a fine gentleman, capable and tested by the acid of long experience. Incidentally, who was it said corporations have no soul?

New Von Herberg House to Cost Full $2,000,000

THAT revised plans for the new Jensen and Von Herberg motion picture palace to be erected in Seattle, had run the prospective cost of the structure up to a full $2,000,000, was the statement of Manager J. Von Herberg when he returned to Seattle with his partner, Claude S. Jensen, after their month's business trip to New York City. The principal object of their eastern business trip was attendance at the First National Convention in Atlantic City, the convention re-electing Mr. Von Herberg a trustee and director of the new organization.

During their tour of the eastern cities, Managers Jensen and Von Herberg closely studied types of latest theatre construction with a view of incorporating everything in their new Seattle house that would tend to make it as complete and ornate as any photoplay house in America.

On their way to the West Coast the two managers stopped off in Yakima, Wash., to look over their new house, the Liberty, now well along toward completion. It will open not later than the first week in April. The seating capacity will be 1,100, and it will be equipped with a giant Wurlitzer organ and other high-class theatre appurtenances.

Mr. Von Herberg made arrangements for a picture franchise for his new Seattle house while in New York City.

St. Louis Simplex Agent Reports Heavy Business

ONE of the visitors to the Simplex plant was H. Wedemeyer, secretary of the Erker Brothers Optical Company, St. Louis, who holds the Simplex franchise for Missouri, northeastern Arkansas and several counties in Illinois. The Erker company was established in 1879 by the senior Mr. Erker in a small store on Olive street.

Today, besides the five-story building at 608 Olive street, a branch office does a large distributing optical and motion picture accessories business at Grand avenue, which is located outside of the business section and which is operated under the management of Robert Bausch of the well known optical family of that name.

The entire third floor of the Olive street building is devoted to motion picture accessories and it is here that the Simplex exhibit may be viewed at all times. This department is under the supervision of H. G. Lihou.

"Who's Your Servant?" Has Big Exploitation Value

IN "Who's Your Servant?" the special by Julian Johnson and founded on the play that startled New York when acted by Holbrook Blinn at the Princess Theatre, Robertson-Cole announces that it has a film which has been backed by some of the biggest men in police circles in the United States

In addition to the indorsement of high police officials, newspaper men whose heads have turned gray solving murder tangles have seen the picture and declare it to be one of the most realistic, fascinating melodramatic photodrama of the times.

"Who's Your Servant?" will shortly be released as a Robertson-Cole special and is heralded as a picture that has a large number of exploitation possibilities. Questions which deal directly with the homes and that society must face and conquer as depicted in "Who's Your Servant?" will undoubtedly flood every theatre that plays the production.

Robertson-Cole officials know the advertising and exploitation value of this production and are leaving no stone unturned to give the exhibitor every aid possible. To date more than twenty-five accessories have been prepared and are being given widespread circulation.

Bray Color Cartoon Is Distinct Screen Novelty

THE heralded novelty in the shape of a color cartoon has at last arrived on the screen. And as in similar instances of cartoon progress, J. R. Bray is actively concerned with its origin and debut.

An amusing subject has been chosen for the launching of the color cartoon, which comprises an important event in the life of a kitten, when he finds out that the winning of cheers is not quite as easy as it looks to be. It all happens on the day when his papa decides that his son and heir is big enough to learn to catch mice, and papa demonstrates how easy it is to just sit quietly at a hole and watch for Mr. Mouse to appear, and then grab him neatly between both paws. The kitten left to shift for himself attempts to follow in his father's footsteps, and it is then that he discovers that the neat little trick of nabbing the mouse is one of the most difficult that has yet come into his young life. After several futile attempts to catch the mouse he breaks a pitcher, gets tangled in the family wash, and finally decides to try all over again. This time a rat substitutes for the expected mouse, the kitten meets his Waterloo, and ends up in the hospital, where he has sufficient time to digest "Father Tom on Mouse Catching."

The colors used in the cartoon are pastel shades in blues, reds, greys, etc. They do not interfere with the clarity of the picture, and render more attractive and life-like the improved methods of screen cartoons developed at the Bray studios.

This cartoon appears in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7023 released February 8.

Finger Prints and Screen Evolution Shown in Film

HOW the motion picture play had its humble start with the presentation of "Miss Jerry" on October 9, 1894, is told on the screen in the issue of the Paramount Magazine released February 15. "Miss Jerry" consisted of a series of stereopticon slides which, dissolving one into another, told a complete story on the screen. The creator of this innovation was Alexander Black, who is universally known today as the author of the stirring work, "The Great Desire."

The motion picture takes up the history of the screen from that time. The initial offering was reproduced by taking copies of "Miss Jerry" and by skillful photography producing the same effect as was attained by the original stereopticon slides.

On the twenty-fifth anniversary of "Miss Jerry's" debut Alexander Black received a letter from Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, congratulating him upon his initiative in having been the forerunner of a new art.

An explanation of the intricate system of classifying finger tips according to the Bertillon system is also a feature of this issue. Photographic records of New York's criminals at police headquarters have themselves been photographed for the screen for the first time. The authorization to make this picture was obtained exclusively by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Inspector Faurot, who is perhaps the world's most expert Bertillonist, took a keen interest in the making of the film and personally supervised many of the details. As the picture was being made a case came up that required Inspector Faurot to put into practice the Bertillon teachings on finger prints and the cameraman caught him at the work.

An animated drawing is used to explain the various methods of finger print classification.

Pathe Review Shows the Walled City of the Wasp

ONE of the most interesting features of the Pathe Review for February 22 is a study of the wasp by Raymond L. Ditmars in "The Walled Cities of Dixie," "A Study of Bugville."

As it is set forth on the screen it is hard to realize that such photographs could be made showing the intimate life of the insect. Their homes are built of mud, particle by particle. Thus the tiny walled cities rise—not for the builders, but for next year's wasps. Spiders are stored here as food for the coming generations; then the wasp deposits an egg and seals up the little home until next spring and the newly hatched wasp emerges, fat with much spider meat.

They used to have a story about magic powders that would do any bidding, but today the magic powder is called cement, torn in great chunks from the hillsides. This is viewed in "The Dust That Builds Cities," showing the process from when it is dumped into ponderous iron jaws that rend and crush, to the time, when after the grinding in mills that brings the rock to the consistency of milady's talcum, the cement is bagged.

This issue also contains a colored scenic, "The Mecca of France, Lourdes," where every year thousands of pilgrims come to seek healing for their ailments at the far-famed shrines. "Eight Hands vs. One Bounce" is the slow motion number, which is an analysis of the game of hand-ball. "The Native Dance of Hawaii" interpreted by Princess White Deer, who appeared in "Hitchy Koo 1919" is also one of the attractions of the Review.

U. S. Navy Exchange Signs for First National Films

SIMULTANEOUS with the opening of a film exchange by the United States Navy, Lieutenant Joseph O'Reilly contracted for the entire list of First National Exhibitors' Circuit releases which are at present being apportioned among the various crews of United States vessels.

The Navy distributing bureau has taken offices in the Brooklyn Navy Yard and practically every accoutrement of the average branch office has made the Navy Exchange a well systematized film post.

The Navy made this arrangement for their own exchange acting with officials of the First National home office direct. They will buy their own prints and each First National release will be a United States Navy feature.

Mountains and Hosiery in Next Ford-Goldwyn

THE next Ford-Goldwyn educational weekly contains two attractive subjects, the first of which gains its applause from its intrinsic beauty, rather than from any educational values

One More Use of the Airplane; and One More Service by the News Reel.
Showing the plane carrying the Fox News Reel cameraman who "shot" the Mt. Lassen volcano.

which it may possess. "In Higher Spheres" is the title of this picture which takes the spectator over snowy slopes and mountain heights, through wooded valleys, and past gushing waterfalls, in close contact with a party of mountain climbers who with their guides make careful progress over paths of danger and fascinating lure.

The natural beauty of these scenes is heightened by the splendid laboratory work evident in the tinting and toning of the picture. There is a suggestion of natural color in this film that is especially attractive.

The second subject on the reel shows the manufacture of silk hosiery and is called "Nines-and-a-Half." It is instructive, and gives a carefully detailed illustration of how women's silk hosiery is fashioned by modern machinery, each pair requiring 22,000 yards of raw silk to complete. Each stage through which the stockings pass is shown, closing with the sorting and pairing.

Modern Inventions Among Bray Pictograph Subjects

THE Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7026, released through the Goldwyn exchanges, presents an interesting group of subjects which are as follows:

"A Drink on the Fly," a series of interesting and unusual scenes showing how an engine takes in water while traveling at high speed. From the tender, a large scoop is lowered to the trough between the tracks. These troughs are about 1,500 feet long and are filled with special water intakes. The water is gulped up in eight or nine thousand gallon quantities by the great scoop without the train being delayed. Watering the engine in the old fashioned way necessitated a stop of from twenty to thirty minutes.

W. L. Finley, of the Oregon Fish and Game Commission, whose studies of animal life have been a feature of previous pictographs, photographed "A Bird City of the Pacific." The Bird City in question is populated by murres of all sizes. Little murres just out of the egg, partly grown murres and finally, intimate studies of full grown murres with their beautiful plumage, are pictured in this unusual film.

Film to Warn Against Speeding.

Moving pictures to be used by E. Austin Baughman, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles of the State of Maryland, to forcefully show the dangers of speeding to motor drivers and to impress upon the public that they must always use constant care. A scenario has been prepared by Commissioner Baughman, which has a plot and many graphic scenes depicting the dangers of speeding. It is his belief that the public generally can be more easily educated to this danger through the medium of moving pictures than in any other way.

The State of Maryland has no appropriation at present for taking care of the cost of making pictures, but money has been furnished for this enterprise by C. W. Galloway, Federal manager of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and John S. Bridges, president of the Automobile Club of Maryland.

Some of the evils to be covered in the film will include obscured tags, delayed purchase of tags, speeding, delayed registration, tags improperly fastened and children playing carelessly in the streets. Arrangements are now under way to film the scenario and it is to be shown all over the State of Maryland.

Public Health Film Used in Fighting Influenza

A VALUABLE public health film which was photographed in Duchess County, New York, in co-operation with the New York State Department of Health is entitled "An Equal Chance." This film, which is in two reels, presents the public health nurse and her work, and was directed by Carlyle Ellis, of Autograph Films, from a scenario by Gilbert Tucker and James Rorty.

The story of the film deals with conditions in Shirleyville Township, where, during the influenza epidemic of 1918 the inhabitants find themselves with only one doctor and no public health nurse. The overworked physician applies to the nursing association in a neighboring city, and a nurse is sent to help out the situation. The nurse points out the necessity for giving all the families in the district an equal chance in the emergency. As a result of her efforts the children in the country schools are taught health habits, and are given regular examinations by a doctor. Through the efforts of one of the nurse's admirers in the district the Healthmobile, showing motion pictures covering various branches of the subject, comes to Shirleyville, exhibiting the work of the public health nurse in open air schools for tuberculosis children, also work among the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians on the Wind River reservation in Wyoming, and among the negroes in Louisiana.

Besides the demonstration of bedside care, home instruction, and country school nursing which are woven into the body of the story, the "film within a film" makes it possible to include accurate representations of other branches of public health nursing, such as maternity care, infant welfare and tuberculosis.

The National Organization for Public Health Nursing, 156 Fifth avenue, New York City, has prints of this film for rent.

Chester Cameraman at Punta Arenas

Richard B. Holt, a C. L. Chester cameraman, has cabled his arrival at Punta Arenas, on the Strait of Magellan, at the southermost tip of South America. He left New York on December 20, 1919, and was six weeks making the journey. He will photograph the Indians of Tierra Del Fuego, who still use the bow and arrow, and the great flocks of penguin and herds of seal around Cape Horn, before proceeding to Elephant Island, a virgin field for the cameraman. It will be a difficult trip, but worth the effort for it offers many remarkable pictures, not the least of which is a volcanic crater bubbling with hot water almost on a level with the ice fields of the Antarctic Ocean.

Georgia Advertising Through Screen Medium

IT has been anounced at Washington, D. C., that motion pictures of many Georgia scenes will be used extensively by the government this year to show the opportunities that the Southern states offer to settlers, homeseekers and farmers. The development organizations of the South are co-operating with the government in the carrying on of this educational work through the medium of motion pictures.

One film to be used, for example, will portray Georgia as the third state in the Union in the production of hogs.

In various of the Southern states during the past year, including Georgia in particular, about 15,000 feet of films have been made illustrating farming and development work. These pictures are to be shown throughout the country at county and state fairs, conventions, grange gatherings, farmers' meetings, agricultural schools and colleges and other advantageous places where it is felt they will do the most good. One of the principal features of these pictures is the fact that they show what a vast amount of development work is really going on in the South that will result materially in increasing the food supplies of the nation and the world.

Land development operations shown on the screen include drainage of wet lands, clearing of cut-over lands, blowing up of stumps, ditching, road building, grading, plowing and cultivating with late model machinery, etc. In addition other pictures show model dairy farms and live stock farms throughout the South. They disclose the enormous yields of cotton, corn, velvet beans, grasses, sweet potatoes, sugar cane and other principal crops of the South.

A. W. Courtney with Interchurch.

A. W. Courtney, formerly of the reviewing staff of the Moving Picture World, has been appointed to the management of the service branch of the Motion Picture Division of the Interchurch World Movement.

Mr. Courtney is well equipped to handle the requirements of his new position, which has to do with the supplying of information to Protestant churches regarding motion pictures suitable for their purposes. To this end descriptions of suitable pictures are kept on file by the Interchurch, to be handed on where this information is especially required.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That the nation-wide church recognition that is gradually increasing in its support of the motion picture is well-illustrated by the decision of the Rev. Dr. Manley, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Chaumont, New York, to make motion picture evenings a regular feature of the church work. This decision was reached by Dr. Manley following a showing of "Daddy Long Legs," following which he has written to P. H. Smith, manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange at Buffalo, asking if it will be possible for him to show the latest Charlie Chaplin attractions at his church.

That Fox News No. 36 has a remarkable picture of the Sperry High Intensity searchlight in Brooklyn, taken at night in a blinding snowstorm. This light has a candlepower of one billion, and has been seen as far as 300 miles away. It is planned to construct a battery of 150 such instruments—which, according to astronomers, would produce a light equal to that given off by a star of the seventh magnitude, easily discernible as far away as Mars.

That the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has established a Non-Theatrical Motion Picture Division to supply a complete service covering every part of the United States.

That the Universal Screen Magazine No. 54 contains interesting scenes on the life and habits of the raccoon, the mink and the bear. It also shows some scenes in which the ferret betrays his peculiarities.

That Kinograms for February 9 has some excellent views of a hockey game at Chicago, photographed at night. The occasion is an ice carnival and festival. A match between Montreal curlers and the Brookline, Miss., Country Club also provides good screen material in this number.

That the February 9 Prizma release, "The Coolie," is one of the most attractive of travel pictures taken by means of the Prizma natural color method.

That the Fox News No. 37 revives memories of Abraham Lincoln by presenting relics that figured in the history of the martyred president. Among these are his home at Springfield, Ill., his tomb, a model of the log cabin in which he was born, his powder horn and the surveying instrument which he used when he was a deputy surveyor. Among the relics of his last hours are Ford's Theatre at Washington, where he was shot, and the red brick house opposite, where he died. The final view is the statue of Lincoln in Newark, N. J.

Amsterdam Opera House Now First-Class Studio

SEVERAL months ago the announcement was made that J. N. Naulty, general manager of the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, had completed arrangements to lease the Amsterdam Opera House at Ninth avenue and Forty-fourth street, New York, to be used as an additional studio. The upper, smaller stage was immediately prepared for work, but on account of existing leases it was impossible to use the lower stage until the first of the year.

Now, however, the balconies arranged in a tier around three-quarters of the room have been removed and the stage in the remaining end of the room has been dispensed with. This leaves a stage of 82 feet by 137 feet, and thirty-one feet high. The upper stage is 50 feet by 100 feet, with a height of twenty-four feet, which makes a combined floor space of 11,734 square feet.

Blank Declines Goldwyn Offer; to Build New House

A. H. BLANK has declined the offer from Goldwyn for an interest in his Des Moines holdings, he said this week. He prefers to keep the Des Moines field in the hands of Des Moines men.

Blank has reached no final decision on the proposed merger of his local interests with those of Abe Frankle, he says. The deal is quite likely to go through.

In any case, Blank plans to build a new house this year as a means of keeping out competitors. The site, leased by Frankle at Locust and Eighth streets, now occupied by the Royal and Majestic, will probably be used if the theatre is a joint venture of Blank and Frankle. Blank owns two other downtown sites.

Hearst News Reel Shows World at Play and Work

THE recent heavy snows in the East have given the news reels much material for interesting views. Hearst News No. 5 shows some fast bob-sledding contests at Huntington, L. I., during which an accident occurred in which many girls were injured.

Pershing is shown reviewing the troops at the Presidio, California. Another sidelight on the war is depicted in scenes of starving Vienna, where meat sells at $5 a pound. A parade of "war profiteers" in Vienna's "Fifth avenue," where the poor congregate to beg for food, is an interesting light on what is happening across the water. Racing at the Riviera, the famous French resort; fighting the seas with the coast guard at an Atlantic coast station; an "Indoor Sports" cartoon by Tad and several other items complete this reel.

Snowpath contests at Portland, Me., are a feature of International News No. 5, just released. Across the water in Davon, Switzerland, the cameraman also catches some winter views. Here an avalanche partly buried an Alpine village and scenes are shown in the "digging out."

Rialto and Rivoli Houses Add Fox News to Programs

PROOF that motion picture audiences appreciate quality in news reels is afforded by the constantly increasing number of contracts reaching the home office of Fox News of which William Fox is editor. All sections of the country join in praise of the twice-a-week news reel which presents on the screen interesting events from everywhere.

Among the latest theatres to handle Fox News are the Rialto and the Rivoli, both on Broadway, New York, under the management of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, one of the best-known exhibitors of motion pictures in the country. Dr. Riesenfeld, much impressed by the progressiveness and high photographic quality of Fox News, decided to add it to the programs of his two houses, which entertain many thousands of New Yorkers and visitors to the metropolis each week.

Contracts from foreign countries also are arriving in large numbers, showing that other nations are as keenly interested in what is going on in the world at large as are Americans.

Want More Stories Like "Empty Arms."

Lester Park and Edward Whiteside are so pleased with the story of "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane and directed by Frank Reicher, that they are willing to pay a large sum for another one like it. The contest is open to professionals only, and the only conditions the producers lay down are that the story must fit a woman star, lend itself to exploitation of an impressive order and be absolutely an original work. Magazine stories, published novels and produced plays are barred. The author of "Empty Arms" is Willard King Bradley.

Arthur B. Reeve
Who will produce a series of his Craig Kennedy stories for Goldwyn.

Arthur B. Reeve Signs with Goldwyn to Produce Craig Kennedy Stories

ARTHUR B. REEVE, creator of the famous Craig Kennedy, has signed a contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to produce feature photoplays based upon or adapted from the Craig Kennedy stories. According to the terms of the contract there will be four productions during the year beginning April 1, 1920. Goldwyn being the sole distributor. They will be known as Craig Kennedy Pictures.

In securing the screen versions of Mr. Reeve's renowned detective stories, Goldwyn has acquired one of the strongest drawing cards in the entire field of fiction. No author, either in this country or abroad, has, in recent years, created a similar character of such world-renown as Craig Kennedy, who started his career in 1910 in the Cosmopolitan Magazine where his adventures were followed by millions of readers.

In superintending the production of his stories, Mr. Reeve will profit by considerable practical experience in the making of photoplays in which he has been actively interested for the past six years. As far back as 1914-15 he collaborated with Charles W. Goddard on "The Exploits of Elaine," one of the early successful motion picture serials.

Although Mr. Reeve's first book was not published until 1912, he is such a prolific writer that in 1917 Harper & Bros. published an edition of his works filling twelve volumes, including "The Adventures of Craig Kennedy, Scientific Detective" as far as they had gone at that time. Other books numbered in the collection are "Social Gangster," "Ear in the Wall," "Treasure Train" and "The Terror."

In addition to his contributions to literature, Mr. Reeve found time to follow his "Exploits of Elaine" with other equally popular photoplay serials, "The Hidden Hand" and "The House of Hate," produced in collaboration with Charles A. Logue.

The arrangement with Goldwyn is such that Mr. Reeve will be afforded every facility for the production of notable features. The scientific element that did so much towards making the stories convincing in printed form will be preserved in the films, to be acted by a company of superior players.

Salisbury Field Joins De Mille.

Salisbury Field, noted author and playwright, recently joined the literary staff of Cecil B. De Mille and is now at work at the Lasky studio. His advent at the West Coast studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation marks his debut in the realm of the silent drama and his temporary desertion of the stage and magazine field.

For the next few months, Mr. Field will turn his attention to the task of mastering the art of scenario writing by following the production activities of Cecil B. De Mille on the latter's current Paramount-Artcraft special.

William Farnum's "The Adventurer" Is Scheduled for Early Release

THE second William Farnum triumph of 1920, "The Adventurer," which has been adjudged a record breaker for dramatic strength and popular appeal by those who saw the trade showings, will be released before the end of the month, it is announced by Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Farnum, one of the most magnetic and versatile of screen artists, adds another success to his rich collection by an exhibition of swordsmanship said to be peerless in motion picture annals. The dueling scenes—there are several memorable ones in the production—scintillate with a reality that cannot be questioned. The settings and the flawless photography serve to etch these scenes indelibly upon memory.

The Fox star enacts the role of a happy-go-lucky adventurer of noble birth, the Count Don Caeser de Bazan, penniless but dauntless. The story leads him through a brilliant series of episodes, sparkling with humanity and spiced with humor. His fate becomes entwined with that of a charming dancing girl, Maritana, played with admirable finesse by Estelle Taylor.

Has Beautiful Settings.

The staging is another tribute to the genius of J. Gordon Edwards, who has created many masterpieces under the Fox standard. The settings are lavish in their display of gorgeous effects, calculated to sate the most exacting appetite for beautiful background. At the same time delicate human touches of sheer simplicity abound in the production.

Aileen Griffith Deserting Comedy for Serious Roles

FROM the tragedy of Red Cross work to the comedy of screen farce has been the recent experience of Miss Aileen Griffith. During the last half of the Great War she was on duty with the American Army in France.

When Miss Griffith returned to this country at the close of hostilities, she entered the Fox company's "most beautiful girl" campaign. She was chosen as one of five hundred to take a screen test, and emerged from the ordeal as one of the eight young women selected to go to the Coast for work in Fox comedies.

Her contract having expired, Miss Griffith intends to enter upon dramatic work. her preference running strongly to the dramatic as against the lighter roles. Her friends believe her success in the latter department of screen work will be repeated in the interpretation of serious parts.

ZaSu Pitts in "Seeing It Through."

In "Seeing It Through," the latest Brentwood production for Robertson-Cole, ZaSu Pitts is seen in one of her pathetically humorous characterizations. There is something of the atmosphere of "The Old Curiosity Shop" in "Seeing It Through," which is bound to please the public and fill the theatre for the exhibitor who plays this feature, written and directed by Claude H. Mitchell.

Henry Woodward, who plays opposite Miss Pitts; Edwin Stevens, W. H. Bainbridge, Fannie Midgley and Frank Hayes, are the principals in an exceptional cast.

Sr. Selles Miro is making observations of the American market and can be reached at the Hotel America.

Now Mayon Ltda.

Ernest H. Mayer, president of the Corona Film Corporation, announces that his Argentinian affiliation, formerly A. C. Mayer (his brother) has changed the firm name to Mayon Limitada with a capital of 1,000,000 pesos. A. C. Mayer is expected in New York within the month, as he left Argentine sometimes ago and is at the present time in Italy. After about six weeks here he will again return to Europe before journeying back to Buenos Aires. There is also a possibility of E. H. Maher spending several months in Argentine within the next half year.

Gus Schlesinger Returns.

Gus Schlesinger, general manager of the film department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, returned to his desk Monday afternoon, February 9, after a ten-day sojourn to Atlantic City, much improved in health and the heavier by five pounds. When seen but an hour after his return from his vacation he was already imbedded in a deluge of work.

Goldstein Going to South America.

Louis Goldstein, until last week a popular member of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation staff, has resigned from the organization to undertake an independent film venture which entails a trip to Venezuela. Mr. Goldstein will doubtless make a statement to the trade before he sails.

Sameth Moves to Larger Quarters.

Joseph Sameth, general manager of the Forward Film Distributors, has moved down from the twenty-fourth floor of the World Tower Building to more commodious quarters on the twelfth floor of the same building. Mr. Sameth promises some interesting announcements in the near future.

Hammond "Flu" Victim.

Guy R. Hammond, export manager for the Kelwin Film Corporation, has been laid up with a severe attack of influenza. He has just returned to his desk after a confinement of two weeks. General Manager W. F. Kelly, however, announces that it will not delay Mr. Hammond's journey to Mexico and the West Indies, on which venture he will leave about March 1. In addition to these territories Mr. Hammond will very likely cover Central America and many points in South America before his return to the Kelwin offices.

Danziger Sails Again.

A. J. Danziger sailed February 7 on the Rotterdam for Europe. He intends to visit nearly all the old countries as well as the new republics and promises a story from Berlin. He can be addressed at the Hotel Kaiserhoff in the latter city.

Ben Howells in Europe.

Benjamin Howells, brother and personal representative to David P. Howells, the exporter, will have arrived in London by the time this article reaches the attention of its readers. He sailed on the Mauretania accompanied by his wife. Mr. Howells will spend an indefinite period in each of the three European Howells offices located at London, Paris and Stockholm. He also has other European metropolitan centers on his itinerary.

Russell on the Job.

David W. Russell is at the present time doing general exporting from a location near Brooklyn Bridge. He, however, has not deserted the film export field and devotes a part of his attention weekly to the film fraternity.

Cruz Blanco Ill.

Rafael Cruz Blanco, the Mexican buyer who has been making his quarters in the office of Joseph P. Lamy while visiting New York, is confined to his hotel through an attack of influenza. As he has not yet finished his buying, his return trip will be necessarily delayed.

Famous Players Get Option on St. Louis Theatre Site

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has obtained an option on the northwest corner of Seventh and Locust streets, St. Louis, and contemplates the erection of a combination moving picture theatre and office building. The purchase is said to have been $1,250,000. The site has a frontage of 127 feet on Locust street and 164 feet on Seventh street. F. L. Cornwall, local attorney for the corporation, said that a building of fifteen to eighteen stories is planned, to cost approximately $2,500,000. The site is now occupied by five-story office buildings.

Thomas E. Hughes, of Waukesha, who is said to be representing the Save Theatre interests of Milwaukee, is negotiating with the Waukesha Amusement Company for the purchase of the Colonial and Auditorium theatres. It is believed that the Colonial will be razed and a new theatre and hotel building built, at a cost of $1,500,000, if the deal goes through.

The Hostettler Motion Picture Corporation of Waterloo, Iowa, is said to be investigating the possibility of buying saloon properties in East Dubuque for theatre sites. This company controls theatres in Waterloo, Cedar Rapids and many of the small towns in between.

Representative A. H. Miles is back of a movement recently started to have a "community theatre" in Big Rapids, Mich. Half the stock necessary is said to have been subscribed. It is planned to have the theatre available for local organizations in the afternoon and to hold the film shows at night.

Pathe Announces Titles of Dempsey Serial Episodes

THE titles of the fifteen episodes of the new Pathe serial "Daredevil Jack," starring Jack Dempsey, have been decided upon by the scenario department of the Pathe organization and are announced to be as follows:

First episode, "The Mysterious Bracelets"; second episode, "The Ball of Death"; third episode, "Wheels of Fate"; fourth episode "Shanghaied"; fifth episode, "A Race for Glory"; sixth episode, "A Skirmish of Wits"; seventh episode, "A Blow in the Dark"; eight episode, "Blinding Hate"; ninth episode, "Phantoms of Treachery"; tenth episode, "Paths of Destruction"; eleventh episode, "Flames of Wrath"; twelvth episode, "The Unseen Menace"; thirteenth episode, "Baiting the Trap"; fourteenth episode, "Terrible Vengeance"; fifteenth episode, "The Triple Chase."

Williams on Way to Hollywood.

Earle Williams, who came East to make "The Fortune Hunter" and "Captain Swift," has started on his return trip to Hollywood, Cal. Before he begins a new feature at Vitagraph's West Coast studio he will make the final scenes for "Captain Swift," which happens to be a prologue. Edward Martindale, the only other actor who appears in both the prologue and the story proper, accompanied Mr. Williams. With the exception of the prologue all the scenes for "Captain Swift" were taken in the East. The prologue is laid in the bush country of Australia and could not be taken in the vicinity of New York at this time of the year. It is not likely that Mr. Williams will come East again for some time. His home is in California.

Lester Park Says World Is in Need of Such a Picture as "Empty Arms"

WHEN seen at the offices of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, producers of the forthcoming maternity and birth control picture, "Empty Arms," at 500 Fifth avenue, New York City, Mr. Park said:

"Coming at a time when the world is in dire need of just such a photoplay, 'Empty Arms' is destined to be carried across the continent on a wave of interest such as has been showered on but few pictures.

"While summarizing the amazing discoveries which we have made since this photoplay was evolved, we conservatively estimate that 'Empty Arms' starts out with a valuation of over $100,000, because of the interest with which the picture abounds.

"An investigation in many directions has been made by the advertising and exploitation experts of the company; interviews have been held with many important men and women in all walks of life; correspondence has been carried on with public officials, writers, noted lawyers, doctors and other professionals, with the result that a vast library of valuable data has been compiled—data which will serve to enable the exhibitor to derive the most value out of 'Empty Arms' when he runs it.

Not a Propaganda Film.

"'Empty Arms' is not a propaganda picture. It is, first of all, a picture vibrant with dramatic power, made with an excellent cast under capable direction. We do not believe in propaganda pictures—people do not go to the theatre to be preached to. They want a story. A powerful one is contained in 'Empty Arms.'

"Frank Reicher has splendidly handled the many delicate and extremely dramatic episodes of Willard King Bradley's story, and Gail Kane, Thurston Hall and J. Herbert Frank have given finished renditions of their respective roles. The supporting cast, including Irene Blackwell, Howard Truesdale, Warren Chandler, Beverly Bruce and the Princess Kelvah, is a strong one. A. Bela Viragh-Flower has given us some noteworthy artistic interiors, and the camera work of Harry Keepers and George Benoit leaves nothing to be desired."

Loew Books Semon Comedy.

Marcus Loew has booked Larry Semon's latest comedy, "The Grocery Clerk," in all his larger theatres in Greater New York. The bookings begin on Washington's Birthday.

Burr Makes Statement.

Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., 143 West Forty-fourth st., New York, in a statement, says that it has come to his attention that there are rumors regarding the personnel of Master Films, Inc. "For the information of all concerned," says Mr. Burr, "Master Films, Inc., was organized by myself in conjunction with the following men who are the directors of the corporation: E. J. Clode, book publisher; Sigfried Hart, manufacturer; Alexander Grosset, book publisher. Together we own the entire stock of the corporation, and at no time has anybody else been associated with us in the formation or the executive personnel of this firm."

Goldwyn Erects Big Cathedral Set for "Earth Bound" by Basil King

THE largest representation of a cathedral interior ever constructed on a motion picture stage is said to be that used in the Goldwyn picture "Earth Bound." Under the direction of Art Director Cedric Gibbons, his staff worked for weeks on the planning and construction of the big project, and when completed Mr. Gibbons challenged the most expert critic to point a flaw in the ensemble.

There are few stages besides the huge Goldwyn stage at Culver City large enough to accommodate so immense an interior construction as this cathedral. From the door up the long aisle to the rear wall is a distance of 240 feet. The width is nearly ninety feet. If the structure could have been carried on up proportionately to the dimensions of length and width, it would have been 150 feet from floor to arched roof.

The base of each of the massive columns is nearly five feet square and the same distance from floor to top of base. The pulpit rail is eleven feet from the floor. The seven-branched candlesticks are ten feet in height. From floor to top of altar and reredos is twenty-two feet, with a width of fifteen feet. The wainscot in the transept and baptistry is sixteen feet in height. The smaller pillars are thirty and the larger seventy feet high.

One of the most impressive features is the crucifix. The figure of Christ is nearly thirteen feet in height and is done in bas-relief, instead of the full figure. This design is exceedingly effective The figure, with the background, was designed and built at the studio, as were the crucifix, font, litany desk, pulpit and lectern.

"Earth Bound" is one of the Eminent Authors series and is from the pen of Basil King. T. Hayes Hunter directed the production.

Neilan Engages H. R. Symonds.

Marshall Neilan, whose first independent production, "The River's End," by James Oliver Curwood, will soon be ready for release, has engaged the services of Henry R. Symonds as director for Marshall Neilan Productions to fill the place left vacant by Victor Heerman, who recently went over to the Harry Garson Company to direct a special production.

Prospects for You, Mr. Exchange Man

MILLIONS seem to mean little in the film industry, so we are not presenting the accompanying figures on theatres with the hope of startling anyone, but rather with the idea of showing a few plain facts. After all, what is the sum of nineteen and a half millions? Not very much in stage money, that's a surety.

But these nineteen and a half millions are not weighed over the counter in "prop" money. They represent the total estimated cost of forty-nine picture theatres either going up at this writing or contemplated for the spring. And the list takes in only those theatres costing $100,000 or over. Here it is:

"The Beloved Cheater" Plays to Big Business on Rembusch Circuit

F. J. REMBUSCH, president and general manager of the Rembusch Enterprises, with headquarters in Indianapolis, has written a letter to officials of Robertson-Cole declaring "The Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody to be the most successful picture of the year. The Gasnier master drama played the entire Rembusch circuit, and so effective were the showings that rebookings were made at once for the special feature.

Mr. Rembusch declares that many patrons who saw the picture wrote letters to his various managers and asked that more pictures of the Robertson-Cole type be used in the Rembusch circuit.

Mr. Rembusch is free to admit that the picture played to more people in his territory than any other special production of the year. While the Robertson-Cole special was playing in Indianapolis, the Shriners were conducting a nine-day celebration called "Slippery Gulch," depicting the days of '49 with its gamblers, horse thieves and everything that constituted a wide-awake Monte Carlo.

Finely Equipped Booth a Feature.

One of the attractions at this big celebration was an elaborate equipped booth at which "The Beloved Cheater" was advertised to satisfaction. In this space Robertson-Cole salesmen used the lobby displays, the specimen advertisements, pictures of Lew Cody, the twenty-page four-colored press book, and the Lew Cody lexicon of love booklets. Paper money was distributed freely and on one side the picture was advertised for the local showing. With the payment of twenty-five cents two persons were admitted to see the production, in combination with the Shriners stage money.

Officials of Robertson-Cole has also received flourishing reports on the picture from the Roland & Clark interests in Pennsylvania. The production did record business at all of their houses.

Character Wants Beautiful Girls.

The general impression that there is a super-abundance of beautiful girls crowding picture studios daily has been shattered by the Character Pictures Corporation, which company declares that no such condition exists, but that, to the contrary, there is a distinct shortage in the picture business of girls gifted with beauty and brains, so necessary for success on the screen. Feeling confident that the material they seek must exist somewhere, the company has started an active campaign in search of youthful beauties, gifted with the qualities fitting them for success on the screen. The girls selected by the company will be trained and schooled for the idea of making stars of them if they display talent.

Troy Would Make Theatres Refill Police and Firemen Pension Funds

IN an effort to restore the depleted police and firemen's pension funds of Troy, a movement is now on foot in that city, the first of its kind in New York State, to exact 2 cents for every admission charged to the moving picture house on Sunday, without the proprietors of the theatres being allowed to increase their admission a like sum. The move has stirred up a storm of protest. The theatre managers claim they are being gouged in order to replenish pension funds that have become depleted by reason of having men on the rolls who are not entitled to the benefit.

A resolution just introduced, taxes all moving picture house 2 cents each Sunday on every ticket, the tax to be paid to the city and in turn given over to the police and the firemen pension funds in equal amounts.

Prevent Price Increase.

Provision is made in the resolution to prevent the theatre owners from raising the price of admission on Sundays; in other words, the public will not be called upon to pay a higher charge of admission in order to make good the two funds. It is said that about 15,000 admissions are paid to picture theatres in Troy every Sunday evening, and that the revenue which would be derived from a 2-cent tax would forever eliminate any deficiency in either police or firemen pension fund.

It is claimed that Schenectady picture houses paid nearly 50 per cent. of their Sunday admissions to charities named by the mayor of the city. Troy secures a large patronage on Sunday from neighboring cities in which picture theatres are not allowed.

An interesting sidelight on the present situation in Troy was revealed the other night when an alderman said that the picture houses in Troy are operating on Sunday without a license. The common council in years past has apparently paid no attention to the matter and in the intervening time the question has never been raised in regard to the rights under which the shows are running.

Universal Reel Shows New York Snowed Under

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS NO. 5 is almost snowed under with views of New York struggling in the grip of its first blizzard in years. Broadway with its blocked street cars and trenches of snow is an unusual sight on the screen. For comparison, the next scenes shown on this reel are taken in the Yosemite Valley and feature the wonders of its mountain peaks.

Exclusive shots of Captain Bogart skimming over Mount Wilson's summit and some "trick" photograph showing an attack on a Zeppelin by an airplane, with the blowing up of the dirigible, are other interesting items in this reel.

Havana, Cuba, with its wide-open cafes, is the mecca of all dry Americans these days. Close-ups of saloon scenes offer interesting study to the man who is still interested in what we read about to-day.

As another feature of this reel the giant dirigible Zeppelin L-72, which was built in Germany to bomb New York and is now being converted for commercial use, is shown for the first time in this country.

The Kiddies Will Like This Part of It; Then There's Something for the Tired Business Person Also.
Hampton Del Ruth, directing this five-reel Sunshine special, has put over some clever work. The picture is as yet unnamed.

METRO is arranging to produce four of Jack London's novels in photoplay form, starring Mitchell Lewis. The first will be "Burning Daylight," production arrangements having been made by C. E. Shurtleff, who owns the screen rights for the dead novelist's writings.

Lieutenant Jack Levering, who is acting in support of Taylor Holmes in a screen representation of the stage play "The Very Idea," is an A. E. F. veteran, who was decorated by King George for bravery under fire at the front.

"'Liza Ann" was a stage title for an Oliver D. Bailey comedy that toured far and wide. Now it's coming to the screen with a changed title—"In Walked Mary," with Albert Capellani, the producer, and June Caprice doing the pedestrian stunts and the principal acting.

Robert Ames Bennett's magazine story will have Mary Boland as its chief actress when "His Temporary Wife" comes to the screen. Miss Boland is now acting in Booth Tarkington's "Clarence" in New York," where she acted the photo scenes of the Bennett story.

American photoplays are helping the uplift in Belgium while the little kingdom is healing its war wounds. According to Vice-Consul Charles W. Drew, Jr., pictures produced in the United States are shown at most of the leading theatres, with comedies in special favor.

Pathe is getting ready for distribution "Smouldering Embers," in which Frank Keenan will star in his self-directed and produced screen drama. Kate Van Buren will be Mr. Keenan's leading lady.

Cleveland is entering the list of picture producing centers with the announcement that the Bradley Features Company will erect studios and prepare screen dramas in the Ohio city. Local capital is invested in the enterprise and production will begin as soon as studies can be completed.

Jack Dempsey's appearance as a screen star will soon be accomplished. He will act in a serial, produced and circulated by Pathe, under the title of "Daredevil Jack." While the champion will use his fists to a considerable extent, it is promised that he will surprise the fans when he shows his abilities as an actor and "stunt" specialist.

Betty Compson is soon to blossom forth as a full-fledged screen star. Not only will she be a star, but she will have her own producing organization, lately incorporated in New York. Miss Compson's work in "The Miracle Man" seems to have justified her venture, and there are plenty of "fans" who will second the motion.

After a rest of two months, with just enough exercise to keep his springs active, Douglas Fairbanks is again jumping over all obstacles in the interest of another screen presentation promoted by United Artists, with whom "Doug" is one of the "Big Four." His last production, "When the Crowd Rolls By," is swinging around the screen circle in a cloud of dust kicked up by the athletic comedian.

"Hairpins," without any particular brand mentioned, is the title of Enid Bennett's forthcoming Thomas H. Ince screen product, in which Matt Moore will be the leading man. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the scenario especially to suit Miss Bennett's abilities as an actress.

There will be a new male screen star added to the firmament of the fans when Thomas H. Ince trundles Lloyd Hughs into view as principal in "Wheelbarrow Jones."

Anita Stewart is busy on her next production, "The Yellow Typhoon," to be screened for Louis B. Mayer by Edward Jose. Her leading man will be Ward Crane.

Marguerita Sylvia, prima donna of splendid reputation, has turned from opera to the screen and will soon be seen in "The Honey Bee," under chaperonage of "Flying A" films. Kid McCoy participated in some of the prize fight scenes necessary to the plot of this oddly titled photoplay.

Emma Dunn has completed the screen presentation of her stage success, "Old Lady 21." The photoplay will soon be circulated by Metro forces.

After working nearly half the year, Charles Chaplin has completed another million dollar comedy, "A Day's Work." One of the screen paragraphers remarks that so far as known this is a record. It is the first time it ever required six months to do a day's work.

Was Anybody Paging the Blizzard Man?

Evidently not in this bunch of femininity supporting Taylor Holmes in his production, "The Very Idea" for Metro.

Mack Sennett, who made "Mickey," in which Mabel Normand does everything known to the art of screen acting, has made another full-length comedy and soon will begin showing it broadcast. "Down on the Farm" is the title, and it has nothing to do with the "back to the old homestead" movement, but is a comedy replete with high spots.

Marie Duro is passing across the nation's screen with a production Herbert Brenon made in England with the American actress as its star. "12:10" is the title—and it is not a "railroad" drama.

Mrs. Sidney Drew has finished the first of a series of comedies she will present under the patronage of Pathe. These features have been adapted to the screen from the stories of Julian Street, in which John Cumberland, of bedroom farce fame, is starring.

"The Great Lover," a stage play that largely increased the fame of Leo Dietrichstein under the Cohan & Harris management, has been purchased by Goldwyn for screen presentation. The Fred and Fanny Hatto story will come into public view in the early days of summer.

Cohan & Harris are finding the Goldwyn organization ready purchasers of the stage plays made famous by that energetic theatrical firm. "The Great Lover," "A Tailor Made Man," "Stop Thief" and "Officer 666" are stage hits destined for screen presentation by Goldwyn, with stars best suited to the varying opportunities the plays afford.

"The Copperhead" will bring some famous theatrical names into the programs of picture theatres. First there will be Lionel Barrymore, star of the Augustus Thomas stage and screen version, supported by his wife, Doris Rankin, daughter of the late McKee Rankin; Arthur Rankin, a son of Phyllis Rankin and nephew of Mrs. Lionel Barrymore. William P. Carleton, son of Will T. Carleton, the once popular operatic star, will also be in the cast of "The Copperhead" as screened by Paramount.

Wanda Hawley, who has for some time been verging on fame through her cleverness in a supporting role with Bryant Washburn, Wallace Reid and, just lately, in "Everywoman," is about to reach the height of a screen queen's ambition—she is to become a star. And there will be thousands who will acclaim her.

Done with serials, for the present, at least, Pearl White will soon make her first screen appearance as a "feature" star under the management of William Fox. "The White Moll," adapted from Frank L. Packard's story, will show Miss White in something short of "fifteen chapters" for the first time.

"The Slim Princes" is to be screened by Goldwyn. This is another musical comedy of the stage to supply entertainment for picture fans.

Fay Marbe, prima donna in "The Velvet Lady" last season, has a prominent role in Taylor Holmes' screen production of "The Very Idea," William Le Baron's farce-comedy success. Miss Marbe dances exceptionally well and her talent in terpsichore will be screened.

Ralph R. Ruffner Comes to Join First National Staff

RALPH R. RUFFNER, one of the best known house managers in the country, arrived in New York Thursday to join the press staff of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. When it was learned recently that Mr. Ruffner was about to terminate his connection with the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, C. L. Yearsley, chief of the publicity department of the First National, got in touch with him, which adds him to the well equipped staff.

Mr. Ruffner started his managerial career in Vancouver, Washington, a tiny town which can be found only on the large scale maps. He went from there to the American, Butte, and then to the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Portland and Spokane and back again to Butte as manager of the Rialto there. He left this last position because the altitude was affecting Mrs. Ruffner's health and took over the Rialto, in San Francisco, a sick house which he speedily restored to health. Recently he resigned this position because of internal friction and now he has passed from the exhibiting to the promotion department of the industry. In the past six or eight years his brilliant advertising schemes have made him known to exhibitors all over the country and his "Ruff stuff" has helped hundreds of lesser managers to frame their advertising more successfully. He excels in oddity of phrase and idea, but is a sound all-round advertiser.

"Kentucky Colonial" Showing Soon.

According to Joe Brandt, the National Film Corporation eastern representative, prints of "The Kentucky Colonel," will arrive in New York the last week of February. One will be shown to buyers immediately.

The cast includes Joseph J. Dowling, Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Cora Drew, Frederic Vroom, Fred Kohler, Ed Brady, Thelma Salter and Gordon Griffith.

"It is not a costume play," says I. Bernstein of National.

Maryland Legislature Considering Bill to Permit "Sunday Openings"

A HOT fight is now being waged before the Judiciary Committee of the House in the Maryland Legislature over the bill which was recently introduced by Delegate George D. Iverson, of Baltimore, which partly repeals certain restrictions in the "Blue Laws" of Maryland and would legalize the opening of places of amusement on Sunday afternoons after 2 P. M. A hearing was given to those opposed to the passing of this bill before the Judiciary Committee of the House on Wednesday, February 4.

The amendment in the bill which is proposed to the Sunday observance laws concerning moving pictures reads as follows: "Moving picture parlors, concert halls and opera houses, for the sole purpose of exhibiting moving pictures or giving musical concerts therein; ball grounds, gymnasiums, golf courses, tennis courts and swimming pools; and exhibitions and games may be had and played therein after the hour of 2 P. M. on Sunday, and prices of admission may be charged thereto and therefor."

Mr. Iverson also has another bill by which the Baltimore city police commissioners and the commissioners of the several counties are given powers to grant special privileges on special occasions for Sunday entertainments and for other things not prohibited by law.

Elmer J. Cook, a lawyer of Baltimore, who said he was there representing some of the moving picture people of Baltimore, asked that a date be fixed for a hearing for those in favor of the passage of this bill. The hearing will take place sometime during the week of February 9.

According to Delegate Powell, of Allegheny County, he, as a Methodist, had found much sentiment among those with whom he had spoken for changing the blue laws. He declared that a demand for the opening of the theatres had been made by some.

The Exhibitors' League of Maryland is remaining neutral on the question of Sunday opening and at a meeting of the board of directors which was held on February 3, which was presided over by Eugene B. McCurdy, president. It was attended by several officers and directors.

The following motion was made by Frank H. Durkee, seconded by B. Cluster and carried: "That the Exhibitors' League of Maryland take no active part neither for or against the bill now introduced in the Maryland Legislature for Sunday opening." The motion was carried.

Those present at this meeting included: E. B. McCurdy, president; Thomas D. Goldberg, vice-president; Wm. E. Stumpf, secretary; Frank H. Durkee, Wallace High, Walter Pacey, Benjamin Cluster, Charles Hicks.

Louis Burston Comes East on Short Business Trip

LOUIS BURSTON, due in New York about February 20, will remain east only long enough to complete measures he has for the sale of the unsold territory for the King Baggot serial, "The Hawk's Trail," the disposal of the few state rights blocks still held of "The Mystery of 13," and the consummation of his recently formed serial pool.

At Los Angeles studio, when planning for his flying trip East last week, the producer said:

"The syndication I've formed to supply buyers and exhibitors with an all year serial supply will be found, I think, a logical evolution considerably advantaging serial brokers, theatre men and producers. It will insure variety and avoid clashes of similar subjects, reduce waste and insure quality of the goods. While at present in but tentative form, the scenic backgrounds and main colors of the stories plunge into sections and character expositions offering many wholly new effects. To divulge the plans in this respect would necessarily at this time be to invite possible added competition.

"Territory for 'The Hawk's Trail' is being bought generously at prices that bespeak the growing interest in the serial form of picture drama.

Large Oakland Theatre Has Power's Projectors

ONE of the largest and most interesting theatres, from a technical viewpoint, of those west of Chicago is the T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, Cal., which has recently installed Power's projectors. It seats 3,611 people and is built entirely of concrete and steel. It has an orchestra of forty pieces and a giant organ is played alternately.

The theatre has plenty of lobby room, foyers, vestibules, parlors and lounging rooms which accommodate an overflow of from 800 to 1,000 people. In other words, the theatre has given shows many times to more than 4,500 people. The acoustic properties are excellent, and a system of inclines takes the place of steps. The employes number nearly 100.

The T. & D. Theatre has offered many novel stunts, including a "Made in Oakland Week," when forty-two exhibitors displayed their wares in attractive booths. Many film stars have appeared in person in this theatre. Eugene L. Perry has personally directed the theatre for the past year and has made an enviable record as a result-getter.

Coen Buys Arrow Pictures.

L. C. Coen of the Theatre Owners Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., has been spending the past week in New York, making his headquarters in the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation. Mrs. Coen was along and spent the time to good advantage in the New York shops while her husband was buying Arrow features.

He purchased from Arrow "The Vigilantes," a seven-reel super-production for the territory of Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin, and "The Desert Scorpion" for the territory of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

Mr. Coen reports that there is a big demand for features in his part of the country, and that business is booming.

Georges Carpentier, French Heavyweight Champion, Signed by Robertson-Cole

GEORGES CARPENTIER, world war hero, idol of France, heavyweight champion of Europe has been signed by Robertson-Cole to appear exclusively in motion pictures distributed by that firm. The anouncement was given to the trade in the following statement of R. S. Cole:

"In view of the various conflicting reports which have been circulated as to Carpentier coming to this country and also as to his having been engaged to appear in motion pictures, we feel it advisable to clear up the uncertainty by making the definite announcement that there has been executed at Paris an agreement between this company and Descamps and Carpentier, whereby we have the exclusive right to Carpentier's services in motion pictures to be produced in this country and intended for world's distribution.

R. S. Cole Suggested the Contract.

"The writer was in London and present at the Beckett-Carpentier fight, and in view of Carpentier's victory realized that he must naturally be the next logical opponent for Dempsey, and that in view of this the American public would be extremely interested in becoming better acquainted with Carpentier. He therefore opened negotiations with him with the idea of arranging along the lines as specified above. The negotiations were carried on by the writer's partner from the time that the writer left London, with the final result that a definite contract has been entered into.

"Carpentier, together with his manager, Descamps, will proceed to America on March 8, and will start his screen work for our production immediately upon his arrival."

Although Carpentier had signed with Robertson-Cole several weeks ago, officials of that concern would not make known the fact until the contract bearing the champs signature, together with Descamps, was in the New York office.

It is not known whether the picture to be made in this country for Robertson-Cole will be produced in the East or the West. Executives are making arrangements for a studio and story. One of the best known directors in the production of pictures will be in charge of the big Robertson-Cole Carpentier special.

Holidays of Interest to Our Naturalized Citizens

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, of Select Pictures Corporation, and an active member of the N. A. M. P. I., has supplied Moving Picture World with a list of important holidays of citizens of foreign birth now living in the United States which it will be to the interest of every exhibitor to read. The list furnishes exhibitors with the opportunity to make special appeals upon these dates as a part of their co-operation in the industry's drive for Americanism. It does not include the American holidays.

The list, in a condensed form, is as follows:

Belgium, July 21, Independence Day; Czecho-Slovakia, July 6, Jan Huss Day; Denmark, June 5, Constitution Day; France, July 14, Bastile Day; Greece, April 7, Independence Day; Ireland, March 17, St. Patrick's Day; Italy, September 20, Unification Day; Norway, May 17, Independence Day; Poland, May 3, Constitution Day; Portugal, October 5, Republic Day; Jugoslavia, June 28, Kossovo Day; Sweden, November 6, Gustavus Adolphus Day; Switzerland, August 1, Federation Day.

Invention Shows Actor in Two Roles at Once

FRANK D. WILLIAMS, cameraman for Sessue Hayakawa, the Robertson-Cole star, is receiving congratulations on the issuance of a patent invention which he has perfected after four years' work.

This invention relates to a method of taking motion pictures and is especially adapted to producing pictures showing two or more objects in relative positions in which they have not actually been placed. In this way, Mr. Williams is able to show an actor in two roles at one and the same time, standing behind himself or crossing in front of himself.

Mr. Williams is also the inventor of a new method of under-sea photography and has received patents on both inventions not only from the United States, but from Great Britain, France and Italy as well.

New York F. I. L. M. Club Wants Carrier Insurance

AT the last meeting of the New York F. I. L. M. Club, the secretary was instructed to write all exhibitors in Greater New York and New Jersey who have their film carried to and from exchanges by delivery companies, suggesting that they insist on their carriers taking out insurance to cover loss while in their possession from fire, theft or damage.

A new rule was adopted covering the membership of the grievance committee. Henceforth, five managers or executives will be selected by President Chadwick to serve four weeks. Then five others will succeed them. By this plan every member will be obliged to serve on the committee during the year.

President Chadwick made an extensive report on his visit to exchanges in Buffalo and Albany. The American Film Company, 1,600 Broadway, discontinued its membership in the club.

Sullivan Heads New Department.

Sylvester Sullivan, promotion manager of the International Exposition of Industries at Grand Central Palace, New York City, since its inception, has been appointed manager of the newly established Merchants & Manufacturers Industrial Film Department in Grand Central Palace. He states that they are prepared to make productions ranging from the one-reel sales "talk" to the biggest International propaganda series.

E. M. Asher in New York to Direct Sennett Publicity

E. M. ASHER, personal representative of Mack Sennett and his producing activities, is a native son of California, having been born in San Francisco about thirty years ago. He was first noticed in the film industry in 1916 when he exploited the "Ne'er Do Well," and afterward disposed of it.

In 1917 and 1918 Mr. Asher managed the Tivoli Theatre in San Francisco and at the same time managed the First National exchange in the same city for Turner & Dahnken.

Mr. Asher then joined forces with Mack Sennett in the exploitation of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and it was at his suggestion that the Mack Sennett bathing girls were added as a special attraction.

Mr. Asher brought this combination to New York in the summer of 1919 and put on the show at the Broadway Theatre, where it played through July and August, and despite the intense heat showed to crowded houses. He sold the rights for the United States to Sol. Lesser for Mr. Sennett, and he, with Mr. Lesser, put twenty companies on the road throughout the United States and Canada.

E. M. Asher

Sennett promotion expert who comes to New York to direct Sennett publicity in connection with Associated Producers.

He left the coast, with his family, on January 31, and arrived on February 4 in New York, where he expects to locate perminently, to establish offices to handle the Sennett output under the Associated Producers, of which Tom Ince is president and Mack Sennett is treasurer.

The plan as now outlined is that each unit of the Associated Producers will handle its own pictures. Mr. Asher's duties will be confined exclusively to the Mack Sennett productions. His temporary offices will be Hotel Astor.

The Mack Sennett productions will not be confined to two-reel subjects, but six and seven part features will be included in its output, and of these from six to eight will be made each year, according to time involved. Quality and not quantity will be the main object.

Metro Completes Camera Work on "Old Lady 31"

EMMA DUNN has completed her work before the camera in "Old Lady 31," the Screen Classics, Inc., picturization of Rachel Crothers' stage success, at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The picture is now ready for titling and cutting. It is, incidentally, the first of Metro's third round of "fewer and better" productions to be finished photographically. "Old Lady 31" will be a late February or early March release.

Miss Dunn plays the sweetly sympathetic role of Angie Rose, faithful wife of the indigent sea captain who starts for the poorhouse but ends in a home for aged women.

Henry Harmon has the part of Captain Abe Rose. Mary and John, the young sweethearts who serve as an admirable foil to Angie and Rose in their romance of old age, are played respectively by Winifred Westover and Antrim Short. Others in the ensemble are Lawrence Underwood, Graham Pettie, Clara Knott, Carrie Clark Ward, Sadie Gordon, Martha Mattox, May Wells and Ruby Lafayette. John E. Ince directed the production. June Mathis scenarioized the play.

Selznick Employes See Herbert Kaufman Weekly

THE first showing of the Herbert Kaufman Weekly, which Lewis J. Selznick is filming and distributing through Select Pictures, was held at the New York home office on February 12. Every employe of the organization is a screen fan and Mr. Selznick invited the entire staff to view the picture in an effort to obtain first-hand information what an audience of fans thought of the idea. The general verdict was that not only is the Kaufman Weekly a novelty but it has an entertaining value, as well as teaching a strong moral lesson.

The weekly is made up of pictorial matter illustrating the editorials of Mr. Kaufman, which were formerly printed by a newspaper syndicate. The first of the editorials is a modern version of "Little Red Riding Hood," which is its title, and it tells the story of a young girl who was lost through her ignorance. Betty Hilburn, the talented little screen actress, is the featured player.

The picture is about ready for release and will be followed by "The Faded Butterfly," in which Madame Brozovna, a celebrated Polish actress, appears.

Clune Indorses National Theatres.

National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is the head, has progressed on its way from New York around the continent with such rapid strides that it has reaced Los Angeles, and has been received in that city warmly, according to a statement from the offices of Mr. Selznick in New York.

With the California indorsement, which comes from Clune Theatres Company, National Picture Theatres, Inc., is now firmly established throughout the United States. Among the first exhibitor organizations to favor National was the Northwest Exhibitors Circuit and others from representative exhibitors and circuits. Chicago fell into line along with other big cities.

Select Appoints Malcolm.

T. C. Malcolm, recently associated with the Triangle office at Salt Lake City, has been appointed branch manager for the Select Corporation there, according to an announcement. He succeeds Robert A. Brackett.

Mr. Malcolm was for three years branch manager at Los Angeles and Portland for the General Film Company, and for two years was associated with the Mutual Film Corporation as Pacific Coast supervisor. Later he was associated with the Triangle company at Salt Lake.

Winnipeg Clergy Urges Censorship.

The Ministerial Association of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has decided to press for the censorship of all moving picture advertising matter, including newspaper advertising, which appears or is used in the Province of Manitoba. The association recently prepared a comprehensive report on the subject. This follows the actual decision of the Ontario Government to enforce a censorship of all moving picture advertising. The same matter is receiving the consideration of the Quebec Provincial Government, it is rumored.

Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Director recently added to Metro's staff on Coast.

Plan Big Exploitation on Mayer Film.

Plans are being made by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee to send "In Old Kentucky," the Mayer-made First National attraction starring Anita Stewart, on its tour of the two states with one of the most efficient exploitation organizations ever provided a picture.

Harry Brown, who has been put in charge of the organization ,has arranged for three road shows of "In Old Kentucky" to tour the two States, each embracing negro jazz bands, jockeys, minstrels and "night riders" to parade the streets in towns where the picture is playing.

If you are not reading Giebler's Rubbernecking in Filmland, it can be only because you never let your eyes rest there long enough to "get a start." Once read, Rubbernecking will attract you every issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Show in Broadway Theatres

FOUR of Goldwyn's new productions are the featured attractions at leading theatres the week of February 8 and the following week. At the Strand, Madge Kennedy appeared in "The Blooming Angel," a sparkling comedy by Wallace Irwin that bids fair to become one of the strongest box office attractions in which the Goldwyn comedienne has ever appeared. At the Broadway theatre, Pauline Frederick is the stellar drawing card in "The Loves of Letty," taken from the play by Arthur Wing Pinero.

Admirers of Miss Frederick will have another opportunity to see her in a strongly emotional role the week of February 15 when "The Paliser Case," by Edgar Saltus, will head the bill at the Capitol Theatre. During the same period, Jack Pickford, in his first picture as a Goldwyn star, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," by John Fox, Jr., will be found at the Strand.

Jack Pickford's First Goldwyn.

The premier of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" is awaited with particular interest in that it marks Jack Pickford's debut as a Goldwyn star. The adaptation of John Fox's novel has been made on an elaborate scale and the result promises to be a film of pictorial beauty combined with exceptional story value.

Goldwyn Cites Cast of Gouverneur Morris Film

NEWS of Eminent Authors pictures received at the Goldwyn offices last week from the Culver City studios gives the cast of Gouverneur Morris' first production, "The Penalty," under the direction of Wallace Worseley. It includes Lou Chaney, Claire Adams, Kenneth Harlan, Charles Clary, Ethel Grey Terry, Milton Ross and Edouard Trebaol. Many of the scenes of "The Penalty" will be taken in San Francisco.

Two personalities new to the Goldwyn organization are represented in Rupert Hughes' next production of "Scratch My Back." One is the Director Sidney Olcott, who has had an extensive career on the stage and before the camera. The second personality is T. Roy Barnes, who will play the lead opposite Helene Chadwick, whose performance in Rupert Hughes' picture, "The Cup of Fury," is exciting the praise of cinema critics. Lloyd Whitlock is the third member of the cast so far selected.

Director Sidney Olcott started work on the Rupert Hughes story by filming the first scenes in San Francisco. "Scratch My Back" is the story which the eminent author wrote directly for the screen, continuity and all, after his first visit to the Culver City studios last autumn.

National Has Capital-Labor Film.

The harmonizing influence a woman has on the conflict between capital and labor is the theme of "Mary Minds Her Business," a Ladies' Home Journal serial story, which will be the second feature production of this year to be screened by the National Film Corporation of America. "Mary Minds Her Business" was written by George Weston. The film version was prepared by Mildred Considine.

Felix Feist Meets Many Friends in Los Angeles

FELIX FEIST, vice president and sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles on Thursday, January 29, ten days ahead of the schedule arranged for his transcontinental tour. The hustling Goldwyn executive was welcomed by Branch Manager Maurice Wolf and his corps of associate workers and by Goldwyn studio officials.

Mr. Feist's first afternoon and evening in the city were devoted, in part, to renewing many old acquaintances. John Zanft, of the William Fox forces; Mr. Schoenstadt, a prominent exhibitor of Chicago, and W. A. Sobelman, of St. Paul and Minneapolis, all of whom are visiting the West Coast on business, welcomed Mr. Feist and exchanged views on conditions in various parts of the country.

On Friday evening Mr. Feist was host at a dinner at which the Goldwyn sales department of the local branch were guests. Salesmanship was the topic under discussion and the Goldwyn executive gave the boys a talk. Mr. Feist will meet the exhibitors in the Los Angeles territory at a studio luncheon, together with representatives of the local daily and trade papers and studio stars and executives.

Norma Talmadge Picture Praised by Newspapers

FOUR independent newspapers of Pennsylvania have joined hand-in-hand in the lauding of a special feature attraction. This occurred when "The Daughter of Two World," Norma Talmadge's initial release through First National Exhibitors' Circuit was shown at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia. The Philadelphia North American, the Evening Bulletin, Public Ledger and the Record were the four publications that reached a concensus of opinion and their respective praises are as follows:

North American:—"This is Norma Talmadge's first appearance as a First National star. It is a big production and if it can be taken as a sample of her work through the new association, it's a good augur for the future."

Evening Bulletin:—"'The Daughter of Two Worlds' is a photoplay of compelling interest and Miss Talmadge reaches unusual heights of emotion in the interpretation of the role which she enacts with much exactness."

Record:—"The whole story is told with a wealth of detail and a photographic splendor and leaves nothing to be desired. It is a picture of much more than ordinary merit."

Public Ledger:—"It is a picture of compelling interest for its action and thrills."

Installs Powers' Machines.

The Denver Theatre Supply Company writes to the Nicholas Power Company: "You will no doubt be pleased to hear that we have just made two very important installations on Curtis street. We have installed three Power's 6B Cameragraphs in the America Theatre, which is one of the finest in the West, also two Power's 6B in the Empress Theatre. This gives us the Iris, Empress, American and Tabor Theatres on the Great White Way."

Hugh Ford in Hollywood.

Hollywood's latest addition to its extensive film colony is Hugh Ford. The noted director for Paramount Artcraft has returned to the west, after a stay at the Atlantic coast, to make an elaborate special production at the Lasky studio. Accompanying him are Joseph Boyle, his assistant, and Hal Young, cameraman.

Work is to be begun in about ten days on this new picture which is said to be unique in picture history. The nature of the plot is unknown to any but those immediately in direction of the production.

"False Road" Next Ince Picture.

"The False Road" is announced as the newest picture produced by Thomas H. Ince as an Ince-Paramount Artcraft offering, in which Enid Bennett stars. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and was directed by Fred Niblo, with George Barnes at the camera. Thomas H. Ince supervised the production.

Lloyd Hughes has the leading male role opposite Miss Bennett and others in the cast are Wade Boteler, Lucile Young, Charles Smily, Edith Yorke and Gordon Mullen. The production is what might be termed a "crook" play.

Bertram Millhauser

Makes directorial debut with "The Mad Talon," Pathe's serial, starring Juanita Hansen.

Sibley Signs with Mayer.

Richard E. Sibley, one of the best known art directors of the movies and the "legitimate" stage, is now identified with Louis B. Mayer at the new studios at 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles. For eighteen years Mr. Sibley was a successful artist of the "legitimate" stage.

His first work was with Universal where he remained three years. After two years with Morosco he went to the Fox studios where he remained two years. Before becoming identified with the Mayer interests Mr. Sibley was art director one year for Vitagraph.

Schedules Wilson's Second Serial for February 22

FEBRUARY 22 has been set by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, for the release of Ben Wilson's second serial production, "The Screaming Shadow." The title of the first episode is "A Cry in the Dark."

"The Screaming Shadow" follows in release, the first Ben Wilson serial production for Hallmark, "The Trail of the Octopus." In both of these serials Ben Wilson is co-starred with Neva Gerber, and practically the same supporting cast is seen in both. Duke Worn, who directed Wilson in many of his first serial productions, is credited with the direction of both these Hallmark serials and King Cray was the photographer.

The theme of "The Screaming Shadow" is based on the recent scientific discovery by eminent physicians that human life can be prolonged by transplanting to the human body what are known as monkey glands. With this scientific discovery as a basis for the plot construction of their story, the authors, J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates, have fashioned a photo dramatic serial that is said to be entirely different from anything that has even been done in the silent drama.

Jane Thomas to Appear in "Trimmed With Red"

AN actress who promises to create a distinctly favorable impression in her first Goldwyn picture, "Trimmed with Red," now being produced under the direction of Hugo Ballin at Goldwyn's eastern studio with Madge Kennedy as the star, is Jane Thomas who is cast in a prominent role.

Miss Thomas was selected from a host of applicants to support Miss Kennedy, because of her beauty, her charm of personality and her ability as a screen actress as revealed in earlier motion pictures. During three years with the Essanay Company when that concern was producing many films at its studios in Chicago Miss Thomas gained an enviable reputation.

Born and reared in Chicago, Miss Thomas as a young girl revealed an extraordinary aptitude for artistic expression. Besides studying acting, she attended the Chicago Art Institute where she studied landscape painting. At the present time she has a studio in Chicago. Added to her accomplishments is that of Greek dancing. Miss Thomas admits to one hobby, hiking in the country.

Author Praises Film Version.

"'Dangerous Days' is twice as forceful on the screen as it was when printed," says Mary Roberts Rinehart, the eminent author, whose book of the same name is one of the six best sellers from coast to coast. Mrs. Rinehart is now at the Goldwyn studios where she was shown the first production in her series from Eminent Authors which is also a Reginald Barker production. Coming close upon the heels of Rupert Hughes' praise for the production of "The Cup of Fury" by T. Hayes Hunter, it is evident that the plan originated by Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach for author-producer co-operation is an achievement in the making of motion pictures.

Censors Reject "Amazing Woman."

The Ohio Board of Censors have rejected entirely the Republic Distributing Corporation's picture "The Amazing Woman." They will be asked, however, to look at the picture again after some changes are made and perhaps a new decision will be given.

"The Amazing Woman" is a five-part production featuring Ruth Clifford.

Once More Movies Help.

A moving picture of the principal points of interests in Cleveland, and including many good industrial "shots" was taken along on the trip of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce to California and coast towns. The party left February 7.

This picture will be shown wherever the party stops for the purpose of informing the people of western cities of the facilities and beauty of Cleveland. At the same time movies of the party's trip will be made and sent back to Cleveland for showing in the leading theatres of the city.

Blakeman Joins Pathe.

E. C. Blakeman has been appointed assistant manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange. He comes from the South, where he has been identified for some time past with the S. A. Lynch enterprises.

Michigan Musings

Gebhardt Goes to M. M. P. E. L.

FRANK W. GEBHARDT, manager of the Strand Features, Detroit, has tendered his resignation and on Monday morning started in as business manager of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Mr. Gebhardt is associating with the first real exhibitors' organization that Michigan has ever had. The membership is growing and now comprises leading exhibitors in every part of the state. Wally Baker continues as organizer and will spend most of his time in the state personally calling upon exhibitors.

Mr. Gebhardt informs us that the association is to issue each week a bulletin as the official house organ and that it will be sent to all exhibitors, keeping them posted as to the activities of the organization. The club has temporary quarters at 201 Film Building.

Seifert Manager of New Exchange.

The Independent Master Films, Inc., have opened a Detroit office at 202 Film Building and appointed William B. Seifert manager. Billy, as most exhibitors know him, has been connected with the film business for a great number of years and he knows Michigan conditions thoroughly. Chaplin subjects will be his specialty.

Weddige Outfit Expands.

Bert Weddige, of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, Detroit, will let contracts this week for the remodeling of his exchange, so as to give him more space to handle his growing business. "We want to carry larger stocks and a larger variety of supplies," said Bert. "Simplex orders are coming in faster than the factory can fill them, although we are now assured that increased factory facilities will enable them to ship promptly hereafter."

Victor Conquers and Returns.

Changes at Pathe Office.

E. J. Eichenlaub has resigned as Detroit manager for Pathe and is succeeded by George W. Sampson, former assistant manager. Mr. Sampson is probably known to every exhibitor in the city and state. He has always been an enthusiast about Pathe and Pathe productions, so it's no wonder we find him sticking there year in and year out and working himself up from salesman to assistant manager and thence to manager.

George Custer has been transferred as head booker to the position of assistant manager, another example of how reward finally comes to those who persevere.

F. B. Rogers, district manager for Pathe, who is in Detroit for a few days, says he has been watching both Georges for a a long while and that he believes both will not only make good but will bring the office up to the point where it will enjoy its biggest business.

Beardsley to Build Another.

Ground will be broken as soon as the weather permits for the immediate construction of a 1,200-seat motion picture theatre to be built by E. W. Beardsley at Royal Oak. Mr. Beardsley, who can truly lay claim to the distinction of being a pioneer exhibitor of Michigan, has built up a patronage in Royal Oak far beyond the capacity of his present house.

Kansas Klippings

Calbert to Kansas City.

J. M. CALBERT, formerly manager of the Universal exchange at Omaha, Neb., has begun his new duties as head of the Kansas City office. Shortly after his arrival in Kansas City Mr. Calvert received a gold watch charm from the Omaha Film Board of Trade. The charm represents a reel of film unwound, the trademark of the Omaha association.

Hutchinson Visits Kansas City.

W. S. Hutchinson, son of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Corporation, was in Kansas City visiting at the local office February 3 and 4. He is making a tour of middle western offices of the company.

Saunders Visits Metro.

E. W. Saunders, sales manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, was a visitor at the local office this week. His trip to the West included visits to other exchanges.

Earl Theatre Changes Hands.

Minnesota Mutterings

Theatres Change Hands.

CONTROL of three Northwest motion picture houses changed hands this week. William A. Steffes, Minneapolis motion picture exhibitor, has purchased the Cozy Theatre, Penn and Crystal Lake avenues, Minneapolis, from Gottlieb Nestle. Mr. Steffes has managed the Northern Theatre, Twentieth avenue North and Fourth street, Minneapolis, for several years. He is also reported to be negotiating for the leases on two motion picture houses in the Gateway district.

Purchase of the Lotus Theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn., by W. H. Gilfillan, of that city, was announced this week. Mr. Gilfillan will remodel the house. It will be reopened about March 1.

R. W. Farnsworth has remodeled the opera house at Madison, Minn., into a first class motion picture house, with a seating capacity of 500. He plans conducting the showing of high-class pictures.

District Manager in Minneapolis.

M. A. Chase, district manager of the Universal Film exchanges of the Northwest, has established offices in Minneapolis. Mr. Chase has been connected with the Universal company for many years, starting as a film salesman. Recently he completed a tour of Japan and Russia.

San Francisco Shots

New Lighting System for California.

THE management of the California Theatre, San Francisco, is inaugurating a new exterior lighting system, planned after the system used to illuminate the great buildings of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Eighteen scintillators, of the type used at the fair, are being mounted on the roof of a building across the street, and these will flood the front and side of the structure with light.

Wage Dispute Settled.

The moving picture operators of Fresno, Cal., have compromised their previous demands for $70 a week and have accepted the offer of theatre owners for a basic wage of $1 an hour, with $8 a day for operators where vaudeville is shown.

Modesto House Sold.

The Star Theatre, Modesto, Cal., formerly owned by Charles Reindollar, has been purchased by William J. Voss, who plans to make extensive improvements. The Golden West Amusement has awarded contracts at $108,000 for the erection of a new theatre in that city.

Completes Year with T. & D.

Eugene L. Perry, former Shubert and Keith man, celebrated the completion of his first year with Turner & Dahnken as manager of their Oakland house on February 1. His success there has been little short of phenomenal, and this house, which is the largest west of Chicago, is now regarded as being one of the best money-getters on the Coast. Perry's policy has been to give the public something in addition to screen attractions and something out of the ordinary. One of his big stunts was a miniature industrial exposition within the theatre.

Denver Doings

Goldwyn Increases Holdings.

FOLLOWING the leasing of the Tabor Opera House block by the Goldwyn Distributing Company two weeks ago, the same company last week completed one of the biggest real estate deals in the history of Denver by purchasing the America Theatre Building for $1,000,000, and the property on an opposite corner, occupied by the Douglas Shoe Company, for $750,000, according to A. S. Aronson, vice-president of the company, who is in Denver.

On the site of the latter purchase the Goldwyn company will erect a modern hotel, housing a theatre on its lower floor. This will give the Goldwyn corporation three big theatres on three of the four corners of Sixteenth and Curtis, often referred to as the hub of Denver's great white way.

The cost of the erection of the hotel and theatre will be approximately $1,000,000. The America Theatre Building, just purchased for $1,000,000, it is said, belonged to William Rice, who admits the original purchase price was $30,000.

Build in Colorado Springs.

George P. Greaves, Colorado and Wyoming pioneer moving picture exhibitor, has leased from Richard Clough the Princess Theatre, Colorado Springs, and twelve single properties adjoining it on the east. The net rental sum to be paid Mr. Clough will exceed $1,000,000.

Besides owning two moving picture houses in Cheyenne, Wyo.; two in Pueblo, Colo., and having interests in the Rialto and Princess in Denver, Mr. Greaves has other scattering picture interests throughout the rural sections.

Arrow Buys Pueblo Princess.

Joseph J. Goodstein, Denver exchange manager for the Arrow Photoplays Corporation, has completed a deal for his firm whereby the Princess Theatre at Pueblo, Colo., changes hands. The purchase price of the movie house was $60,000 cash, and will be operated on and after March 1 by the Arrow corporation's interests. The theatre will be renovated before the reopening.

Changes at Big-U.

Numerous changes have been made in the Denver exchange offices of the Universal during the past week. W. R. Armstrong, former zone manager, has been promoted to Western district manager and has departed for the Coast, where he will be permanently located. Gene Gerbase, former road man, has been called in to succeed Armstrong.

George Quinn, former branch manager, who recently went over to the Select exchanges, is back with Universal and is office manager. Jack Scott, former office manager, has been made road manager, traveling himself.

Organist Rath Improves.

Franz Rath, organist at the Isis Theatre, who was badly injured in an auto accident recently, will, contrary to reports, be able to assume his profession again in a few weeks. Rath is one of the best known organists in the West and his programs are featured between shows.

Elinore to Direct at Rivoli.

Carli Densmore Elinore, international musician and director, who won fame for his synchronization and arrangement for the music of "The Birth of a Nation," has signed a long contract with the William Fox interests to lead the forty-piece symphony orchestra at the Rivoli, to succeed Signor R. Cavello, who recently took over the Empress orchestra.

Fight Pictures Permitted.

LIKE a bolt from the blue sky came the announcement on February 2 that the Province of Ontario had sanctioned the presentation in theatres throughout the province of the official films of the Dempsey-Willard heavyweight fight at Toledo last July, and also that the presentation of the pictures of the recent Carpentier-Beckett fight in London, England, would also be sanctioned as soon as the prints are actually received in Toronto.

The sanctioning of these pictures was authorized by Hon. Peter Smith, the Provincial Treasurer, but the presentation of the views is subject to the approval of the municipalities in which they are to be screened. It is also stipulated that a share of the profits from performances at which the fight pictures are shown is to be turned over for the benefit of the war veteran organizations and for the dependents of the fallen.

The Dempsey-Willard fight views have alraedy been publicly presented in the Province of Quebec with fair success.

Special Ottawa Sunday Show.

The St. Brigid's Club of Ottawa, Ont., recently conducted a special Sunday show at the Theatre Francais, when a series of Canadian Government moving pictures were presented before a large audience. The regular theatre orchestra played the musical accompaniment and various vocal selections completed the program. No admission was charged and it was only by reason of this fact that the performance was permitted, as regular Sunday shows are strictly prohibited in Ontario.

Brouse Sells Interest in Strand.

Harry Brouse, of Ottawa, Ont., one of the outstanding moving picture men of the Dominion, has sold his half interest in the Strand Theatre, Toronto, to the new Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The Strand is one of the largest and best paying theatres in the downtown section of Toronto. N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, managing director of the Famous Players Canadian company, visited Ottawa a few days ago to close the deal, which was one of the first steps undertaken by the new enterprise. Mr. Brouse, who is Eastern Canadian franchise holder of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, still owns the York Theatre, Toronto; the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, and other interests.

Theatre National Passes.

Tenders have been invited for the disposal of Le Theatre National, a moving picture theatre which has been operated with varying success in Ottawa, Ont., by a French society, Societe de Monument National. This organization has gone into voluntary liquidation, but the sale of the property will place it on its feet again, it is expected. The structure was completed in 1905 and eventually became a popular rendezvous. In addition to the moving picture theatre, an open-air garden was operated for the sale of soft drinks and confections, under the management of the late Henry Cousins. During the war the society lost considerable of its membership.

Selznick Buys Canadian Film.

Announcement has been made at Montreal, Quebec, that Lewis J. Selznick, of New York, has bought the American rights of "The World Shadow," a feature dealing with Bolshevism which was made by the Adanac Producing Company, of Trenton, Ont. It will be released through the Select Pictures Corporation in the United States. Tyrone Power is the star of the picture and at present he is doing an All-Canadian tour with a stage show.

Second British-Made Picture.

The second of a series of fifteen British photoplay features to be released in Canada by the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, Toronto and Montreal, is "The Splendid Coward," a Harma production, the interiors of which were taken in Lord Salisbury's residence. This follows the British picture "Romany Lass," which was introduced in Toronto by a successful run at the Madison Theatre, which is owned by J. C. Brady, who is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, which in turn was responsible for the organization of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange on a cooperative basis.

Trade Topics.

A branch of Sterling Films, Limited, Toronto, is being opened in Vancouver, B. C., under the management of Ben Soskin, formerly the Vancouver manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation of Toronto. He is the brother of I. Sos. kin, who is the general manager of the Sterling company. Ben recently traveled across the continent to Toronto to discuss various expansion details.

C. I. Nathanson, Vancouver branch manager of Regal Films, Limited, has also arranged to return to Toronto. He is the brother of N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, who is the managing director of the new Famous Players Canadian Corporation and Regal Films, Limited.

Hoosier Happenings

Evansville Prices Go Up.

MOTION picture entertainment at the Majestic Theatre at Evansville, Ind., increased in price on February 1. Charles Sweeton, manager of the theatre, announced that on and after that date the price of admission would be increased to 20 cents on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The upward trend in the cost of films and other operating expenses were assigned by him as the reason for the increase.

John S. Crump Dies.

John S. Crump, owner of the Crump Theatre, one of the most popular motion picture theatres at Columbus, Ind., died at his home there last week after an illness of several months. He was seventy-three years old. Mr. Crump was a native of Columbus and took an active part in the city's affairs. He built the first street car system, the first light plant and several large busines buildings there. In 1903 the citizens of Columbus presented him with a gold medal in recognition of his work toward the upbuilding of the city. He retired from active management of the theatre a few years ago.

Incorporate to Build.

Articles of incorporation were filed this week with Indiana's secretary of state for the Artcraft Theatre Corporation of Franklin, Ind. The corporation is capitalized at $200,000 for the purpose of erecting a motion picture theatre. The company is headed by Don O. Newland, of South Bend, formerly of Chicago. The Franklin building project will be followed by similar ones in other Indiana cities.

Baltimore Banter

Building Activities Continue.

FOUR dwellings in the rear of the Linwood Theatre, 902-4 South Linwood avenue, by the Linwood Amusement Company, in which George A. Finch is interested and of which Charles Nolte is the manager. These dwellings will be razed and the Linwood Theatre is to be enlarged, raising the seating capacity from 400 to 1,200. A large pipe organ will be installed at a cost of about $8,000. The measurements of the new addition to the theatre will be 50 by 90 feet.

Whose Is It?

Plans for a large moving picture and vaudeville theatre, to be located on North Charles street, between Lafayette and North avenues, according to reports. The Famous Players-Lasky and Goldwyn companies are said to be contemplating the erection of a theatre in Baltimore, but whether either company is interested in the North Charles street deal is not known. This location is within a block of the Parkway and the site for the proposed new theatre which Marcus Loew is said to be backing.

Personals of Baltimore.

Prof. Edward V. Cupero, who for the past five years has acted as director of the orchestras at the New and Garden theatres, was unanimously chosen again as director of the City Park Band of Baltimore on Tuesday, February 3. Professor Cupero is known as "Eddie" to his many friends and directed the City Park Band last season with complete success.

E. Rossiter, proprietor of the Flaming Arrow Theatre, 1108 East Preston street, was sick for several days last week with a bad cold.

Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, personal representative of Anita Stewart and the Anita Stewart Productions Company, came to Baltimore during the week of February 2 and called on many exhibitors in this city.

Jack Whittle, Pathe traveling representative, is now on the Eastern Shore of Maryland for his company.

The plans for the enalrging of the Wilson Theatre, 418 East Baltimore street, which is under the management of Guy L. Wonders, were gone over by George C. Wilson, of Tyrone, Pa., president of the Wilson Amusement Company. Mr. Wilson stopped over in Baltimore for several days during the week of February 2 while on his way home from Miami, Fla., where he has been spending the winter.

During the terrible weather of the week of February 2 the motor bus of the film express between Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., was piloted practically on schedule between the two cities by Howard W. Hendus and Edgar Hedger, so that the exhibitors in Baltimore got their shows on time. The motor bus kept running right along every night in spite of the onslaught of the elements. On one night double the quantity of gasoline was needed to make the round trip.

Film at Auto Club Meeting.

Motion pictures will be a feature of the regular monthly meeting of the Automobile Club of Maryland, which will be held on Tuesday night, February 10, at the clubhouse, Mount Royal avenue and Cathedral street. A short address on "The Road System of Maryland" will be delivered by J. N. Mackall, chief engineer of the State Roads Commission.

Benefit Matinee at Parkway.

The proceeds of the young people's matinee which was held at the Parkway Theatre on Saturday morning, February 7, at 10 o'clock, under the auspices of the Baltimore branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Association, are to be devoted to the work of that organization. The "New Wizard of Oz" was the feature attraction at the performance. The work of promoting co-operation between teachers and parents and keeping an active interest in the education of the Maryland and Baltimore boys and girls is the object of the association.

To Use Theatre as Church.

The Forest Park moving picture theatre, which is under the management of Charles E. Ford, will be used on Sundays after February 15 as a church by the congregation of the Forest Park Presbyterian Church, as this church is to erect a new structure at the corner of Garrison avenue and has sold the church now located at Dalrymple avenue. The work of demolishing the old structure will take place after February 15 and the congregation will then use the theatre in which to hold services.

St. Louis Shorts

Charging It to Song Publishers.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of St. Louis passed a motion making a charge of $25 per night to any music publisher for singing or "plugging" songs in each theatre, this being the outcome of the seat tax imposed on theatres playing music written or published by members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Theatres Closed One Hour.

The St. Louis Health Department has made a ruling for theatres running continuous performances to be closed between five and six p. m. for ventilation purposes.

Famous Players to Build.

Announcement has been made by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of the erection of a combination moving picture theatre and office building 15 to 18 stories in height at the northwest corner of Seventh and Locust streets, across the street from the 21-story Railway Exchange Building and in the downtown section of the city.

The site has frontages of 127 feet on Locust street and 164 feet on Seventh street, the agreed purchase price being $1,250,000. F. L. Cornwell, local counsel for the Famous Players-Lasky interests, states that the ground floor would be given over to one of the largest and finest moving picture theatres in the United States, while the remainder of the building would be of the office building type, the cost of the structure to be $2,500,000.

Columbia, S. C., News.

Laurence Lester, owner of three theatres in Columbia, S. C., will build a combination theatre seating 1,800. The theatre will be the finest in South Carolina when completed. Mr. Lester will also build a negro theatre there seating 1,500 and to cost $75,000. The Rivoli, Lester's leading house, will be remodeled, making space for 300 extra seats, and will be operated as a first run Paramount-Artcraft house. The Rialto is also being remodeled and the seating capacity largely increased. The Lester interests have obtained control of the Pastime and Columbia theatres—the latter a legitimate house—securing them from Rawles Brothers. Both theatres will be remodeled.

Charleston to Have 2,000-Seater.

John J. Miller is building a 2,000 seat theatre on King street, Charleston, South Carolina. Information given out is to the effect that theatre will cater to negro trade, but it is persistently rumored that it will be operated as a white picture theatre in opposition to the present interests in Charleston.

Mason Builds in Wilson.

H. R. Mason, owner of the Acme Theatre, Goldsboro, N. C., is building a 1,000 seat house at Wilson, N. C., to be completed by March 1. The theatre will give three picture houses here.

Koerpel Back After Trip.

J. A. Koerpel, Northwest manager for Goldwyn, returned early in February from a three weeks' trip with Felix Feist, general manager of exchanges. During the trip Mr. Koerpel visited Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. There was a convention of branch managers in Kansas City, but the rest of the trip was merely in the way of a vacation for Mr. Koerpel.

Taylor Takes Over Publicity Work.

Weyland H. Taylor has arrived from New York to take charge of the exploitation of Famous Players-Lasky in the Seattle and Portland territory. J. D. Howard, former exploitation man in Seattle, has been transferred to San Francisco. George P. Endert, manager of Famous Players-Lasky in the Pacific Northwest, has returned from the convention in Chicago.

Singelow in Seattle.

Alex. Singelow, well known film man and theatre manager of Washington State, has bought the old Oak Theatre, on Madison street, and will probably turn it into a motion picture house.

Empire Epigrams

Western New York Busy.

THE theatre building boom in Western New York does not seem to abate, but, on the contrary, announcements are being made almost weekly of theatres projected or of plans for the remodeling or rebuilding of existing houses.

The latest announcement of a new picture palace comes from the thriving little city of Corning, in Steuben County. The Scherrer Amusement Company, of Syracuse, has purchased a site from the S. T. Hayt estate and a theatre will be erected upon it this summer. The location is at Walnut and Market streets, in the heart of the business section, and the house will cost $250,000.

"Muscle Like a Public Speaker"

Quoth Colleen Moore to Al Christie just after using said muscle to sign a two-year Christie comedy-making contract.

Reaping in Lyons.

Since pictures became the rage, Ohmann Brothers have conducted the only picture house in Lyons, the county seat of Wayne County. With their business in an established and prosperous state, they have decided to completely remodel and enlarge their house. Almost coincident with this announcement, Rochester capital has decided to remodel the old Liberty Hotel in that town into a modern picture theatre.

New Decorations and Prices.

The Temple Theatre at Canandaigua has reopened after numerous changes in its architecture, including a new front and seating arrangement. Upon reopening a substantial boost in prices was announced, which under old conditions might not have got across. However, the new decorations and more comfortable seating makes the new scale an easy one.

Manager Steps Up.

Manager George Bachman of the Fisher Theatre at Seneca Falls has taken a lease of that house and is now running it "on his own." Not to be outdone by picture houses in the various surrounding towns, he inaugurated his regime by making his house much more attractive inside and out and more comfortable within. Fred C. Fisher, the owner, has retired from active management of his houses in Seneca Falls and Canandaigua.

Another to Get Shined Up.

The Temple Theatre at Geneva is to be enlarged to 1,600 seating capacity and it will be equipped with new seats, carpets and draperies and the interior decorated. L. G. Brady, former manager of the Regent and Strand at Geneva, is also planning to build a new picture house in that city.

Blauvelt and Merritt Grow.

Nitikas Brings Back W. K. Bacon.

Nikitas Dipson, proprietor of the Strand and Family theatres at Batavia, has returned from New York with plans for his new Batavia house, which will seat about 2,000. The house will have an auditorium 147 feet in depth and 80 feet wide, and the estimated cost is $125,000. The site has already been purchased.

MacFarlane Enlarges and Improves.

Manager William J. MacFarlane of the Liberty at Canandaigua has announced that the house will be enlarged and improved. His plans call for the extension of the first floor of the theatre thirty-five feet in the rear. The second and third floors will be converted into a balcony. When reconstructed the Liberty will have a seating capacity of more than 1,000.

More Theatres.

A deal is now pending in the city of Hornell which will undoubtedly result in the erection of a big new movie house there in the spring. A New York syndicate is conducting negotiations with Jeremiah Lineham for the sale of his property in Broadway for this purpose.

An option has been taken on the Odd Fellows Temple in Batavia by District-Attorney Kelly, of Geneseo county, acting for Harry D. Crosby, for a long time connected with theatrical enterprises, who plans to promote a community moving picture theatre project. The sale price of the building is $25,000, and it is estimated that the changes proposed would bring the cost up to $80,000. It is understood that a number of responsible Batavians are interested in the plan and that Mr. Crosby was assured of their support before taking the option.

Double Bills Popular.

Double bills are strong at the Victoria Theatre, one of Buffalo's most popular neighborhood houses, and Manager J. H. Michael, who is chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League, is giving his patrons some excellent programs.

Kahn Signs Contracts.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro branch, made a trip to Utica and Schenectady last week and returned with some "fat" contracts, among them the Alhambra and De Luxe theatres in Utica and the Palace in Schenectady. Mr. Kahn was especially pleased at conditions on his trip and reported business booming everywhere.

Franklin Visits Gotham.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, is a busy man these days. Since the Shea Amusement Company got the Associated Exhibitors' franchise for Buffalo and Toronto Mr. Franklin has "commuted" between New York and Buffalo almost every other day. Mr. Franklin left to take up "some important business" Sunday evening, February 1.

Sharick "Exploiting."

Andy Sharick, exploitation man at the local Select office, is meeting with unusual success in his work throughout the territory. "Andy" is popular with the exhibitors and has received several flattering letters for his part in putting over certain Select features in various cities, particularly Syracuse and Jamestown.

Des Moines Dottings

Stolte Has Good Lincoln Program.

MANAGER A. G. STOLTE, of A. H. Blank's Des Moines, staged a special Lincoln Day program Thursday which drew big business. The show opened with the usual news weekly. A large picture of Lincoln was then thrown on the screen and given the effect of being in a gold frame. Manager Stolte gave a four minute talk on "Americanization."

A quartet of local artists sang a number of northern and southern melodies.

The special Americanization film "Land of Opportunity," distributed by Select, was next shown. The orchestra had some special patriotic music. The orchestra solo was Lucius Hosmer's "Northern Rhapsody."

"Pollyanna" Big at Rialto.

The two weeks' showing of "Pollyanna" at the Rialto was a decided box office success. The picture drew capacity at practically every performance. Manager E. H. Helmts carried on extensive newspaper advertising.

The showing was the longest of any picture in Des Moines this season. One week is the usual booking arrangement of the Rialto, which is Abe Frankle's largest Des Moines house.

Exploiting Local War Films.

Sergeant J. A. Ingleston is touring the Adams Circuit, headquarters Des Moines, with four war films secured from the government. The pictures show the 168th Infantry (Iowa) in action, and were taken by the photographic unit to which Ingleston belenged. Many Iowa boys are in the pictures and the stunt has been a big box office success. Ingleston has a little talk he makes before and during the showing. The American Legion post in Des Moines will show the film here in March.

Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance" Is Scheduled for Release February 15

GEORGE FITZMAURICE'S special production, "On with the Dance," featuring Mae Murray and David Powell, which had its country-wide premiere two weeks ago at Dayton, Ohio, and smashed all records for the week at the Colonial Theatre, is announced for general release on the Paramount Artcraft schedule February 15. On this date also Douglas MacLean and Doris May come to the screen in "Mary's Ankle," their third Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount Artcraft release.

The Fitzmaurice production, which was written by Ouida Bergere and based upon the play of the same name by Michael Morton, is said to be essentially a play of New York life. In the brilliant scenes in Broadway cabarets, the luxurious apartments of the rich and the myriad-lighted sky line of the great city, a dazzling spectacle has been filmed.

The story brings to the front the dramatic talents of Mae Murray, erstwhile dancing beauty of Ziegfeld's Follies, and David Powell. Excellent support is given the featured players by John Milturn, Alma Tell, Robert Schable, Ida Waterman and Zola Talma.

Following closely upon their previous successes, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" the new Douglas MacLean-Doris May comedy can be counted upon to firmly establish in the realm of stardom these two young players whose rise in the past few months has been the gossip of filmdom. Even the picturization of the Mary Roberts Rhinehart story and the George V. Hobart stage farce are surpassed it is said, by "Mary's Ankle," which Luther B. Reed, scenarist, has adapted to the screen from May Tully's stage farce.

The performances of Mr. MacLean and Miss May are given worthy support by the other members of the cast among whom Victor Potel, Neal Burns, James Gordon, Lizette Thorne and Ida Lewis are included. Lloyd Ingraham directed the production.

Bessie Barriscale's New Picture Promises Well

BACKED by the best criticisms of the leading film critics and aided by the publicity received by the numerous newspapers running the story in serial form, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," the latest Robertson-Cole release starring Bessie Barriscale, bids fair to be one of the best box-office attractions of the popular star.

Niles Welch, who was seen with Miss Barriscale in "Beckoning Roads," again is on the screen opposite her. There are other notable actors in the supporting cast, such as William Mong, Body Idwin, Dorcas Matthews, Nannine Wright and Mary Jane Irving and Theo-Alice Carpenter, child actresses. This is the third of Miss Norris' stories in which Bessie Barriscale recently has been seen on the screen. Edward Sloman, directed, wielded the megaphone.

Maeterlinck on Way to Goldwyn's Coast Plant; to Study Film Technique

AS the guest of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, playwright and novelist, left, February 10, for the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Included in M. Maeterlinck's party are Madame Maeterlinck, a French actress of beauty and charm; Henry Russell, an old friend of the poet, who is acting as his representative in this country; Mrs. Russell, a native of California; W. R. MacDonald, Maeterlinck's business represeptative, and Edwin Justice Mayer, a well known magazine and newspaper writer from the Goldwyn home office.

The purpose of Mr. Maeterlinck's trip to California is to visit the Goldwyn studios where he will study the technique of picture making preparatory to writing one original story a year for Goldwyn, according to the terms of the contract signed last week. But the itinerary of the tour is so arranged that stops will be made at a number of the most important cities on the line of travel.

Plans have been made for "Maeterlinck Days" in a number of cities where the visit of the poet will be an artistic and social event.

Arriving in Los Angeles, the party will be met by Samuel Goldwyn, who went to the Coast last week. The poet-philosopher will be introduced immediately to the mysteries of picture production.

Following is the itinerary of the Maeterlinck party: Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, February 11; Cleveland, Detroit, February 12; Chicago, February 13; Kansas City, February 14; St. Louis, February 15; Memphis, February 16; New Orleans, February 17; San Diego, Los Angeles, February 20.

The Cause of This "Doctorly" Layout Is "Mary's Ankle."

We see Douglas McLean Consoling Doris May, the possessor of the sprained ankle. Then he practises "sounding" the parrot. Finally he says, "I love you" over the stethoscope. All in "Mary Ankle," released by Paramount.

William Russell's Fourth for Fox "Shod With Fire," Has Wide Appeal

THE recent release of "Shod With Fire," by Fox Film Corporation represents another upward move in William Russell's rise to popularity under the Fox standard. Dramatic critics and exhibitors who have viewed showings of the latest picture are unanimous in their verdict that it is a drama of great drawing power, throwing Mr. Russell's personality into bold relief.

The ascent of this star has been remarkable for its consistency. Since he made his auspicious debut as a Fox artist in "Sacred Silence," each new production has surpassed its predecessor in finess of execution and strength of appeal. "Eastward Ho!" followed close upon the first picture. Then came "The Lincoln Highwayman." "Shod With Fire" is the fourth picture.

Possesses Wide Appeal.

In the judgment of those who witnessed advance showings of "Shod With Fire," its main strength lies in the wide appeal it possesses for the great American public, containing as it does a directness of action. Accessories of great drawing power have been prepared by Fox Film Corporation to assure the picture crowded houses.

The story is from the pen of Harold Titus whose work has met with much success in the past. Emmett J. Flynn directed the staging of "Shod With Fire." He had the direction of "Eastward Ho!" and "The Lincoln Highwayman," and demonstrated what a mighty combination he and Russell constitute. The latest work of Russel and Flynn has the support of a high calibered cast including Helen Ferguson, Betty Schade, Robert Cain, George Stewart, Nelson McDowell and Jack Connelly.

Historical War Film Draws Crowds.

The Boston Photoplay Company, which controls the rights for the New England territory to "The Lost Battalion," the six-reel feature production being released on the state rights market by W. H. Productions Company, is meeting with great success throughout its territory. The picture is attracting crowds to theatres and exhibitors are reporting successful showings.

The Boston Photoplay Company is putting this over on a large scale, employing many unique advertising and publicity ideas and the results of good showmanship are everywhere manifest in their territory.

Selznick Back From Australia.

Following a stay of several months in the Antipodes, Phil Selznick, well known American moving picture producer, accompanied by his wife and H. Fine, an official of the Selznick company, returned to San Francisco on February 2. While in Australia a distributing branch was opened and D. J. Selznick, who made the trip there with his brother, remained in charge. Plans are now under way for greatly expanding the company's business throughout the Orient and India.

Goldwyn Assigns Stars to Play in Three Great Stage Successes

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the assignment of three of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's stars to popular stage plays recently purchased by Goldwyn for adaptation to the screen. The selections are Madge Kennedy in "The Truth," Jack Pickford in "Officer 666" and Tom Moore in "Stop Thief."

Those who recall the character of the wife of Clyde Fitch's "The Truth" as it was portrayed by Clara Bloodgood in the original American production, and a few years ago by Grace George in an all-star revival, will recognize how ideally the role is suited to the Goldwyn comedienne. It calls for the finesse in character delineation which Miss Kennedy is so thoroughly qualified to contribute and promises to be the most impressive of this actress' screen portrayals.

As Miss Kennedy is still working at Goldwyn's New York studio in "Trimmed in Red," under the direction of Hugo Ballin, and no date has been set for the beginning of the production of "The Truth," it is probable that the supporting company will not be selected for some time to come.

With "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" ready for release and "The Double-Dyed Deceiver," an O. Henry story, in preparation, it is likely that Jack Pickford will be free to commence work in "Officer 666" before many weeks have passed. In this play, which scored a phenomenal success on Broadway under the management of Cohan & Harris, the Goldwyn actor will have a role unlike those essayed in his first starring vehicles.

Tom Moore is the logical choice for "Stop Thief," the Cohan & Harris mystery comedy recently secured by Goldwyn. This is a rapid-action play calling for the most spirited sort of interpretation, such as Moore is admirably equipped to supply. He is now at the Culver City studios working on "The Great Accident," a Ben Ames Williams story being directed by Harry Beaumont.

Simplex Contracts for Additional Floor Space

CLOSE on the heels of the fire which visited one of the Simplex buildings on January 31 comes the news that the entire ninth floor of the main building at 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, has been leased by the Precision Machine Company, Inc., and within one hour after the signing, a large force of millwrights were at work arranging for the hanging of the shafting while other crews of workmen attended to the installation of machinery.

This activity resulted in seeing considerable machinery installed on the floor in question which in floor area will give the Simplex builders almost as much manufacturing space as that in in the building affected by the recent fire.

The machinery being installed on the additional floor will be used for manufacturing and finishing type "S" lamphouse parts and pedestals.

Health Officers Shut Some Theatres in Western New York Municipalities

A NUMBER of the cities and towns of Western New York are now under the same closing ban that was in force last year due to the influenza epidemic. In no instance so far reported this year has the outbreak of influenza been in any way as serious as the epidemic of last year, but it seems that health officials are inclined to take no chances. The disease this winter is by no means virulent, say the health officials, but it is a crowd-born one, making it necessary to prevent gatherings of people.

Rochester is still wide open, the city officials not being so much alarmed as the officials of the smaller places. In Geneva, Warsaw, Phelps and many other places the theatres have been closed for an indefinite period, depending upon when the health officer thinks they ought to be permitted to resume.

In striking contrast is the policy of the city authorities of Oswego. There is as much influenza there as in the average city or town, but the authorities have not jumped to the conclusion that theatres should be closed just because a precedent was set last year. They believe that open theatres are a medium for quickly reaching and educating the public along health lines. However, they are not blind to the potential dangers of the situation and the theatre men are bound to observe the following rules:

Rules Laid Down.

No overcrowding will be permitted. The lobby is to be kept free. In the rear of the theatre, no standing will be permitted.

Prohibit smoking in theatres and moving picture houses.

Thoroughly ventilate the theatres and all moving picture houses, keeping exhaust fans running at all times. Doors to be kept wide open for two hours each morning.

Provide heat so as to cause no discomfort to the audience in view of the excellent ventilation required.

Absolutely prohibit the use of all cups, glasses and towels in common.

Maintain proper ventilation of the operator's booths.

Ventilate the water closet apartments and maintain an adequate supply of water to flush all plumbing.

Thoroughly clean and maintain in a clean condition all parts of the theatre.

Warn patrons sneezing and coughing to leave the premises, unless they cover the face with a handkerchief.

Flu Recurs in Salt Lake but Theatres Are Open

RECURRENCE of the Spanish influenza epidemic has paralyzed theatre business in Salt Lake City. No closing restrictions have been imposed, but attendance has shown a big falling off during the past ten days. While the disease is in a light form, it is said to be more prevalent than during the epidemic of 1918, which resulted in the closing of all theatres for two months.

The health authorities have become convinced that the closing of 1918 did not stay spread of the disease, and have announced that no effort will be made to close theatres, schools or churches this year. The theatres are taking all possible precautions, and are co-operating with the health officials in paying especial attention to ventilation. Crowding is being discouraged either in or at the entrance of theatres.

Everything possible is being done to allay public fear of the disease, and the epidemic appears to have reached its climax.

"Flu" Impairs Business of Cleveland Theatres

CLEVELAND and northern Ohio felt the effects of the influenza epidemic the first week in February and in no small way. All of the leading picture theatres of Cleveland and many neighborhood houses reported a falling off in business which they could attribute to nothing else than the "flu."

In addition to that, a number of smaller towns in northern Ohio put the ban on public gatherings, including moving picture shows. These included New London, Ada, Frederickstown, Geneva, East Palestine and Dillonvale.

Although the epidemic was not as severe as a year ago, the people were scared by the warnings and appeals of officials and naturally remained away from the theatres.

All Cleveland theatres co-operated with the health commissioner in keeping their houses at the prescribed degree of temperature—70 degrees—and in posting signs on the entrance doors appealing to the patrons to be careful when coughing and sneezing.

"Flu" Closes Theatres.

The "flu" epidemic has become so acute in Geneva, N. Y., that the board of health has ordered all theatres closed. Churches and other places of public gathering also come under the ban. The town of Delevan, N. Y., has adopted a like measure and closed its theatres, churches, schools, etc., because of the large number of influenza cases. In Bradford, Pa., a meeting of the health authorities and city officials has been called to consider closing all theatres.

In Buffalo, while the number of cases has steadily increased, the newspapers have adopted a policy of not "playing up" the number of cases, and the psychological effect has been wonderful to date. It is said that the worrying over the disease is the cause of most of the cases. Local exhibitors have not even given possible closing a thought at this writing.

"Flu" Hits Nebraska and Iowa Hard.

The influenza epidemic in the Middle West is doing much more damage by discouraging crowds than it is by closing theatres. These towns were reported by the Omaha Film Board of Trade as being closed on February 4: in Nebraska, Carroll, Crete, Callaway, Dewitt, Dorchester, Diller, Du Bois, Ewing, Friend, Franklin, Fort Crook, Gresham, Crofton, Stella, Handley, Lynch, Minden, Odell, O'Neill, St. Edwards, Shubert, Swanton, Talmadge, Tobias; in Iowa, Alton, Auburn, Clarinda, Castana, Clarion, Fort Dodge, Ida Grove, Irwin, Lorimore, Manilla, Maynard, Orange City, Pisgah, Russell, Walnut, Smithland.

Ghost of Influenza Appears.

Influenza is appearing in a mild form in many places in California, and already theatres have been closed in some towns by health authorities. These are mostly small places and film exchanges scarcely notice the cancellation of service, but the outlook is made disquieting. The towns in the San Francisco territory in which theatres are closed are Woodland, Madera, Escalon, McCloud and Clovis.

Theatres to Aid in Health Campaign.

A health campaign is to be conducted in Kansas City, Mo., through the medium of the moving picture screen. Members of the Kansas City Film Association met with Dr. E. H. Bullock, health director, recently and volunteered to co-operate with the health department by running health slides in the theatres.

"Copy" for the slides will be prepared by Dr. Bullock. The first will deal with the prevailing epidemic of influenza, but after its termination, there will be no halt. Other matters of health will be touched upon in the campaign. The state and national health departments have been asked to make recommendations for use in Kansas City.

"The moving picture theatre is one of the best mediums for dispensing that sort of information, and without doubt the benefit to the public health will be enormous," the health director said.

"Flu" Ban on Theatres Is Off in Minneapolis

PRESENT indications are that Minneapolis theatres are rid of the menace of enforced closing, at least for some time. Dr. F. E. Harrington, Minneapolis health commissioner, after a conference last week with Dr. B. F. Simon, St. Paul commissioner, has removed the restrictions against lobby crowding and sale of tickets after a theatre was filled. There have been no restrictions in force in St. Paul.

Dr. Harrington's orders, which, it is estimated, cost theatre owners in the city thousands of dollars in patronage turned away, were modified after theatre men told him bluntly that they would start action to see that all other business enterprises of the city were closed, if they were singled out for especial restrictions. He has now declared that there is no more danger of spreading influenza from theatre crowds than from crowds in street cars and department stores.

The control of the disease in the Twin Cities has been made more difficult, physicians reported, by the presence in the two cities of more than 150,000 out-of-town visitors to the automobile show. Instead of the heavy business that exhibitors of the two cities expected last week, only a normal amount was received.

Vivian Rich Made a Star by Fox; Will Act in "Would You Forgive?"

Vivian Rich
Who has been added to the roster of Fox stars.

TO the big array of stars under the banner of William Fox has been added Vivian Rich. Her beauty, the spirit of her work, her vivacity and her artistic handling of any role assigned to her are refreshing memories to all who have seen her in motion pictures. Miss Rich has won her position as a star by hard work, talent and consistent effort to please. Her first appearance as a star will be in the picture, "Would You Forgive?"

Miss Rich is literally a daughter of the sea, having been born on shipboard while here parents were en route from Cuba to New York. Her father, Captain Nathan Kenny Rich, was a sea captain born of old Colonial stock in that land of old sandogs, Provincetown, on the tip of Cape Cod; and it was on his ship that she spent most of her first two years.

Her tendencies and ambitions had always been toward the stage. After her graduation from high school she went with her sister to New York. The first engagement for Vivian was in a revival of "The Country Girl" at the Herald Square Theatre, where she plunged right into the drama with the solitary but expressive line, "Chick, Chick, Chick." Later she was chosen by Gus Edwards to play the ingenue part in his vaudeville act "School Days."

Soon a motion picture director got a glimpse of the trim little miss with her curls down her back and the big black bow of ribbon in her hair, and a film engagement quickly followed. This led to others, and each of them took her up a little further on the ladder. Among her appearances was one Wallace Reid and Jack Kerrigan. Then she wrote "Nieda," in which Margarita Fisher starred afterward, playing the lead with William Farnum in "The Price of Silence."

Miss Rich's offer from William Fox came as a complete surprise to her. She was discussing an engagement with another producer when the phone call came from the Fox offices. Thither she hurried and signed.

Mary Pickford to Tour World and Make Pictures in Various Lands

AFTER nearly ten years of continuous appearance before the camera, during which time she has appeared in nearly 100 successes, Mary Pickford, "America's Sweetheart," will make a complete tour of the world. She will produce two or three plays for the screen, using the locale of the different countries she visits for the exterior settings.

For years this tour has been contemplated, but despite no end of urgent requests from hundreds of sources abroad for Miss Pickford to be the guest of honor of royalty, societies, organizations and the like, she has consistently been compelled to extend her regrets because of her work. Only recently she had the written request from the school children of Australia to visit their country, the invitation having been personally signed by over 30,000 Australian girls and boys. Similar messages of endorsement have come so often that some weeks ago Miss Pickford decided to tour the world.

Realizing a Life-Long Ambition.

Under her own producing organization, in conjunction with the policies of the United Artists Corporation, the possibility of a "round-the-world" tour is possible. Arrangements are now being made for the trip to begin immediately after she has finished her second "Big Four" production, work upon which will be started soon.

"I'm going to have the time of my life," Miss Pickford said, "for it will be the first opportunity I have had to realize this life-long ambition, I will take my mother and a number of important heads of my producing organization with me on the trip, and we will not let any opportunities pass to make pictures as we travel through the different countries.

"Moreover I'm going to give sway to one of my greatest passions, shopping. I am at present building a beautiful home in California, where I will live permanently after my return, and I am going to furnish it myself, from top to bottom. Much of the furnishings I will purchase abroad, just picking up a few things in each country that I like and which I would care to have around me in my new home."

Frohman Cast Has Narrow Escape Making Water Scenes

WORD was just received at the offices of the Frohman Amusement Corporation to the effect that the United States steam yacht "Isis," which was loaned by the Government to the Frohman Amusement Corporation for the purpose of taking scenes on board in the serial production "The Invisible Ray," was sunk off the coast of St. Augustine, Fla., a few hours after the cast and staff employed in the making of the serial had left the yacht at sea.

Scenes in the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes called for certain action on the decks and the interiors of a large steam yacht while in the open sea, and arrangements were made with the Government for the use of the yacht which was then coaling at Jacksonville, Fla., and which was in charge of Commander Robert F. Luce.

The yacht left Jacksonville for St. Augustine with the Frohman cast on board accompanied by a steam launch. The work was all done by the cast including the escape of Ruth Clifford from the yacht and her rescue by Jack Sherrill, both of whom are starred in the serial. The work was finished and the entire cast returned on the launch to Jacksonville.

Shortly after the company left the yacht, she struck a part of a submerged wreck, tearing a large hole in the bottom of the ship.

Pantages Circuit Books Johnny Dooley Comedies

THE Pantages Circuit has contracted for the entire series of Johnny Dooley Comedies and has guaranteed a twenty weeks' run on each subject released by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., featuring the popular Ziegfeld star. The Dooley Comedies will be a feature part of the program used in the Pantages houses and will be given a prominent place in the billing.

The Pantages management, prompted by the fame won by Johnny Dooley on the legitimate stage, decided to look at the film efforts of the young star. After viewing several subjects they were entirely satisfied that he is destined to become just as great on the screen as he is on the stage. Contracts were immediately entered into with Tyrad Pictures, Inc., for first-run privilege at their chain of theatres. They have already been scheduled for an early run at San Francisco and Oakland, Cal., and Minneapolis.

Many other large circuits of theatres are awaiting final contracts and these are temporarily being withheld by Tyrad until definite arrangements have been made regarding the disposition of state rights in their particular localities.

The Tyrad New York exchange has booked the greater part of its territory and has started to allot dates to the larger local theatres on the first Dooley release, which just had its premier showing at the Broadway Theatre.

Big Fight in "Empty Arms."

Willard King Bradley, author of "Empty Arms," the initial Lester Park-Edward Whiteside production shortly to be released, is evidently trying to annihilate all of filmdom's leading men. Being Irish, Bradley manages to inject a corking scrap into every screen story he writes.

Belgium Wants American Films and Projection Apparatus, Says Consul

AMERICAN motion pictures have proved extremely popular in Belgium and are at the present time shown regularly at most of the best Belgian picture theatres, according to Vice-Consul Charles W. Drew, Jr., at Brussels. Films are generally purchased in Belgium with an exclusive right (monopoly) clause secured by contract. The duration of this contract is, as a rule, from three to five years. Quotations are preferred per meter, that being the unit of measurement of the country.

Belgian purchasers seldom desire more than two copies of a film. Comedies are usually purchased in a single copy, while dramas which promise to be sufficiently interesting are taken in duplicate. The usual price for single copies of ordinary films is 1.50 to 1,75 francs a meter.

The number of reels in a drama is said to be of no great importance; the feature films, however, are generally in the vicinity of 1,500 meters in length. Comedies range from 500 to 800 meters. Films in episodes (series pictures) are proving popular in Belgium, especially in the provincial cities.

Kind of Films Demanded.

There is at the present time no censor for motion pictures in Belgium, but the advisability of appointing one is being strongly considered by the Chambres des Deputes.

Films dealing with religion, except when well handled from the broad standpoint of Christianity in general, are not in demand. Themes involving political questions, drunkeness, murders, etc., are not popular. It is only exceptionally good films of the war that are still interesting, the public having ceased to demand pictures of this sort.

The most popular screen subjects in Belgium at this time, in the approximate order of their appeal, are: (1) Society dramas, especially when rich in luxurious scenes, furnishings, etc.; (2) melodramas with rapid, forceful action; (3) comedies, particularly the exceedingly comical variety; (4) dramatic comedies with rapid action; (5) Far West (cowboy) scenes, if low in price; (6) detective dramas in limited numbers, and (7) series pictures at a moderate price. Dramas with wild animals and thrilling situations, as well as circus pictures, are also in moderate demand.

Germany Seeks Trade.

American films have been well received in Belgium. During the war many French firms purchased American films ,with exclusive rights for France and Belgium, and all these films have been introduced on the Belgian market since the armistice. French films are well-known also, and there is a limited number received from Italian, Norwegian, Swedish and Danish producers. At the present time no German films are on the market, but it is predicted that two or three strong German producers will make every effort to regain their former business here.

There are 811 motion picture theatres in Belgium, but outside of the larger cities, such as Brussels, Antwerp, Liege and Ghent, many of these play only three days a week, generally on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays. Very few of the theatres are equipped with organs. Music is furnished generally by either a piano or an orchestra. In a few of the better theatres in the large cities the music is made something of a feature.

Market for Projection Apparatus.

The best-known and most-used projectors are those manufactured by the French firms of Pathe, Gaumont and the German firm of Hernemann. The vice consul has been informed that Belgium offers an excellent market for American projection apparatus if it can be handled through a depot in Brussels, carrying a small but representative stock.

The Belgian motion picture industry is organized under the Chambre Syndicale de la Cinematographie, Palais de la Bourse de Commerce, Bruxelles. Practically all Belgian motion picture men are members of this organization.

Central West Film Men Prosper Despite Widespread "Flu" Epidemic

BUSINESSS in motion picture houses throughout the Central West is booming despite a widespread influenza epidemic, according to J. C. Ragland, general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, upon his return from a ten-day trip in that territory.

"I visited Chicago, Detroit and St. Louis," Mr. Ragland reported, "and came in contact with a number of exhibitors in the district covered by the exchanges in these cities. Although the influenza epidemic is severe, it is causing no alarm among the exhibitors, so far as I could ascertain. I was told that business was fine and that there were crowded houses everywhere. Evidently people have no fear of contagion in the new modern, well ventilated and thoroughly disinfected motion picture houses."

One of the objects of Mr. Ragland's trip was to install Ralph B. Quive as Realart's Detroit manager. Mr. Quive was recently transferred from San Francisco and succeeds C. G. Kingsley, who is now Realart manager in Omaha. In Detroit Mr. Ragland closed a contract with T. H. Ealand, manager of the Charles H. Miller circuit of vaudeville houses, for a three weeks' showing in its three Detroit houses of "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production.

Finishing his trip in St. Louis, Mr. Ragland renewed old acquaintances with exchangemen and exhibitors in that city, where for several years he was manager of the St. Louis office of Select Pictures Corporation.

The principal object of Mr. Ragland's trip was to lay plans through Realart branch managers for co-operation with exhibitors in celebration of Americanization Week. The Realart official reports having found exhibitors generally preparing to put on special programs on Lincoln's Birthday, in compliance with the request of Secretary Lane.

Sidelights and Reflections

THE Lincoln birthday week engagement of "The Copperhead" at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, found both the public and the daily press ready and eager to class this Famous Players-Lasky production among the best efforts of the screen. If the moving picture ever has a series of standard works to correspond with those of the stage this drama, fashioned from a story by Frederick Landis, will take a prominent place among the enduring achievements of the silver sheet. The tone of lofty patriotism which is always present in the theme is accompanied by all of the qualities that go to make a popular entertainment for the theatre.

Of all our national characters Abraham Lincoln has been seen the most on the screen. This is as it should be. The man and his deeds are the highest inspiration ever offered by any one born an American, and his part in the picture shows the beautiful humanity of his many sided nature and his clear vision when choosing even the most obscure of his military aids. "The Copperhead" is a notable object lession when the worth of the screen is brought into question.

Among the signs of the times in relation to the moving picture is the growing importance of the short comedies and the prominent place they are taking on so many programs. The improvement in this class of screen entertainment during the past year has raised the rental price of two reelers by leaps and bounds and given the exhibitor an attraction that amply repays it greatly increased cost. The managers of many of the theatres have been quick to realize the advantage in having the orchestra assist in putting over the comedy points in these pictures, the trap-drummer being the star performer. A recent number of the Scientific American contained an article on this subject with the following opening paragraph:

"Trap-drumming elevated to the nth degree and its recognition as a properly interpretative music instead of merely an incidental to orchestration, is the latest contribution to music brought about through the motion picture. Under the direction of the drummer of a leading New York motion picture theatre—a drummer, by the way, who is a master noise producer—a well known film producer is putting out a 'sound sheet' to be used in conjunction with his animated cartoons. Indeed, it is claimed that these sound sheets have enhanced to a marked degree the mirth-provoking qualities of these pictures. And we can well believe it."

A visit to any theatre employing this method of giving a comedy a lift, will demonstrate its value.

"The Strongest"

Fox Releases Five-Reel Subject Based on Novel by "The Tiger of France."

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

WHEN a world figure, such as Georges Clemenceau, known as "The Tiger of France," goes about the business of telling a story, the rest of the world is apt to sit up and take careful notice. In no way perhaps can a man of such distinction give a better idea of his own individuality and his outlook upon life than by concocting a story. That is what Clemenceau did—he wrote a novel called "The Strongest," and later, while still suffering from the bullet wound inflicted by the would-be-assassin, he aided in preparing an adaptation of this novel for the screen.

Such writing has happened many times, particularly in Europe. Disraeli, for one, was the author of "Lothair" and other novels. It was said of his output that the reader could feel the movement of the machinery and almost hear the whir of the plot mechanism. But nevertheless, the world gave due attention to what Disraeli had to say.

Clemenceau's screen story, "The Strongest," will undoubtedly come in for a share of this same criticism, for the plot movement is at times mechanical. There are also a number of familiar situations and some time-tried dramatic devices. But under it all there is the steady pulsation of a broad underlying theme, a theme which proves that love is stronger than selfishness and avarice. The greatness of the production is to be found in the simple strength of its conception, rather than in its development, though it is by no means free from moments of real dramatic worth, and tells an entertaining story.

To get a clear vision of this powerful motive, one must include in the picture the all-shadowing figure of Clemenceau himself. It must always be remembered that this comparatively simple story, with its almost naive way of driving home a great truth, was the conception of a rugged, vigorous intellect, an old and lusty fighter, in war and in peace. It is enough to say of "The Strongest," whatever its shortcomings in the way of dramatic structure, that it sprang from the brain of Georges Clemenceau, the grand old man of France. That it will draw new patrons to the moving picture theatre is not to be doubted.

The cast, which is largely, though not entirely, composed of French players, includes among its numbers Renee Adoree, a beautiful young Parisian artist. Carlo Liten, who plays the Marquis, is a famous Belgian actor, and Harrison Hunter is well known in this country. The settings are true to French life and in keeping with the story.

Cast.

Claudia	Renee Adoree
Henri	Carlo Liten
Harle	Harrison Hunter
Claire Harle	Florence Malone
Nanette	Madame Tressida
Visconte	Jean Gauthier de Trigny
Comtesse	Georgette Gauthier de Trigny
Maurice	Hal Horne

Prefect of Police	C. A. de Lima

Story by Georges Clemenceau.
Direction by Raoul A. Walsh.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Harle, in "The Strongest," is a French business man, the head of a great factory. He is so absorbed in busines affairs that he continually neglects his wife, Claire. One day Harle meets Henri, the Marquis of Puymaufray, an old schoolmate. He invites Henri to go home with him for an extended visit.

The Marquis is a cultured man, who loves music and poetry. He brings a new breath of life to Claire Harle, who is famished for love and attention. Harle becomes more and more absorbed in business, leaving the Marquis and Claire together much of the time. The inevitable happens, they fall deeply in love.

The Marquis finally leaves and some months later Claire gives birth to a baby girl. Harle accepts the child as his own without question, but is disappointed because it is not a boy. Claire, a victim of neglect and depression, dies shortly after the child is born.

Twenty years pass and Claudia Harle has grown to be a beautiful girl and a great social favorite. Her father chooses a count for her to wed, but Claudia herself loves a young American. The girl is abducted and held for ransom by some of her father's disgruntled employes. During a fight for her recovery, the Marquis, who has long kept a silent watch over the girl, loses his life. The young American succeeds in rescuing the girl. After the death of the Marquis the truth becomes known that he was Claudia's father. Harle, crushed in spirit, retires to his big estate and Claudia comes to America with her young husband.

"The Birth of a Soul"

Harry T. Morey Plays Double Role Effectively in Feud Story of Cumberland Mountains.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

REPLETE with the atmosphere of the southern mountain regions, the Vitagraph five-part production "The Birth of a Soul," featuring Harry T. Morey in a double role, pleases by reason of its sincerity and what might be termed a tragedy-romance of the situation on which it is based. It contains some attractive shots in the Kentucky mountains and has sufficient heart interest to hold the average spectator.

There are a couple of inconsistencies noticeable in the picture, one of which occurs in the double role so admirably played by Harry Morey. One cannot help questioning the exact similarity in appearance between members of two mountain families who still suffer from the feuds of their grandfathers, such as that between Charles Drayton and Phil Grey. The situation is not impossible, but rather improbable.

Playing the feminine lead is Jean Paige. She gives a graceful portrayal of the character of Dorothy Barlow. The cast is a god one. As stories of this kind go, "The Birth of a Soul" is excellent. It lives up to the significance of its title.

Story by Arthur Edwin Krews.

Direction by Edwin L. Hollywood.

Length, 4,986 feet.

The Story.

Two men of exact similarity in appearance, Phil Grey and Charles Drayton, are the central figures in "The Birth of a Soul." Charles Drayton, the son of a mountain family which has for years nursed a difference with its neighbors, the Barlows, has become emancipated from the old idea of holding a grudge, and has developed into a successful business man in the city. Phil Grey, still driving oxen in the mountains, is a friend of booze. His usefulnes is therefore measured by the number of his sober moments.

Dorothy, the pretty daughter of Lem Barlow, is loved by both Phil Grey and Charles Drayton, and when Dorothy's grandfather is shot and killed by George Drayton, an uncle of Charles, because sparks from the Barlow chimney set fire to the roof of his cabin, Phil aids in implicating Charles in the murder with George Drayton. When, however, he discovers that Dorothy is really in love with Charles, and in fact has become his wife in the face of the accusation, he elects himself a majority of one to protect the man she loves.

After persuading the Barlows that it is George Drayton alone who is the criminal in the case, he is allowed a certain number of hours to go and bring him to take the place of Charles, who is to be hung in case Phil fails. George is thrown from a cliff into the water and drowned; and when Phil returns without him, and finds that his relatives are still firm in their decision to make Charles pay the penalty, he enters the barn where Charles is imprisoned, changes clothes with him, and prepares to take his place, while Charles goes to join Dorothy. The shadow of the noose dropping over the head of Phil closes the picture.

"The Invisible Bond"

Paramount-Artcraft Subject Presents Irene Castle in Dramatic Role.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A WOMAN whose love for her husband survives trying periods of disillusionment, and despairs not, even though a lawful separation takes place, is the heroine of "The Invisible Bond." The dramatic possibilities of the story, while frequently hinted at in the screen version, have not been utilized to their fullest extent. Interesting as is the thematic material with its involved situations, it could be helped by more rapid action and less lengthy subtitles.

Irene Castle, in the stellar role, more than justifies the reputation which she holds as a fashion connoisseur. Her every appearance calls forth admiration for her becoming and exclusive gowns. Personally, she is sweet and appealing, but emotionally, a trifle disappointing, some of her strongest scenes being marred by a tendency toward statuesqueness.

Huntley Gordon, as the wayward husband, has a difficult role which he manages with excellent judgment, and without entirely forfeiting the good-will of the spectator. The unlovely role of "the woman between" falls to Claire Adams, who gives a good performance. Capable support is given also by Fleming Ward, George Majeroni, Helen Green, Ida Waterman and Warburton Gamble. The work of the entire cast could have been made more pleasing and finished had the director made greater demands upon them. The sets merit the same appreciation as does Miss Castle's wardrobe, being equally distinctive.

Length, 4986 feet.

The Story.

Four years of happy married life have cemented Marcia Crossey's love for her husband, Harleth, and her baby. Her faith in Crossey has been unshaken, and so when certain unpleasant facts about a flirtation on his part come to her notice, she is at a loss to know what to do.

The first disillusionment comes at one of her dinner parties, where Harleth's attentions to Leila Templeton, an audacious coquette, is generally noticed and discussed. That night Leila dares Harleth, who has been drinking heavily, to take her out for a midnight motor ride. He consents, and they do not return until all of the guests, except Curtis Jennings, an old sweetheart of Marcia's, have left. Curtis, enraged against Harleth's treatment of his wife, leaves the scene and escorts Leila home.

But this is only the beginning. The breach between husband and wife widens. One night after Harleth has telephoned that he can not come home for dinner, Marcia's maid suddenly enters and brings Marcia the word that Wasson, the chauffeur, has gone mad, and is threatening to kill someone. Marcia endeavors to get word to her husband to warn him to be careful when he returns, but discovers that he is with Leila. She is led to believe that Harleth is unfaithful to her and demands an explanation. Her husband answers that he has a right to his "personal liberty."

Out of this state of affairs a divorce arises. In time, Harleth marries Leila, who continues her promiscuous flirtations. Curtis begs Marcia to marry him, but she cannot forget Harleth. Then retribution overtakes Leila. She is killed in an auto accident and the happiness, which has always been Marcia's right, comes to her at last, when Harleth avows his love for her.

"$30,000"

J. Warren Kerrigan Appears in Mystery Story Produced by Robert Brunton, Released by W. W. Hodkinson.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IF the story on which the Robert Brunton produced "$30,000" is based had been a more plausible one, it would have been easier for the director to have hit the mark of perfection. As it stands "$30,000" presents a characterization which is more interesting because it is interpreted by a cast of capable players, who envelop individual roles with a realism that claims attention. The picture has plenty of action, and the majority will no doubt be pleased with the mystery surrounding certain incidents. Quite a large degree of anticipation is aroused when the thirty thousand dollars hidden behind the pictures on the walls of lawyer Trask's office are caught by a gust of wind.

J. Warren Kerrigan makes better headway with the role of John Trask as the action becomes more breezy. The earlier stages of the picture offer little opportunity to the star. Fritzi Brunette is attractive as Aline Norton, the "third party" in the manipulation of the thirty thousand. She does especially good work. Carl Stockdale is one of the types of the play, and is distinctly responsible for the spectator's interest in Ferdinand Spargo. Nancy Chase as Christine Lloyd, and Joseph Dowling as Annester Norton, are outstanding figures.

Story by H. B. Daniel.
Direction by Ernest C. Warde.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

The story of "$30,000" surrounds the mystery of the theft of a necklace. Sydney Lloyd, the weakling nephew of a rich old man, is the thief, who uses the costly article to pay a gambling debt. The sister of Sydney, Christine Lloyd, is shocked at her brother's misdeed, undertakes to recover the necklace, and on being told that the gamblers will deal only with a third party, she engages John Trask, a young and thus far unsuccessful lawyer, to handle the transaction. Aline Norton, the daughter of a penniless aristocrat, accepts the task of acting as the "third party."

When the sum of $30,000 is placed in John Trask's hands by a veiled woman, after banking hours, he looks about for a safe place to deposit it, and places equal portions of it behind two of the pictures on the wall of his office. That night, when Annester Norton, now making a living for himself and his daughter by cleaning office buildings, opens the window, the money is scattered to the floor by a gust of wind and Norton, unable to resist the temptation, steals the money.

Next day, when his daughter brings the necklace to exchange for the money, Trask is faced with a serious problem. That night he visits the gambling house and wins $30,000 at the roulette wheel and triumphantly places the necklace in the hands of the right party. A tempest in a teapot occurs when Lloyd examines the necklace and finds that it is only an imitation of the original. Trask then makes a raid on the gambling den and recovers the right necklace. Norton, repenting of his theft, gives Aline the stolen money to return to its owner. The picture closes with Trask's proposal to Aline.

"The Land of Opportunity"

Ralph Ince Drama of Great Power Portraying Broad Humanity of Lincoln Produced by Selznick.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A MOST convincing argument for true-hearted Americanism, "The Land of Opportunity," proves its case through the power of actual deeds rather than by preachment. The few sub-titles used are essential ones and carry weight through their dignified moderation in sentiment and tone. The theme is enforced in an episode of Lincoln's early life, showing his deep compassion for the unfortunate, his sympathetic sense of justice and the marvelous influence he exerted long before he became a national figure.

The story is told by a venerable club steward in answer to the argument by a young club member for the equalization of wealth. The old servant relates how Lincoln laid aside important political engagements and walked twenty miles to save a boy unjustly accused of murder, appearing at the trial just in time to win the case. The nobility of the service rendered is profoundly impressed on the young club member. He is then reminded that American principles declare for the equalization of opportunity and work out so well that Lincoln, the rail-splitter, became the country's chief executive and one of the grandest figures in the history of mankind.

All this is done with the delicate effectiveness for high-class workmanship in every department of production. Ralph Ince is the chief factor, both as director and actor. His impersonations of Lincoln in the past have all been good, and this one demonstrates his appreciation of every peculiar characteristic of the martyred President. It is a masterly impersonation, strengthened by a strong selection of types on all sides and given intense reality by careful observance of mood and atmosphere. A powerful and timely production enthusiastically applauded at the Strand and bound to win everywhere in America.

THE success of "The Blooming Angel" is such that author, star director and supporting cast all deserve to share in the forthcoming honors. From every standpoint the production is most enjoyable. The manoeuvers of an ingenious heroine who launches a successful business enterprise by sensational advertising and who incidentally cures her husband of hay fever and a passion for the oratorical platform, supply an endless amount of legitimate fun.

In every mood, Madge Kennedy is a captivating little entertainer. Whether she engages in a fit of laughter, weeping or sneezing, she is always piquantly graphic. In direct contrast to her lively personality and chic appearance, is that of her husband, a serious long-haired youth, who washes his way through college by running the campus laundry. This role is played with fine understanding by Pat O'Malley.

Margery Wilson has skilfully adapted herself to the role of the pale-faced Carlotta, the college president's daughter, who has seized upon the hero with the intent of making him a second Daniel Webster. Equal commendation is due the entire cast, including Arthur Housman, Robert Chandler, Billy Courtright and Vera Lewis. The evidence of conscientious, efficient directing is everywhere noticeable, and, perhaps, most of all, in the court-room scene, where the management of detail is a real triumph. Subtitles that are natural and pleasantly short, add to the artistic effect. The settings are as far above mediocrity as is the directing.

The Story.

Because of getting too much joy out of college life, "Floss" Brannon is expelled. Her immediate move is to win over Chester Framm, a struggling student who works in the college laundry. This requires constant wariness, as Chester is almost in the toils of Carlotta, an energetic student bent on making an orator out of him. This possibility Floss regards as a calamity and thwarts Carlotta's plans by finding an office position for Chester and then promtply marrying him.

But the forthcoming salary is insufficient, and Floss concocts a scheme for raising funds by manufacturing a face lotion which she calls "Angel Bloom." Her husband disapproves from the start and grows more and more irritated as he sees her face on advertiing posters placed in drug store windows. Her plan seems doomed to failure, as the cream does not prove popular. Then another inspiration comes. Floss hears of a circus stranded in the city, and manages to get one of the elephants, which she coats with her lotion, tagging him with a huge ad for "Angel Bloom," thereby attracting an interested crowd.

Then suddenly the animal flops. Confusion arises. Carlotta appears and accuses Floss of having stopped the circulation in the veins of the elephant by covering him with complexion cream. As an agent of the humane society, she has Floss arrested on the charge of inhumanity. But Floss has a "way," even in encountering judges, and is freed because of her personal charm. The escapade only furthers her success by giving her complexion cream wide-spread publicity. And thus good fortune, at last, awaits hero and heroine.

"The Fortune Hunter"

Vitagraph Makes Splendid Photoplay of Winchell Smith's Popular Stage Comedy-drama.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

ONE of the finest comedy-dramas with a rural atmosphere that the screen has ever produced is "The Fortune Hunter." The principal ingredient that makes a good photoplay—a good story—is found in "The Fortune Hunter." It smacks of the type of rural plays which George M. Cohan writes. The types and the actors chosen for them are excellent, particularly that of "Blinky" Lockwood, played by William Holden. Lockwood is a banker in a small town, who has a peculiar twitching of the right eye when he talks to a person, and this furnishes a world of fun. Theer is comedy throughout the picture, all of the principals supplying it.

The Lover Par Excellence
Is Earle Williams in his Vitagraph, "The Fortune Hunter."

Earle Wiliams in the lead, plays the part of Nat Dunham, and does very good work, being human at all times. Van Dyke Brooke makes the part of old Sam Graham, druggist and inventor, very real. Nancy Lee as the daughter of Banker Lockwood is not only pretty but clever as an actress. Jean Paige, as the daughter of old man Graham, has a part that does not call for any extraordinary acting, but she does it well, and the same can be said for Earle Metcalfe, as the young village swain, who is out to win the banker's daughter.

One of the outstanding features of the production is that the characters do not overplay their parts, thus keeping the interest of the average audience at a high pitch, and Director Tom Ferriss has chosen some wonderfully typical settings. He also has kept the action moving fast, with frequent changes of scenes without breaking up the continuity in the least.

"The Fortune Hunter" will win general approval.

The Story.

Nathaniel Dunham and Harry Kellogg are college mates, the former idling away his time, the other busy always at his studies. They succeed in business life as they did at college, Kellogg soon becoming a member of the firm he is with; Dunham losing one job after another. Discouraged, Dunham decides to leave New York, and go anywhere his wanderlust takes him. Kellogg makes him a proposition. If Dunham will go to some small town, live rightly, forswearing drink, tobacco and profanity, he will advance him $500, with the understanding that he meet, court and wed some wealthy girl in the town.

Dunham accepts and goes to a small town. He boards with the town gossip, who takes him to church and introduces him to everybody. Then he goes after a job, finally agreeing to work for nothing in a broken-down drug shop run by old man Graham. Dunham puts up money to stock up the old fellow and pay off a note, and for the first time in life takes an interest in something. Of course, the girls of the town take a fancy to him because he is a slick- clean-looking and smart young fellow, and naturally business follows.

He has met Josie Lockwood, daughter of the town's leading banker, who falls in love with him. Later on he meets Betty Graham, daughter of the druggist and falls in love with her. Her father was a failure in busines because of an inclination for inventions. He has perfected oil refining machinery, but no one knows about it. However, Dunham finds this out and sends a plan of it to Kellogg to see if he can dispose of it at a good profit for the old man.

Engrossed in his work, he forgets the purpose of his visit to the town, until finally he is led into a marriage proposal by Josie Lockwood. Then he realizes that he does not love her and writes to his friend Kellogg, asking him to release him from the agreement. Kellog thinks Dunham is getting cold feet and refuses to do so. Things drift on, the engagement is announced and Dunham is on the verge of going to pieces. One night Kellogg arrives. He wants to buy the invention, sees Betty Graham, and tells Dunham the agreement is off. But the latter is engaged to Josie and nothing can be done. However, a telegram comes from New York telling the sheriff to arrest a man answering Dunham's description for safe-cracking, and when Josie hears of this, she denounces him. Dunham proves he is not the man wanted, and is accepted by the girl he truly loves—Betty Graham.

"Out of the Dust"

J. P. McCarthy Six-reel Production Inspired by Remington Paintings Stirring and Entertaining in Quality.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE is a distinct individuality about the J. P. McCarthy production "Out of the Dust." The picture recalls some of the bigger western pictures with which the market was surfeited some five or six years ago, and comes somewhat as a revival of this type of feature. It is stirring and entertaining in quality, has considerably more human interest and less of the spectacular than the old style western, and should go well with the majority of audiences. Mr. McCarthy received his inspiration for the production from the Frederic Remington paintings dealing with frontier days.

In addition to the scenes at the fort, such as have often been seen duplicated, there is an excellent ranch and cowboy flavor to the picture. The old-time dance hall provides atmosphere for the big climax, where Martha Evans' husband gives the villain the beating that he deserves. The fight is a brutal affair, but thoroughly convincing. The picture throughout is well staged.

Little Pat Moore is the beauty spot of the production. The little fellow not only looks well, but acts well, and seems to have a thorough understanding of what is expected of him, despite his tender years. Robert McKim as the villain needs no introduction—he is known as one of the best heavies on the screen. Dorcas Matthews is attractive as the old-fashioned woman with affections of the modern type; and Russell Simpson fills the bill of the deserted husband as faithfully as he does that of the successful army officer of the early days.

The Story.

"Out of the Dust" encompasses a story told by a grandfather to his grandchild. The tale of the western frontier discloses a tragedy in which a wife-snatcher changes the trend of the career of an army officer, Captain Evans and his wife.

The wife, attracted by the charms of a trapper, Brett Arnold, listens to his proposal to elope with him. When Evans discovers that his wife has deserted him, he decides to resign from the army, and straightway quits the fort with his little boy.

Later we find the officer managing a ranch, and unwilling to enter the company of women. His wife, Martha Evans, discovering Arnold's vicious nature, drops him before they get to their destination; and, after attempting to drown her trouble in two different dance halls, she finally comes face to face with her husband. Evans happens in the Red Butte dance hall when Arnold is forcing himself into his wife's presence and fights the question out with him. Arnold is beaten into submission and Evans, responding to his wife's appeal for forgiveness, takes her with him to the ranch.

IF a contest were held to determine—not the most beautiful moving picture actress, as usually happens—but the most human performer on the screen, surely Frank Keenan's name would be high in the list. He is one actor that may be said to live his parts, giving the rare touch of mastery that is inherent in certain players. When he is playing a cold-hearted pirate of high finance, he looks and acts the part without visible effort; when he is a besotted drunkard, or a jailbird, or a temperance lecturer, or a silk-hatted confidence man, he invariably wears the shoes of the character as though they had been made for him.

In this enjoyable comedy-drama entitled "Smoldering Embers," Mr. Keenan appears as a hobo-husband, back from Alaska or God-Knows-Where, after an absence of fifteen years. His wife is married to the mayor of a certain smal city and his son has grown to young manhood. The hobo, as the story opens, is sitting around a small campfire with two Weary Willies as companions. The scene is true to life and grips the interest at once. So does the subsequent action, in which the tramp hero looks up his former wife, prevents her from being robbed by her present husband, saves his son from disgrace and sees that the boy marries the right girl. He then drifts back to his campfire and out of the story.

The subject is wonderfully pleasing and artistic in development. Jay Belasco and Kate Van Buren are engaging as the young couple.

The Story.

John Conroy, in "Smoldering Embers," is a hobo. He has just returned to the states after fifteen years in the wilds of Alaska, during which time his son has grown up and his wife has married another man. Conroy and his two companions are sitting around a campfire, when their attention is attracted to a man with a stalled automobile at the roadside. They approach the car, and while Conroy is fixing the mechanism one of his hobo friends "lifts" the owner's wallet from his coat.

His After Dinner Smoke

Frank Keenan is thinking of his income tax in Pathe's "Smoldering Embers."

The stolen wallet is later found to contain money and some papers. Also a photograph of Conroy's former wife, now married to the man just robbed. A letter indicates the latter to be Mayor Manners of a nearby city. Conroy, after inspecting these interesting documents, gives his friends some of the stolen money and bids them goodbye.

Conroy then walks into the town and looks up the Manners' home. Here he confronts his wife, who is naturally startled at his reappearance. He promises silence, however, and does not break this until the time comes to save his wife from being robbed of valuable property by the mayor. Conroy also takes a decided interest in seeing his son, Jack, married to the right girl. Then, having effectually arranged matters to the happiness of all concerned, he again seeks the open road, to be a hobo for the rest of his days.

Exploitation Angles: Make Keenan your chief appeal and tell that in this story he has an unusual opportunity. Play up the hobo angle with such appeals as "He left the hobo camp to go back to respecability, save his wife from her scheming second husband and then once more answered the call of the open road." "The Hell Ship"

Madlaine Traverse Featured in Five-Reel Fox Story of the Deep Sea.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE character of Paula Humphrey, as portrayed by Madlaine Traverse in this five-reel Fox subject, "The Hell Ship," is an odd and unusual one, if not entirely sympathetic in some of the opening scenes. Imagine a beautiful, black-eyed girl, daughter of "Satan" Humphrey, comander of a tramp schooner—a girl who has lived entirely apart from her own sex since her separation from a baby sister years before. The ship is one of questionable character, carrying a cargo of contraband powder, and manned by a brutal set of sailors, most of whom are wanted by the law.

In this unique setting is this production placed. Paula, a strong, vigorous creature, asumes the ship's wheel in turn with her father and helps guide the skulking vessel on its course. After her father has been stabbed and killed by one of his mutinous crew, the girl cows the men with her pistol and assumes command. All this is pictured with strong reality.

The rescue of the good-looking stranger from the waves and the subsequent arrival of Paula's younger sister are incidents which are less convincing.

but the story is one of such unusual quality that it holds the interest firmly. The rescue of the principals from a raft, after the Hell ship has been burned makes a strong close, and there are some moments of real pathos connected with Paula's attempted renunciation of the man she loves because she falsely believes that he loves her sister.

The Story.

Paula Humphrey, in "The Hell Ship," is the daughter of "Satan" Humphrey, owner and captain of a tramp schooner carrying a cargo of contraband powder. The vessel is manned by a set of mutinous rogues, one of whom stabs and kills Humphrey. After the deaht of her father Paula assumes command, despite the sneers and threats of the crew, whom she holds at bay with a pistol.

The schooner picks up a stranger named John Hadlock, whose ship had gone down some hours before. John is nursed back to consciousness and health by Paula and she promptly falls in love with him. John helps her in quelling the crew and later goes ashore at San Francisco and brings on board Paula's sister, Glory, from whom Paula had been separated from childhood.

Paula has scarcely known the companionship of women and is herself a hard, unyielding character, doing the work of a man and ruling over other men with an iron hand. Glory is at first afraid of her, but later learns to love her. The vessel is consumed by fire during a mutiny. Paula and Glory and John are picked up from a raft by a passing vessel. Paula, thinking John in love with Glory, is about to float away on the raft when the hero returns for her and assures her of his love.

THERE is abundant humor in this new Western subject, "Overland Red." It is based on a widely circulated novel, written by Henry Herbert Knibbs, and adapted and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds. It has a number of riding and shooting scenes of the usual melodramatic sort, but the chief appeal is in the fresh humorous bits strung along thr hgoueo rtpitod hucn.

The tale is told in and near the Mojave desert, in which region the scenes were actually taken. The giant cactus and yucca trees and desert settings generally give a strong atmosphere for the events pictured.

The Story.

Overland Red, in the picture of that name, is a hobo prospector, wandering along the edge of the Mojave desert. He steals a chicken, and while cooking it strikes up a friendship with a youth named "Collie." They become pals and journey along together. While on the railroad right-of-way they chance upon an old prospector, dying of starvation. After his death they hide some gold dust and the map of a mining claim found on his person.

The sheriff of that vicinity, Silent Saunders, has conspired with some men to rob the old prospector and jump his claim. They discover Red and Collie with the dead body and put them in jail. The two manage an adroit escape and flee from the desert town. On a nearby ranch, while hiding from the sheriff, they meet a girl they had seen on a passing train, Louise Alacarme. The girl is friendly and both fall in love with her. She assists them to escape the sheriff when he appears.

Later Red discovers the mine and works it with a young Easterner named Billy Winthrop. The fortunes of all are made, and when it is discovered that Louise is the daughter of the dead prospector, she makes the boys her partners. Collie weds the girl and Red is made president of the mine.

"The Turning Point"

First National Production of Robert W. Chambers' Novel Starring Katherine MacDonald Is Gorgeous.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

IN the point of gorgeous settings and beauty, "The Turning Point" is a 100 per cent. picture. It has some of the most lavish out-door scenes that ever graced a motion picture, and the beauty of the star, Katherine MacDonald, adds to its brilliance. The story, which is from a novel by Robert W. Chambers, is not on a par with the gorgeousness, but the element of mystery which predominates throughout gets it over. The plot is one of twists and turns, but just when it gets to the point where you are somewhat confused, something happens that makes you anxious to see how it will all come out.

"The Turning Point" concerns the adventures of two sisters who have become financially embarrassed by the failure of their father's business and who move to New York to take up society work. They run afoul of a man and woman who are continually interfering with their work, and who in the final reel are revealed as a couple of crooks bent upon swindling the employer of the two sisters.

The work of Miss MacDonald is a bit disappointing in view of her excellent acting in "The Thunderbolt," but she never looked so pretty before. The director has made the common mistake of allowing a new star to do too much posing and not enough acting. The balance of the cast is pleasing, the work of Nigel Barry, as a society man, whose aim is to be idle, and William V. Mong as Mr. Rivett, a railway king, being especially commendable.

A very notable feature of the production is the elaborate Halloween party, which is sure to command the admiration of any audience. Most of the action takes place at a beautiful estate which is certainly a treat to the eye.

The Story.

The story involved in "The Turning Point" tells of Diana and Silvette Tennant, two New York society girls, who find they are financially stranded because of the failure of the Edgerton-Tennant Company. There was one thing that tended to cloud Diana's reputation and retarded her social progress—her name had been connected with a murder in Reno.

Young James Edgerton, whose father owned the apartment house where the sisters were located, was also affected by the business failure. When E. H. Rivett, a man of wealth, engages the Tennant sisters to aid in staging a fashionable party, Edgerton forces himself into the entertaining staff, much to the disgust of Diana, whom he is pursuing. While at the affair she sees Col. Curmew, who is determined to bring up the Reno affair. Curmew follows Diana to her apartment and he is followed by Mrs. Wemyss, a widow, who is jealous of the girl because the colonel is paying her attentions. At the apartment full revelation of the Reno affair is made and Diana's name is cleared. James returns and is accepted by Diana in the final scene.

"The Loves of Letty"

Goldwyn Presents Pauline Frederick in Screen Version of the Play by Sir Arthur Pinero.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ORIGINALLY an English play dealing with the class idea that little matters what happens to one of the masses, the Goldwyn production touches this but lightly, just enough to show how firmly established it is in the social fabric of Great Britain. "The Loves of Letty" develops into the story of a romantic working girl who finds her limited and shabby environment distasteful and who is tempted to sacrifice her soul in order to get rid of material discomforts.

Miss Frederick acts her role with dignity and charm, and her support is generously good. Lawson Butt and Willard Louis distinguish themselves as the lovers aristocratic and plebian. Among the minor characters are many who contribute in first rate style to the comedy element and provide bright relief to an otherwise dark story. The atmosphere and settings are consistently English, amusingly so in the ensembles. The roof party standing solemnly to be photographed is a veritable hit. The general values of the picture as shown at the Broadway Theatre are good, and it should provide a fair entertainment wherever shown.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Earliest among the "Loves of Letty" is Letchmere, London clubman of good family. His attentions cause her employer, Mandeville, to take an interest in her as a prospective wife. He warns Letchmere to keep his hands off, only inciting the clubman to further effort to win Letty without the formality of marriage. Poor Richard Perry, who lives in her lodging house, tells Letty of his love and of his hope that a wealthy uncle will establish him in business.

Letty is given three parties on her birthday. The first of these is in Letchmere's rooms, where she is chaperoned by two girl friends. She has almost starved herself to buy the gown she wears, but she bears up bravely under Letchmere's ardent wooing, in full belief that he means marriage. The second party is at her lodging house. Letchmere appears and gives her some caddish advice to seriously consider Mandeville's offer of marriage. Letty is overcome by this revelation. When Mandeville arrives and offers her wealth with respectability, she is desperate enough to accept him and announce that he is to be her husband. He invites all hands to a big supper party and gorges himself and drinks so hard that he gets into a dispute with the restaurant keeper.

Letchmere appears and carries the disgusted and disheartened Letty off to his rooms. He has almost persuaded her to sacrifice herself when he receives news that his married sister has eloped with a lover. He is overcome with horror. Letty now sees that he has one morality for his set and quite another for her own. She escapes in a driving rain and faints on London Bridge. When Letty comes to herself she is the honored guest of poor Perry's rich uncle. Letchmere calls to announce that he is free to marry her, but she refuses him. She has accepted the love of Perry because it is founded on honor and respect.

"Huckleberry Finn"

Paramount Production of Mark Twain Story Is Vastly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

EVERY "kid" in town is naturally attracted to "Huckleberry Finn." The book by Mark Twain, from which this film is adapted, has always been a favorite with the boys, and the picture is not a disappointment. It is full of harem-skarem action that pleases and amuses. This is not necessarily a child's picture, for the grown-ups that filled the Garden Theatre, Washington, at every showing enjoyed every foot of the film. Its popularity was attested by the peals of laughter at the particularly funny points and the applause that closed the performance.

The Washington audiences are not particularly enthusiastic, but "Huckleberry Finn" went across in fine shape. Lewis D. Sargent, who takes the part of that youngster, does not play it, he just seems to live it. His running mate, Gordon Griffith as Tom Sawyer, is very good, and the Duke and the King, the broken down actors, add to the comedy, while lending just a bit of pathos when they try to swindle a bevy of good looking girls.

Frank Lanning, as Huck's father, gave a good representation of the way in which a man of that type might act. He puts a lot of action into his work, especially when roughing it with "Huck."

The picture is well made. The spectator does not have to exert his imagination at all, and the people can sit back and enjoy the picture while the scenes build up themselves, one after another, into a delightful entertainment.

Length, 7,186 feet.

The Story.

When the story opens Huck has been adopted by the Widow Douglas, who is trying to "civilize" him with the aid of her prim maiden sister, Miss Watson. With Tom Sawyer, Huck decides to start a robber gang. About this time Huck's no-account father reappears, determined to get his son's share of the money, found in a cave, and has almost frightened the boy into giving him all he has when the Judge apears and chases the elder Finn off.

That night he abducts Huck and starts down the Mississippi. The boy is thrown into a lonely cabin and beaten so badly that he decides to escape at any cost. Making it appear that he has been murdered and thrown into the river, he breaks out of the cabin and gets away in a drifting canoe.

In the meantime, Jim, the Widow Douglas' slave boy, hears that he is to be sold to a trader and runs away. Meeting Huck, the two join issues. After Huck hears the news of his own death, he and Jim leave town on a raft. At the last moment two broken-down actors, styling themselves the "Duke" and the "King," run down to the shore, pursued by men and dogs, and get aboard the raft.

At the next town the actors land and give a terible performance at the town hall. The audience forces the troupe to flee for their lives. The King and the Duke next imperpersonate the brothers of a deceased Mr. Wilks and attempt to get possession of the wealth he has left. Huck grows fond of the daughter, Mary Jane Wilks, and steals the money to prevent it falling into the hands of the impostors. The real relatives appear in time to foil the ex-actors. Jim and Huck run away to escape their wrath.

The King and the Duke overtake the boys in their skiff and come aboard. The party lands at Pikesville and the King sells Jim to a man named Phelps. Huck determines to rescue Jim. He learns that Mrs. Phelps is Tom Sawyer's Aunt Polly's sister. She has never seen Tom and is given to understand that Huck is her nephew. Tom Sawyer shortly afterward appears and, after being convinced by Huck that he is not seeing a ghost, agrees to let the Phelpses believe that Huck is Tom. He is to make his appearance as Sid Sawyer, Tom's brother.

The boys spirit Jim away, but in the scuffle Tom is shot in the leg and is put to bed at the Phelps house. Huck visits him, when they spy Aunt Polly listening. She tells them that Jim was given his freedom a month ago. She then informs the Phelpses of Huck's true identity and takes the boy, cured of his adventuring, back to the Widow Douglas.

THE Forbidden Woman" is the story of Diane Sorel, leading woman in a play of that name at a Paris theatre. She refuses the attentions of a man about town; he kills himself in her apartment. Living in America under an assumed name, "to forget," she falls in love with an author, the brother of the wife of the Paris admirer. When he finds the truth he doubts her, then forgives.

While there is little new about such a plot, yet the picture is one that seems likely to meet with public favor. There is no question that the role of Diane Sorel offers Clara Kimball Young one of the greatest opportunities she has had on the screen and she makes the most of it. She is suited to the part, and she plays it with a reality that makes it very impressive. Conway Tearle, playing opposite as Malcolm Kent, is excellent.

The story moves swiftly and interest is sustained throughout. There can be slight criticism of the production aside from the weakness of the story itself. Elaborate interiors and well chosen pastoral scenes add much to the beauty of the picture.

"The Forbidden Woman" is sure to please all admirers of Miss Young, for it shows her at her best. It will also please those who enjoy an old plot carefully and elaborately worked out in a new setting.

Diane Sorel is playing the title role in "The Forbidden Woman" at a Paris theatre. The author and her manager, Edward Harding, watches over her like a father, and she is almost a forbidden woman to the world at large.

One of Diane's most ardent admirers is Andre de Clermont, an impecunious nobleman, who has married a rich American girl for her money. Fearing the affair will go too far, Harding has Diane send a note to de Clermont, telling him that such constant attentions from a married man are not flattering, and that he could never see her again. De Clermont comes to Diane's rooms, demands that the privilege of at least seeing her often and, when refused, shoots himself. The affair, of course, gains great notoriety, and Diane flees to America to escape it all, accompanied by her maid, and Harding as protector.

In a beautiful country home in America, living under the name of Diane Durand, she rapidly regains her old spirit, and studies a new play with Harding.

She meets Malcolm Kent in the pasture near her home by accident. He is an author, living on the adjoining estate. The attraction is mutual and they are together constantly. Diane tries to tell him something of her past experiences, but he will not listen. They are engaged before Diane learns from a picture on Malcolm's table that it was his sister that was the widow of Andre de Clermont.

Diane rushes to her home, almost killed with grief. Malcolm goes over to tell her that his sister will arrive the next day from Paris. Diane tells him that she is really Diane Sorel. Malcolm is horrified and will not believe her protests of innocence and even accuses Harding of being her lover. He leaves, but returns a few minutes, to seize her in his arms and kisses her passionately.

The sister arrives, tells Malcolm that she had found the letter Diane sent Andre, and that it was because of her refusal to be more than an acquaintance that Andre had shot himself. His belief in Diane restored, he rushes to her. Diane forgives him and promises to be his wife.

"The Cup of Fury"

Goldwyn Production of Rupert Hughes' Story Has Strong Cast.

Reviewed by S. J. Anderson.

IN this production of Rupert Hughes' novel, which appeared serially in the Red Book magazine last year, there are several thrilling moments, but no continued suspense except in the last few scenes. The interest is held throughout the play by the appeal of Helene Chadwick as Marie Louise or Mamise, as her lover insists on calling her. She gains the sympathy of the audience in the first reel by her touching portrayal of the frightened and broken-hearted girl upon the arrest and suicide of her foster parents, Sir Joseph and Lady Webbling; and she holds that sympathy through the remainder of the production as only an innocent girl, alone in the world and wrongly suspected, could hold it. Miss Chadwick fits the part, and she plays it with just the right combination of patriotic seriousness and of girlish whimsicality.

Rockliffe Fellows is an interesting and convincing "Davidge," and Frank Leigh as "Nicky," the English secret service agent who arrests Sir Joseph and Lady Webbling, does his work cleverly. Jake could hardly have been better portrayed than H. A. Morgan's portrayal of him. In fact the entire cast is very well adapted to the story.

The play as a whole is convincing, but the big incident, that of the bomb exploding on the ship, when it neither destroys the ship nor hurts Mamise and only gives Davidge a scratch on the head, seems to need some explanation.

The Story.

Sir Joseph and Lady Webbling, the German-born foster parents of Marie Louise, are arrested just after a dinner given by them in their London home for informing the submarines as to the sailings of Allied vessels. Marie Louise is also placed under arrest for having carried communications between Sir Joseph and the German spy, Verrinder. Sir Joseph declares that the girl did not know what she was carrying. Under the pretext of gathering up some clothes to take with them to the Tower, Sir Joseph and Lady Webbling go into the next room and drink poison.

Nicky, the secret service agent, upon finding out that Marie Louise was born in the United States—having been adopted by the Webblings, because of a resemblance to their dead daughter—promises to let her go back to America, if she will take oath not to tell what happened there that night. She takes the oath.

Marie Louise goes to America and looks up her one-time friend in London, Polly Widdicombe, who lives near Washington, D. C. She again meets Davidge, the American shipbuilder, whom she had met at Sir Joseph's and who had recalled her as Mamise, a vaudeville performer whom he had once admired. Lady Clifton-Wyatt, just from London, publicly cuts Marie Louise and accuses her as a German spy before an assemblage of guests. Davidge, however, will not listen to her accusations, although the girl, bound by her oath, may not clear herself.

Abbey, the wife of Jake, an I. W. W., sees Marie Louise's picture in the paper as a visitor from London and declares her to be her long lost sister who ran away and went on the stage. They bundle up their whole family and go to Polly's to call on her. Marie Louise welcomes Abbey and promises to get Jake a job in Davidge's shipyard.

Marie Louise herself had already decided to go to work in Davidge's plant, so that by helping in the work of building ships for the Allies she could ease her conscience for the unwitting part she had played in Sir Joseph's program of destruction.

While she is living with Abbey and Jake and working as Davidge's stenographer, Verrinder finds her, but she repulses his advances and refuses to listen to his suggestion that she help him in his spy work for Germany. Jake sees Verrinder and promises to help him blow up Davidge's plant.

By going to work in the plant as a regular laborer, however, and pretending to be their confederate, Marie Louise is able to foil them in their attempt, and Davidge arrives on the scene in time to throw Verrinder over the side of the big ship, after a terrible scuffle. Jake falls over the side, and both villains are killed. Marie Louise is sponsor for the next vessel launched, which has been named the "Mamise" for her, and at the launching Davidge announces their engagement.

THIS five-reel Fox production, "Shod with Fire," is quite different from the average subjects featuring Wililam Russell. He is usually seen in swift-moving, intense roles, and while his portrayal of Bruce Bayard is attractive as usual, the story itself moves at slower speed. It is really a plot involving more human emotion than those he generally appears in, and the big moments are often carried by other performers. Helen Ferguson and Betty Schade, the two feminine leads, do perhaps a lion's share of the acting. The latter gives a pleasing account of herself as the hotel waitress, Nora Brewster.

William Russell appears as Bruce Bayard, a young ranch owner, who, at the opening of the story, is befriending an intoxicated man. He meets the heroine, Ann Lytton, who has just arrived at the town hotel, and is searching for her husband. The picture, as a whole, is not up to the William Russell standard, though it tells a consistent story with occasional strong moments.

The Story.

Bruce Bayard, in "Shod with Fire," is a young ranch owner, who brings an intoxicated stranger into the town hotel and takes him to a room for the night. While at the task of reviving the drunken man he meets a new arrival, Ann Lytton, a woman in search of her husband. The drunken man is recognized as the erring spouse.

A warm friendship springs up between Bruce and Ann, which quickly ripens into love. But despite this, Bruce determines to play fair with both Ann and her husband. He takes Ned Lytton to his ranch and sobers him up, Ann in the meantime remaining at the town hotel. Nora Brewster, a waitress who loves Bruce, tries to blacken his character with Ann, fearing the latter will steal his affections. Later Nora's better nature asserts itself and she admits that her story was a lie.

Bruce meets Benny Lynch, a fiery young fellow, who is searching for Ned Lytton with a gun, determined to kill him for having swindled his father out of a mining property. Bruce saves Lytton from the wrathful Benny for a time, but later the youth succeeds in killing his man. The story closes with the beginning of real love between Bruce and the young widow. Nora finds happiness with a young ranch hand who loves her.

"Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries"

"The Wall Street Mystery" and "The Scrap of Paper," Two Excellent Samples of Series of Twelve Five-Reelers.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Arrow Film Corporation in distributing William Steiner's series of twelve five-reel mystery stories are fortunate in having something that the masses are sure to like. Human curiosity is always responsive to the lure of melodrama and, judging from the two numbers of the series under discussion, the second and third, there is a big promise for the development of a live interest in the adventures of "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries."

"The Wall Street Mystery" is based on a plausible and highly interesting story, which is clearly defined. Some of the detail is irrelevant to the story, and sometimes the feminine lead is too obvious in her efforts to put across emotional scenes. But in spite of any faults which the picture may possess, when it stretches into the last lap, the spectator is perfectly satisfied with the fact that he has witnessed the visualization of a stirring murder story with a fine vein of suspense. The role of "Tex" is played by Glen White with the dignity and deliberation belonging to a character, which has for its object the protection of the innocent from the bane of circumstantial evidence.

The principal events of the story of "The Wall Street Mystery" take place in the Wall Street office of Norman Temple. The source of the crime consists of a package of bonds which Temple is commissioned to sell. One of the office staff borrows them from Temple's safe. When Temple discovers the theft, Minkin, the clerk, attempts to return the bonds, and in the struggle which ensues, when Temple enters the room unexpectedly, Minkin shoots him. Circumstantial evidence points at James Borden, who has had business transactions with Temple, and who has been heard to speak threateningly to him on a recent visit to the Temple office, by the stenographer. The girl, who is helplessly mixed up with the affair, becomes a victim of her imagination and tells a story which is believed by the authorities. "Tex," who has been quietly working on the case by himself, by means of finger prints and other scattered bits of evidence, finally unearths the truth with regard to the crime.

"The Scrap of Paper."

"The Scrap of Paper" is in some respects not quite as strongly constructed as it might he, but has the same drawing qualities as "The Wall Street Mystery." The featured element, circumstantial evidence, is well covered, and only one or two minor inconsistencies occur throughout the five reels. The cast, which will be much the same throughout the series, is for the most part a good one. The director has secured the necessary element of successful melodrama suspense and has held it to the finish.

The story is based on the question of food profiteering. An agreement signed by three dealers to hold up the price of milk is held by Jacob Strauss, head of the provision pool, who quarrels with his associates and places them in terror of a disclosure of their misdeeds. When Strauss is shot the blame is traced to those last seen with him. "Tex," on his own hook, traces the crime to a resident of Chinatown, and with some helpers causes a rough house in an opium den, and brings out his prey. The scrap of paper found in the injured man's hand fits into the original agreement found with the Chinaman.

"The Street Called Straight"

Goldwyn Production of Basil King's Story Is a Pleasing Feature.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

THE Street Called Straight," based on Basil King's story of that name, while a pleasing feature is in no way unusual. There is nothing particularly exciting about it and that lends to the charm that a "human" picture carries.

Milton Sills, as Peter Davenant, presents a strong character. He well portrays the part of the man who is determined to be successful. Naomi Childers, as Olivia Guion, and Irene Rich, as Drusilla Fane, are charming. Alec Francis, as Rodney Temple, comes in for a great deal of praise. He is quite a favorite and will earn more friends by his acting in this film. Lydia Yeamans Titus as Mme. Victoria de Mecourt adds a pleasing bit of comedy to the picture by her seeming severity as the disappointed aunt of Olivia Guion, determined not to assist her niece financially because of a refusal to marry the man she had selected for the young lady.

The film, produced by Goldwyn, is well made. The photography is excellent and the direction is good. The one outstanding feature is its cleanness and the lack of morgue and triangle scenes that are becoming tiresome to theatregoers.

Cast.

Peter Davenant	Milton Sills
Olivia Guion	Naomi Childers
Henry Guion	Charles Clary
Drusilla Fane	Irene Rich
Rodney Temple	Alec Francis
Mrs. Temple	Jane Sterling
Col. Rupert Ashley	Lawson Butt
Mme. De Melcourt	Lydia Yeamans Titus

Story by Basil King.
Directed by Wallace Worsley.
Length, 4,986 feet.

The Story.

The story of "The Street Called Straight" opens in the aristocratic section of a small town near Boston. For a number of years the maintenance of the Guion family social tradition has been a tax beyond Henry Guion's financial resources, and he has kept up appearances at the expense of the people whose funds he held in trust.

While visiting with her cousin ,the widow Drusilla Fane, in England, Olivia Guion met Colonel Rupert Ashley of the celebrated Sussex Rangers; and, after a very dignified courtship, they became engaged. Ashley had once thought of offering Drusilla Fane the honor of his name, but Olivia appealed to him as a being more fitted for the position.

Peter Davenant, a sincere, intellectual young engineer whose parents had been modest missionary workers, had once offered his love to Olivia and been refused. By a trick of fate, Olivia's approaching marriage and the revelation of Guion's misappropriation of funds promised to come within the same period. Worried almost to distraction, Guion confessed his error to Temple, a relative and intimate friend, and to Peter. The latter promptly offered to advance money to cover the deficiency. He overcame Guion's objections by convincing him that his act had nothing whatever to do with his former admiration of Olivia. The girl could not understand such open generosity, but her suspicions were soon quieted by the absolute indifference with which Peter treated her.

When Ashley arrived in America, he found himself the central figure of an impossible situation. He could not take advantage of Olivia's offer to free him, as his English companions would term him a rotter for backing out. Yet he could not marry a girl under such great obligation to a former suitor. Olivia's wealthy Aunt Vic, Mme. De Melcourt, solved the problem. She refunded Peter's money, leaving Olivia free to show her admiration for that sterling fellow. Ashley, in the meantime, has become aware that he prefers Drusilla, so the several threads of the story terminate happily for all.

"The Amazing Woman"

Ruth Clifford Featured in Republic Production Portrays Character of Questionable Sincerity.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE AMAZING WOMAN" is a Lloyd Carleton production, distributed by Republic Distributing Corporation. In it Ruth Clifford plays the role of Anitra Frane, a woman in which there are plenty of opportunities to illustrate the changes worked by circumstances and environment on the manner and physical appearance of an individual, as well as on the general lines of character. She is an innocent, angelic creature from first to last.

The picture is carefully made and does not play up the unmoral element, which is a possibility of the story. On the contrary its intention seems to be to laud the best qualities of its characters, in spite of the fact that its heroine is a woman who leaves home to become the mistress of a man years beyond her in age, with the hope of winning success with her voice, and afterward opens a gambling house in which she fleeces the rich to give to the poor. The director has no doubt chosen the least objectionable way of presenting a story of this kind.

"Alarm Clock Andy"

Paramount-Ince Picture Presents Charles Ray in Characteristic Comedy.

Reviewed by Jacob Smith.

By Telegraph to the World.

AT the Broadway Strand, Detroit, this week is being shown a Paramount-Ince production, "Alarm Clock Andy," with Charles Ray, who plays the part of a bashful young man, which is one of his specialties which have made him extremely popular. It cannot be said that this latest production ranks with his previous one, "Red Hot Dollars," yet it is above the average program picture. There is no big punch or no big scene in "Alarm Clock Andy" and yet it is a consistent story, holds interest as good comedy, has many laughs and the usual splendid Ince directions and settings as well as supporting cast. The best that can be said for "Alarm Clock Andy" is that it will please and satisfy most photoplay audiences.

Cast and story will be published next week.

Edward Coxen in the role of Lieutenant Strong does justice to the role of young medical student.

Cast.

Anitra Frane	Ruby Clifford
Lieutenant Strong	Edward Coxen

The Story.

The heroine of "The Amazing Woman" is Anitra Frane, a beautiful young woman whose mother has sought seclusion with her, after the tragic death of her father.

Anitra, blessed with a beautiful singing voice, becomes possessed with a desire for a career, and when her sweetheart, Lieutenant Strong, is called to the war, she falls an easy prey to the attentions of an elderly man and consents to accompany him to the city when promised the fulfilment of her ambitions.

One day a newspaper reveals the fact that Mrs. Frane has died of a broken heart because of her daughter's disappearance, and the man hands Anitra a check to cover her journey to attend her mother's funeral. On arrival there she receives a letter from him stating that he is going away, that marriage between them would be foolish ,and that she had better forget him.

Recovered from the shock, she resolves to devote her life to the sick children of the poor, and to gain money for this purpose she opens a gambling house where she is known only as "The Flame," and where she fleeces the rich of their money through cunning agents. One day she meets young Strong, who has returned from France, and allows him to take a journey to her old home to call on her, and when he arrives she is there to greet him. She then decides to give up her gambling interests, and remain true to her former sweetheart. When they have plighted their troth he brings his father to see her, and it is then that that she learns that the man who wronged her was the father of her fiance. That night Strong's father dies of heart failure, and the son is spared the truth. When he becomes mayor of the city he raids Anitra's gambling house in search of the notorious "Flame." The mystery is later cleared up by Anitra, and the lovers decide to forget the past and live in the future.

COMMENTS

THE RUM RUNNERS (Fox). A Mutt and Jeff animated, in which the pair visit a submarine cafe, just outside the three-mile limit. They meet up with some mermaids and have altogether a wonderful party. A typical number.

THE PLUMBERS (Fox). A Mutt and Jeff animated, full of fantastic situations of an amusing character. They pose as plumbers in a large apartment house and get into numerous difficulties as a result. The humor of the bathroom scenes is rather broad.

SHERIFF NELL'S COMEBACK (Sunshine). This two-reel subject introduces Polly Moran in her familiar burlesque character, Sheriff Nell. She fights and subdues a whole police force, single-handed, and finally assists in the capture of Silk Shirt Gus. The fun is of the rough-and-tumble, fast-and-furious sort.

THE SHERIFF'S OATH (Western), Feb. 28.—A two-reel Universal subject, by Paul Annitzer, with "Hoot" Gibson and Josephine Hill in the leads. The number is strong in melodramatic situations, some of which are new. The murder mystery is a good one and the averted hanging, while a familiar situation, has been carefully staged. The subject is a good one of its type.

RUNNING STRAIGHT (Western). A two-reel Universal subject, by Philip Hibbard, with "Hoot" Gibson, L. M. Wells and Virginia Faire in the cast. "Hoot" plays the role of a young slum-reared fellow who makes good with a man who befriends him and then sacrifices his good name to save the latter's son. The number has some strong touches of pathos and "Hoot" Gibson does some natural acting.

THE SECRET HOST (Pathe).—No. 15, the closing chapter of "The Black Secret." This strong serial story has been gradually moving up to a climax which proves quite as interesting as could be expected. Evelyn and Kay finally penetrate the secret tunnel, through which a million German soldiers are pouring back behind the Allied lines. They destroy the tunnel and escape in an exciting manner. Vaux, whose loyalty has been in constant doubt, finally proves true blue and gives up his life to the Allied cause.

GETTING HIS GOAT (Rolin-Pathe).—A "Snub" Pollard subject, which opens up a multitude of comic adventures, some of which are quite amusing and will make a special appeal to children. Snub acquires a small goat and starts off with it. Many knockabout scenes occur, in which a half dozen policemen take part. The small colored boy, Sambo, also appears.

PATHE REVIEW, No. 37 (Pathe).—Tinted views of a forest in Portugal, once the scene of a great victory by the Duke of Wellington, lead this number. A strong feature is a study of the seventeen-year locusts by Dr. Ditmars. Scenes from the steel mills of France, some dances by Mme. Desiree Lubovska and other features are included.

THE SUBSTITUTE MESSENGER (Pathe), Chapter 7 of "The Adventures of Ruth."—This opens with scenes showing the clever manner in which Ruth and Bob conceal the saddlebags filled with gold until they are restored to their rightful owner. Ruth obeys the injunctions of another key and finds herself at a masked ball, where further exciting adventures await her. The number is full of incident and picturesque situations.

THE HAREM MODEL (Pathe).—Chapter 8 of "The Adventures of Ruth." Ruth Roland is exhibiting a great deal of versatile acting ability in this serial. The costumings and settings are also well ahead of the average, and it makes a very attractive chapter-story. In this number she and Bob Wright recover some bonds, formerly in possession of Ruth's father, which The Thirteen are planning to steal. The action is swift and melodramatic.

THE CELLAR GANGSTERS (Pathe), Episode 9 of "The Adventures of Ruth."—The chief adventure in this number is a kidnapping, in which Ruth cleverly substitutes herself for a member of the "Cellar Gang," a girl named Annie. She thus gains possession of the stolen child, but is quickly detected in the deception by other members. Bob aids her in getting away with the child. The action is swift and the scenes full of interest.

THE HEART SNATCHERS (Sunshine).—A two-reel comic, abounding in pretty girls and amusing knockabout situations. The opening scenes are at a reception, which becomes a riotous event. Later scenes occur in and near a village blacksmith shop. Much of the business is original and laughable. The cast includes Jack Cooper, Marvel Rea and others.

FISHING (Fox).—A Mutt and Jeff animated, full of typical humor. The pair go fishing and Mutt has adventures with some skunks. Later he meets a fair young bathing girl who intrigues his affections until a rival appears.

HER NAUGHTY WINK (Sunshine).—A two-reel Fox comic, featuring Bill Franey, Ethel Teare, Ed Kennedy and others. Franey plays the role of a tailor who flirts with another man's wife. The husband gets a gun after him and there are the usual knockabout situations. The flood scenes in the last reel are immense, outdoing anything of this particular kind the reviewer has seen. Automobiling underground is another good comic feature of this entertaining number.

THE HIDDEN WAY (Pathe), Chapter 14 of "The Black Secret."—A surprising situation crops up in this instalment of this war serial, which carries a strong and well developed story interest and is altogether one of the best of recent continued film stories. Evelyn and McKay discover the great secret at last, a tunnel extending well back of the enemy lines, through which the Germans plan to pour a million troops. The courageous spies traverse the tunnel, only to be captured at the other end, where they are ordered shot by their supposed superior officer, Vaux.

PATHE REVIEW, NO. 38.—This opens with a delightful series of tinted views taken in Morocco, a revelation of picturesque beauty, with scenes from the native life included. Dr. Ditmar's study of the ant throws some interesting new light on this tiny creature. The lighting system employed along the Hudson river, "slow" camera studies of a horse in action, and some Egyptian dances are other features.

WALTZ ME AROUND (Rolin-Pathe).—"Snub" Pollard appears in this comic number as a dandy. Though engaged in the express and transfer business he has social aspirations. The small colored boy, Sambo, assists him in breaking into the dancing academy. There are innumerable pretty girls in this and riotous knockabout situations of a fairly amusing sort.

ALL LIT UP (Pathe).—A "Snub" Pollard comedy, in which the hero first appears as a park dandy, chasing butterflies and flirting with the girls. His adventures take him to a restaurant, where he gets into numerous difficulties and he finally winds up in jail. The situations are of the familiar knockabout type and contain a fair amount of humor.

GOOD LITTLE BROWNIE (Century).—A two-reel comic, featuring Merta Sterling, Clint Bowes and the Century Wonder-Dog. Many of the scenes are pictured at the beach and bathing girls are shown. The action is the familiar knockabout sort, not particularly strong in humorous effect, but will prove entertaining to many audiencees. It is a comic that will undoubtedly please children.

KAINTUCK'S WARD (Western), Feb. 14.—A two-reel western subject, by George Hawkes, featuring Dick La Reno, Robert Burns, Charles Dorian and Peggy O'Dare. The plot, which is rather conventional, concerns a "square" gambler who first breaks and then saves the lover of a girl whom he later loves himself. The girl gives up her lover in favor of the gambler after learning the former's weakness and the latter's strength. The production is quite entertaining, though not one of any great originality.

THE RACING DEATH (Universal), Feb. 16.—Chapter 2 of "Elmo the Fearless." This number is full of swift action, with many melodramatic moments. The survivors of the wrecked Santiam make their way to the Big Bear lumber region, where it is planned to substitute Lucille Hatton for Edith. Elmo wins the friendship of an Indian, Standing Bear, and has numerous battles with Horton's gang. Edith's ride in the wild box car is well staged.

NEW SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 52 (Universal).—This opens with scenes from the life of an aged blind man, who has developed greatly his sense of touch. Japanese actors appear in several fight scenes of an entertaining sort. Study of reptile and animal skulls, experiments with liquid air and funny excerpts from children's examination papers, are also included.

NEW SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 54 (Universal), Feb. 27.—This opens with some interesting views of a Tennessee trapper, Henry Walker, who makes a living from the sale of pelts. Gowns designed by Margaret Wade Grinager, some extremely amusing dog drawings of the animated type, a study of the ferret, and some humorous want ads are also shown in this strong number.

Books Pickford Film for Third Time.

As a result of breaking box-office records for the S. A. Lynch Enterprises at Memphis, Tenn., during its first and second showings, "The Hoodlum," starring Mary Pickford and distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been booked for a third return engagement at Memphis in the near future.

"Daddy Long Legs," the initial Mary Pickford feature distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has likewise been booked for a return showing at Memphis.

What Is the "Talent?"

In producing "The Dangerous Talent" the American Film Company has gone to great lengths to keep the talent a secret during its production and advertising of this new "Flying A Special, which is now just receiving its first bookings. The posters circle all around the facts and the ads give some interesting items which are "warm," but the exhibitors are left with an open field for all sorts of guessing and exploitation possibilities.

"Klean-Kut Komedy"—That's What Folks Call Christie Comedy. Here Are Three Laughmakers to Prove It.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

LEAVE it to the issue of Moving Picture World dated February 19, 1910, and nothing happened in what was, even then, an infant industry. That is to say, news was scarce.

To be sure there was the advertising section—a mine of information—that meant more to the developing "movie" business than would the record of a birth, the appointment of a press agent or the transfer of a film exchange from one man to another.

And it will be discovered by any searcher of musty files that it is the paid announcement that reflects the twists and turns—the real conditions of the picture business. For the advertiser pays to keep his trade well posted, and tries to get his money's worth.

Solving Some Screen Puzzles.

Take the matter of "Novelty Puzzlettes," for instance. Judging from the announcement made by Novelty Slide Company these screen puzzles were coming along with the regularity of "program pictures" of a later day. "Cities of the United States," "States of the United States," "Popular Flowers," "Girl's Names," and "Letters of the Alphabet" were some of the Americanizing and intensely diverting subjects headed for the slide market. Going to the movies to be puzzled was "something else again."

The Nicholas Power Company had just received another order for Cameragraphs No. 5 from Bogue & Shepard, owners of the Bijou Theatre, Johannesburg, South Africa, an indication of world-wide fame for the American projector.

The Acme Theatre, Eastport, Maine, farthest East of all United States Cinemas, was pictured with snow-ladened garlands that bespoke holiday decorations. And the Acme carried electric signs to guide the plodder through the snow.

In Bad With Patents Company.

News? Oh, yes. News of the picture business in Canada was copied from the Bioscope. It went via London and back here quicker, it would seem, than it could be imported across the border.

The Patents Company canceled the licenses of the S. Nye Bass Film Company, New Orleans, and the Theatre Film Service, San Francisco, but why and for what and because was not specified in the note that marked the passing of these two concerns from the sunshine of the Patents Company. Or, it might have been moonshine!

The Vitagraph sent around a cut that pictured a scene in "The Wayside Shrine." A stone bridge, clump of trees, a rustic bench, a man seated on a camp stool and a girl in Summer-white standing twenty feet away looking at him! Action, speed, ginger—just as snappy as a kodak shot. They were commencing to illustrate "stories of the films."

"Dear Sir," started a letter to the editor, "I have the honor to announce that your man who writes 'Comments on the Film' is crazy as a bedbug." To which P. C. Levar, of Marshfield, Coos Bay, Oregon, signed his name. It may have been a crazy film.

The slide companies were, even then "Americanizing," as per Brayton Manufacturing Company's offering of "A special lecturette with slides of George Washington" to use on Washington's Birthday. Ten years ago there were more slide-releasing concerns than there were film distributors.

Its different now, but we could still stand for a lot of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln screen celebrations via slides or films—just so we have 'em. What are you, dear reader, doing toward helping along the "Americanization" purpose of the screen?

"Scenery Free" for picture theatres was advertised by the Turner Company of New York. "You have to put on vaudeville acts or lose money" said the advert. Now-a-days you have to keep 'em off or lose money.

"A Trip to Mars" was a film-title timely then and ready now for revival. "Aviation at Los Angeles" was another film indicating that the Infant was stepping out.

W. C. Kunzmann, Cleveland representative of Moving Picture World, had taken over the renting and selling of the Jeffries-Johnson fight slides, thus exemplifying the difficult and always unsuccessful stunt of carrying water on both shoulders. What a chance a rival "slide" man would have had in Kunsmann's correspondence!

Next week we'll look into the issue dated February 26, 1910. Better stick along. Your own record may pop up.

Maxwell Milder Returns to Select.

Maxwell Milder, former manager of the Select office in Philadelphia, is to return to his old stamping ground after six months' absence in foreign fields. He returned recently from London, where he has been actively engaged in furthering the Selznick interests abroad. He has been associated with the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises since its inception and remained in charge of the Philadelphia office when Selznick took over the Select office there. Last fall he sailed for England, where he established the Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., in England.

Keep Your Canopy Free from All Snow; Here's a Simple Method of Doing It

A FEATURE of the front of New York's Rivoli was the flat-topped glass-covered canopy supported by heavy welded chains running from the structural ironwork that formed the skeleton of the building.

Since the completion of the theatre in August, 1917, this canopy had withstood the pressure of wind and weight of snow without the stretching of a link of the chains or any sign of buckling of the iron framework of the giant canopy that measured twenty-two by forty-four feet.

On February 6 a heavy storm visited New York. A wind that accompanied the snowfall piled up drifts along portions of Broadway and deposited snow to a depth of three to four feet along the outside edge of the canopy.

Then Came the Rain.

Then a rain set in and the snow on the roof became saturated with water, a link of the chain parted and the canopy gently settled as bolt after bolt of the fastenings succumbed to the strain and the whole affair came down on the sidewalk. The fall was so gradual that there were but two casualties. A woman sustained cuts on the head and a colored porter was so badly frightened that only after the arrival of an ambulance was it discovered that he was scared, not injured.

When it was taken into consideration that a cubic foot of water weighs 62½ pounds, that the saturated snow represented nearly that amount of solid water, and that nearly half of the outer portion of the canopy was covered to a depth of three feet, it will be readily understood the weight and leverage exerted upon the chains and their supports.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

A Still More Serious Accident.

More serious was the result of the fall of the canopy of the Playhouse in West Forty-eighth street during the same storm, beneath which a passerby was so badly crushed that he died a few hours later.

The Playhouse canopy measured fifteen by eighty feet and the owner of the house states that not only was its design and material of the best, but that several thousand dollars more than the estimate of bidders on its construction had been expended in making it as absolutely safe as foresight could dictate.

It was erected about two years ago and the framework was entirely of steel. But even such material and construction could not stand up under the conditions that prevailed at the time of its collapse.

May Occur Elsewhere.

This is something that may occur in almost any other locality visited by severe snowstorms, and the difficulty of clearing such structures at the required time renders most timely a considera-

The Governor of New Jersey making pictures with a UNIVERSAL

IN the State of New Jersey they are using moving picture cameras for educational purposes in connection with State Hospitals, Prisons, Homes, Reformatories and various other institutions. Mr. Frank A. Krueger is the official motion picture photographer for the State and naturally uses a UNIVERSAL, as with this camera, he knows he gets perfect film all the time and every time.

Educators, Explorers, Army Photographers, in fact every operator who has to depend on his camera as a soldier depends on his gun uses a UNIVERSAL.

Read what Mr. Krueger says of his trusty machine and then write for illustrated book, catalogue and full particulars.

Gentlemen:-

I am forwarding to you under separate cover a photograph of Governor Runyon of New Jersey as a cameraman with one of your Universal Cameras. The figures in the picture are as follows.

On the (left) Gov. Runyon of New Jersey, (Centre) Director, Dr. L.B.Blan, Dep't. of Institutions and Agencies State of New Jersey, (Right) Official Cinematographer Frank A. Krueger of Dep't. of Institutions and Agencies.

The Department of Institutions and Agencies of the State of New Jersey as far as I know are the first in the country to adopt the motion picture campaign to show the public how New Jersey cares for it's wards which includes all the State Hospitals for the Insane, State Prison, Girls Home, Home for Boys, Womens Reformatory, and various other institutions.

What I want to say is this, that we have two Universal Cameras 400 ft. capacity, one automatic dissolve, and the other no dissolve, and they have given the very best of service both in X-Ray and Scientific Research work and in straight picture making. I have shot twenty thousand feet up to the present date and am pleased to say I have not lost one foot of film through camera trouble. In all my experience with the Universal Camera while in the Photo.Div. of the Signal Corps U.S.Army and my present position with the State of New Jersey it has never failed to deliver the goods for me.

I wish you would send me a catalogue or any other literature that you have on hand as there are several states in Union which are writing us for information as to our education campaign we are so ably conducting fostered by Commissioner Burdette G.Lewis and Dr.L.B.Blan of the Dep't. of Institution and Agencies while I am doing the photographic work.

Yours truly,
Frank A. Krueger

tion of a method by which recurrences of accidents of this nature may be prevented.

I strongly advocate approaching the problem from the point of snow removal instead of endeavoring to strengthen supports sufficiently to withstand the tremendous weight and leverage to which certain conditions would subject them.

A Simple Method.

The simplest method of keeping the canopy snow-free is by utilizing steam and water, both hot and cold. A three-inch pipe on the roof of the structure connected with a three-way valve would permit the use of either of these at will. The pipe should be perforated at intervals of three or four inches with holes one-sixteenth inch diameter bushed with standard brass nozzles to prevent the rusting up of the jets. If frozen, the apertures could be instantly cleared of ice by the passing of steam

Why 68 Chicago Theatres Installed Oplex Signs

SIXTY-EIGHT of the most modern theaters in Chicago and nearby towns have installed Oplex Interchangeable Electric Signs. This shows their appeal to big town owners and managers. Here are some of the reasons: Oplex Signs are perfect day signs as well as night signs—raised, snow-white glass letters, on a dark background.

The reading of the sign can be changed in a few minutes—just take out one set of letters and put in another. No lamps or wiring to change.

Oplex Signs have greatest reading distance, as well as the most artistic designs. They give an air of quality to the front.

We shall be glad to send you a sketch showing how your Oplex Sign will look.

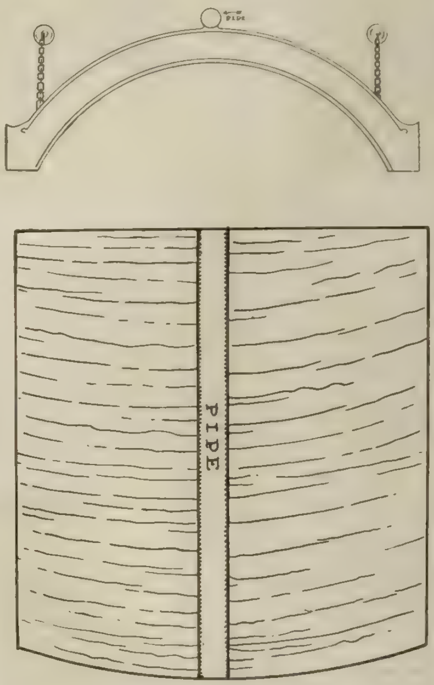
or hot water through the pipe, after which either hot or cold water could be used for flushing the roof and melting the snow.

There is nothing experimental in the idea, as Edward B. Kinsila installed such devices upon all the glass-roofed studios designed by him.



Round Top Canopy
Front and top views, showing sprinkler pipe along ridge.

Two General Types.

For purposes of classification, canopy may be divided into two types; flat topped and round or peaked. For the former type, a three-inch pipe running transversely across the front is perforated on the side toward the building as the main slope will be toward the house. This transverse pipe is connected to the three-way valve within the theatre by a three-inch pipe which need not be perforated.

For the round topped or peaked type, a three-inch pipe perforated at intervals on both sides along its entire length and capped at its outer end, runs along the crown or ridge of the canopy.

With such an apparatus installed, it would be possible to keep the roof of the structure free from snow without sending a knight of the shovel out on the roof at frequent and inconvenient intervals.

Every Theatre Is Dependent On Its Lobby

Unconsciously, playgoers form an opinion of a theatre by the first impression the lobby gives them. Is your lobby neat and inviting? Does it radiate a refined, polished atmosphere?

BILT-RITE Display Frames are a potent factor in establishing the rating of a theatre with its patrons. Made in many standard styles or built to order from blue prints or rough sketches, they offer a large selection to the careful Exhibitor. BILT-RITE Display Frames carry the endorsement of the country's foremost showmen.

Ask your local dealer for the BILT-RITE line or write us direct for complete information.

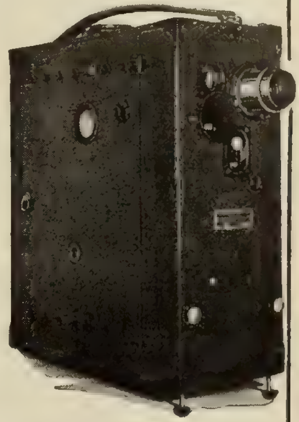
The AMERICAN PROJECTOSCOPE

"The Portable Motion Picture Projecting Machine Without An Apology."

Experience has proven that the new American Projectoscope is without an equal as a compact, portable fool-proof projection machine. Gets current from any electric light socket, runs film either backward or forward—film can be stopped and held stationary at any point.



FOR DIRECTORS, FILM EDITORS, EXHIBITORS

For use by a director or film editor in examining film it is unequalled —titles can be held stationary on the screen and inspected. Exhibitors can use it to project features in their private offices while the theatre screen is in use.

FOR SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES

The Projectoscope is ideal for schools and churches. Anyone can operate it—no experience necessary. Either hand-driven or motor-driven devices supplied. Throws a perfect picture. Can be set up and taken down in a minute. No rewind necessary.

FOR COMMERCIAL USE

Hundreds of firms with reels of commercial films are equipping their salesmen with Projectoscopes. "Seeing is believing." Prospects can be shown every detail of manufacture—the product in actual use. As a result sales increase tremendously. Easily portable—carries like a suitcase.

A SMALL INVESTMENT— LARGE RETURNS—

This Machine is designed to apply a wax compound to the margin of New Films, to prevent damage during the first few runs thru the Projecting Machine.

The collecting of emulsion from "green" films on aperture plate and tension springs of the projector is in many cases causing untold damage to the film and excessive wear to the projector as well as marring the presentation on the screen by jumping.

Proper Waxing of New Films—

Prolongs the life of the Film.
Eliminates excessive wear on Projecting Machine.
Insure Steady Pictures on the screen.
Prevents tearing of sprocket holes by emulsion deposits.

AND

Saves the film from having Oil squirted all over it by some Operator trying to get "green" film thru his machine without a stop.

The Werner Film Waxing Machine applies the Compound accurately to the margin of the film and positively will not spread wax onto the picture.

Gentlemen:
We wish to advise that the Type CS, three phase Westinghouse motor generator set purchased from you in May 1917, has been in daily use.

Since its installation it has not cost us one cent for repairs, and is in as good condition as the day we put it in.

We have been told that our projection compares favorably with that of any house in the Southwest, and we do know that we have been free from the light troubles of the average small town showman.

We expect to open a house in new territory within the next year, and will be very glad to install one of your generators when the time comes.

Very truly,

THE POOR FISH WOULD BE CONSIDERED AS THE VERY EMBLEM OF WISDOM IF SILENCE WERE AS GOLDEN AS IT IS SAID TO BE!

PERSONALLY, we don't consider silence as golden. On the contrary. We believe in shouting our message from the housetops!

Positively knowing RITCHEY posters to be the most efficacious and the best motion picture poster possible to produce, we believe in saying so. Not in whispers either! At the top of our lungs! With a megaphone! In sonorous far flung tones that everybody may hear! Particularly we have wanted every Exhibitor in these United States to hear us—and they have heard!

For the exhibitor knows that we speak the truth. When we say that the RITCHEY poster always has the maximum of advertising value—he can check up that statement against his box-office records. And he does, for all that we have said is coming back from him as a thunderous echo, and it takes the form of a clamorous demand for more, and ever more, RITCHEY posters!

A picture filled with surprises, delightful romance and lively adventure.

A star, loved the country over, in the most bewitching part of her career.

From a directorial standpoint the name of Robert Z. Leonard guarantees the artistic and mechanical perfection of the production.

Adrian Johnson, prolific writer of screen stories whose successes are legion, made the adaptation from Cynthia Stockley's famous Cosmopolitan Magazine story.

It will be backed by the greatest advertising campaign in the history of pictures.

A masque ball is hardly the place one expects to encounter serious adventure but the heroine in this story does. It leads her across the ocean into a most amazing and unexpected series of happenings where only her wit and ingenuity save her from disastrous consequences. Situation builds upon situation, each one consistently climbing to the most startling and fascinating climax ever written into a photoplay. There is romance in abundance, plenty of comedy, a dash of melodrama and a touch of pathos all so cleverly intermingled that every one of the emotions are played upon.

As a story it made a host of new friends for the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

As a picture it will increase the clientele of every exhibitor showing it.

It's the kind of a production that everybody in the country will want to see.

Your Lucky Day

ANY day is a lucky day on which you show a Paramount-Carter DeHaven Comedy.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven are the Good Luck Twins. They've made people laugh for years—they know how!

"Hoodooed," the first of their new pictures, is a comedy for every sort of theatre, because it appeals to every sort of person.

Wholesome, happy, made up of the stuff of every day life, and therefore genuinely funny and uniquely entertaining.

Show "Hoodooed", the first of these comedies in your theatre, and it won't be the last you'll show!

It's just that difference between a feature and a 'filler'—the difference between pictures the audience makes it a point to see and pictures they feel like walking out on, that makes or mars the value of a News Service—which is the reason why exhibitors straight across the country prefer the service whose facilities, equipment and efficiency give them the big world events first—while interest is fresh and keen. More exhibitors subscribe to The Big Three {International News, Universal Current Events, Hearst News} —released through Universal—than to a-n-y o-t-h-e-r N-e-w-s S-e-r-v-i-c-e.

PUBLIC NOTICE TO

Crooked Producers

Hereafter when you try to induce artists under contract with the Universal to break their contracts, I shall call you by name. I shall dangle you up before the eyes of the exhibitors of the world and show that these dishonest practices of yours are the direct cause of the frightful increase in the cost of making pictures.

Some of you are now trying to get Mr. Erich von Stroheim because his picture "Blind Husbands" proves that he is the greatest discovery in years in the matter of directors; and because you have heard that his second picture "The Devil's Passkey" is even a greater triumph. Unfortunately for you, von Stroheim comes of good old stock and your money and your wiles cannot tempt him from the path of honor.

When Mr. von Stroheim was untried and unknown as a director, why didn't you gamble on him, as the Universal did? Why didn't you have vision enough to see that he had the makings of a great director? Failing to do this, why do you now hang over him like vultures seeking to grab him by hook or crook, with the accent on the crook?

Have you no sense of decency or honor? Don't you know that any profit you might make by causing another man to violate his written word of honor is polluted profit, tainted money which is unfit to spend on your wives and your children? Don't you know that star-stealing or even attempted star-stealing is a specie of pimping which is loathsome in the eyes of civilized men and women?

I serve notice on you here and now that Erich von Stroheim is under contract with the Universal for years to come. And so is Priscilla Dean, whose great production soon to be released will make your smirking mouths water with desire to smash her contract. And so is Harry Carey. And so are Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo, Edith Roberts, Frank Mayo, Tod Browning, Rollin Sturgeon, Jack Ford, Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips and Robert Andersen.

Do you imagine that by hiding behind "agents" and fake corporations you can still violate all principle and all honor and continue to get away with it unharmed?

Do you imagine that because the Universal has been long-suffering in the past and has never considered any star worth fighting for when that star developed a sense of dishonor, that we will continue to let you pick our pockets hereafter?

Let this sink into your consciousness: The Universal has engaged counsel at both coasts to prosecute to the fullest limit of the law any one of you who hereafter befouls the moving picture business by trying to continue your rotten dealings of the past. We intend to exercise our rights at any cost and without a let-up. We will not confine ourselves to enforcing contracts with individuals but we will punish, as much as the law permits, any crooked agent or corporation who tries to induce any artist to jump a contract with us.

You, and the exhibitors who support you, are directly to blame for the present frightful costs of making pictures. Drunk with easy money, you have tried to use the power of that money to corrupt or dissatisfy artist after artist who had none but honorable intentions and the best of good faith until you came along with your almost irresistible bribes.

You are not going to get away with it any longer. I am going to turn the spotlight on your activities every time those activities are crooked. I am going to frizzle you on the grill of redhot public opinion. I am going to use the one weapon that you are afraid of—The Truth!

This is my final warning. I will not write you any more polite private letters asking you to let our artists alone. As fast as I get the goods on you I will address you publicly and fight the matter out before the eyes of the exhibitors as well as before the courts.

I have tried working with you in National Associations and have found they are not worth a tinker's dam. I have tried every way I can think of to induce you to play the game with the cards on the table. But you don't know how. You use marked cards and you deal from the bottom of the deck!

Crooks of the world, which one of you will be first to take me on?

A Great Play is Brought to the Screen

"Romance," one of the outstanding dramatic successes of the past decade, is coming to the screen.

Its remarkable record on the stage—nearly three years in London, a year in Chicago, a phenomenal season in New York, a special engagement of eight weeks in Boston—made it the object of the keenest bidding among motion picture producers.

United Artists Corporation is fortunate, not only in having acquired the play for picture presentation, but likewise in having Miss Keane herself appear in the role that she has made one of the most vivid figures of the modern stage.

"Romance" has won its way into the hearts of drama-lovers, because it tells an unusual, remarkable story and because of the rare talent and artistry that Miss Keane brought to it.

And so the play bespeaks an unusual picture—a picture of powerful and lasting appeal.

Twelve Big Features That Will Pack Houses and Build Big Bank Balances

GLEN WHITE AS "TEX"

IN an idle moment Sherlock Holmes declared to his friend, Watson, that if he could lift the roofs off all the houses in London and peep in upon the hidden lives of the inmates the number of tragedies would be appalling. This is what does. He raises the roof and you peep in with him. They are your neighbors that "Tex" introduces to you. Everyday folk they are, but they have their masks off, and their heartrending tragedies and carefully concealed sins are unexpectedly revealed with a vividness that is startling.

"TEX"

Elucidator of Mysteries

It is this realism and humanness of the twelve five-reel "Tex" stories, in addition to the sustained interest and mystery always associated with the best detective stories, that will pack picture houses and build big bank balances.

Mr. Miller will specialize in work for which inclination, study and native ability have adequately prepared him. Realart expects from him productions which will mark a truly new era in the development of the silent drama.

REALART

THE scope of Charles Miller's experience is the whole realm of drama. Super, actor, star, stage manager, business manager, producer—he had achieved recognition long ere the blazing lights of the studio beckoned him to a new and greater opportunity.

Sky so blue it makes you wonder
If it's heaven shining through;
Earth is smiling 'way out yonder,
Sun so bright it dazzles you;
Birds a-singing, flowers a-flinging
All their fragrance on the breeze;
Dancing shadows, green, still meadows—
Don't you mope, you've still got these.

ROBERT W. SERVICE

NOT all the romance of motion pictures has yet been flashed upon the screen. For what picture has told the bewildering story of the successful actor of thirty-five, a leading man for Broadway stars, who blithely forsook a salary of $350 a week to begin anew at $3 a day as super in a studio? Yet thus has Charles Miller achieved success!

It isn't difficult to have faith in a man like that. Nor is it difficult to believe that in less than four years from the day he began in pictures, his annual income was exceeding $50,000.

The record of Charles Miller's achievements is his best advertisement. He joins MAYFLOWER because here he finds unlimited backing and unlimited confidence. And Realart opens to him as wide a world market as honest productions can find.

THE director who never had a failure!" So writes Charles Miller's biographer. And as we read, there comes to memory "The Flame of the Yukon," a Miller masterpiece. Yes, and "The Ghost of Yesterday" and "By Right of Purchase," in which Norma Talmadge starred! "The Sawdust Ring," too, and many more which you know as well as we.

They say also that Charles Miller has "made" six big stars, but it is of picture production, not star creation, that Realart is thinking now. It is on those wonderful stories of the big out-of-doors that Mr. Miller's reputation will rest—stories, we are pledged, of which "The Flame of the Yukon" was but a foretaste.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Tessier:

We wish to advise you that your serial THE ADVENTURES OF RUTH featuring Ruth Roland, broke all Saturday records of this house, and when we state that we broke all records, we mean records that we believed were hard to beat. We were absolutely sold after viewing this serial that it was the best serial we have ever projected in our theatre, and as you know, we have run all of your serials and many of your competitors', and we have no hesitancy in stating that this is the greatest serial ever run.

We advertised the first episode extensively; also gave a free matinee at 10 o'clock Saturday morning for the children, and the regular matinee that started at 1 o'clock broke all box office records, as did the night show.

We also had three autographed photographs of Ruth Roland attractively framed, and displayed same in our lobby and also in the window of the corner drug store, and we advised our patrons that we would have a drawing of the lucky numbers for all those who attended the second episode of this serial, and give these photos away as prizes to the winners, with the compliments of Miss Ruth Roland.

We enclose herewith a picture, showing the number of children on the outside of the theatre, as well as those inside. This proves conclusively to us that if you buy a serial or feature that is a good one, and you will exert a little extra effort to advertise it sufficiently, you will reap a harvest.

Thanking you for your past favors, I am

Create Happy Hours

All America Loves The Beautiful

QUALITY impresses you on every hand in the stately mansion of George Washington at Mount Vernon.

Americans are quick to recognize quality, now as in the days of Washington.

To gain the respect of the American public through quality alone has always been the single aim of Selznick Pictures.

That is why they are to be found at theatres of highest standards.

That is why you feel as if you had been associating with a charming and intelligent friend, as you leave the theatre where Selznick Pictures create happy hours.

COMEDY

These 1400 ft. comedies are 2-reel comedies boiled down to 1,400 ft. That's why they are the fastest, snappiest comedies made. Real "Comedy" brains supported by capital, makes these laugh producers stand out in the present market as the work of "Professionals."

ART

This 400 ft. Art-color scenic is the sensation of the year. The old legends of the world's beauty-spots revealed in all of Nature's glorious colorings and gentle shadings by the new, unrivaled HANDSCHIEGL Color Process. Fully protected by patents. Think of the most beautiful colored film you ever saw, and then imagine its faults eliminated.

NOVELTY

These 200 ft. Novelties are distinctly "different." A combination of Wit, Philosophy, History and Prophecy, done in a way that spells "Class."

Combined with any feature it builds "Class" and sparkling finish into your show, without any other films. Makes a good "show" out of a weak feature; makes a perfect "show" out of a strong feature.

"THE HONEY BEE"

From the "best seller"

by SAMUEL MERWIN

Read what a famous motion picture reviewer said of America's newest special—"The Dangerous Talent," following a private view of it in the American projection room:

"Here is a picture that stands out like a cameo from the ordinary run of attractions.

It tells an interesting story in an interesting way.

The cast is an excellent one throughout.

It is instantly apparent that the utmost care was taken in the direction.

Margarita Fisher does some of the best work of her career.

I am sure exhibitors everywhere will find it an offering far above the ordinary!"

"The Dangerous Talent"

with Margarita Fisher

A Story of an exceptional sort. Just what the pretty stenographer, who is the heroine of this tale, will make of the dangerous talent she possesses is a problem that will keep audiences guessing right up to the last fade-out. Miss Fisher is supported by an unusual cast. The direction by Geo. Cox is above criticism.

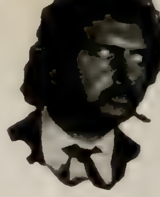
Six Feet Four

A giant among feature attractions. William Russell in the world famous story by Jackson Gregory. A hit with audiences everywhere.



The HELLION

An emotional tornado—a dramatic whirlwind. The kind of a picture that lends itself to unusual exploitation.

Hundreds of exhibitors who have shown it proclaim it a real house-packer.

EVE IN EXILE

By COSMO HAMILTON

Many critics acclaim this story of Cosmo Hamilton's a greater triumph than his "Scandal" which ran for more than six months on the speaking stage at a single theatre. It features Charlotte Walker and an all-star cast.

The VALLEY of TOMORROW

A sensational attraction now playing to capacity business the country over. Filmed in Nature's Wonderland—near beautiful Lake Tahoe. Starring William Russell.

If you're looking for proven box-office successes—pictures which are sure-fire—absolutely certain to satisfy your patrons—enter your application now for an early showing of any or all of the above feature attractions. Elucidator of Mysteries

WHY did she hide the name of the real criminal and thus compel the man she loved to suffer imprisonment and disgrace? Was it the dread of scandal which kept her lips sealed? This is a typical situation in the "Tex" series, which gives these detective stories a gripping, irresistible appeal, which is responsible for the dramatic touch that skyrockets them far beyond the average detective story.

CHRISTIE COMEDIES

THEY SAY—

Just a few years ago the split reel comedy was tacked on the end of a program to fill in, and also act as a "chaser" for those who liked to see a picture twice for one admission price. Then came the one reel comedy, and we must admit that some of these are real gems. The Christie comedies, for instance. They show real people in real life, with everyday situations that do not depend upon slapstick to get a laugh. Now we have the two reel comedies coming to the foreground

-MILWAUKEE JOURNAL-

A Christie Comedy adds much fun to the program. Christie has been trying a line of stuff that is nearly always surefire. They are making travesties on stage plays. The first one had to do with Shakespeare and was certainly a howling success on Broadway. This last one is a take-off on the burning of Rome, while Nero plays the banjo. The celebrated fight between gladiators and a homemade bull threw the audience into fits of laughter. Patrons were heard to exclaim that they liked this better than the feature. Some praise for a comedy!

-DRAMATIC MIRROR-

"WHY WILD MEN GO WILD"

One-Reel Christie Comedy
Distributed by State Rights

COMMENT—A Christie comedy can usually be relied upon to give satisfaction. That's what this newest one does It is more of a comedy-drama, but it is refined and contains sufficient laughs to make it a good attraction wherever shown

-SCREEN OPINIONS-

HE MARRIED HIS WIFE (Christie Comedy).—A straight comedy, absolutely without slap-stick aid, but legitimately and generously amusing. The fun comes from the humor of the situations and the wit of the subtitles. Clever acting by the entire cast and admirable direction insure the picture a hearty welcome. One of the Christie superior comedies and a credit to the brand.—WEITZEL.

-MOTION PICTURE WORLD-

"A Roman Scandal," latest release of the two-reel Christie Special comedies, in which Colleen Moore is featured, proved a tickler of the ribs of the audiences entertained by the Walnut theatre The burlesque is a scream and the two reeler is well up to the exceedingly high standard set by the Christie Specials. This is the first release in which Colleen Moore appears, Al Christie making it a point to use different stars in different releases, which operate to make every Christie Special a real special.

-REEL FACTS-

Rowdy Ann.

Gaumont (Christy Comedy). Featuring Fay Tincher Two reels. Released March 1

An exceedingly good comedy, which is comedy, and proves that the producing firm is out to reach with its humorous subjects the same high standard it does in serious drama. The story is quite a good one and is well told. The staging is perfect, and embraces prairie-land, hills, trains, and nearly every possible type of location. Although we don't often get stunts in comedy, unless they be of the exaggerated sort, "Rowdy Ann" has a big share, and these include some fine riding and an exciting chase along the roof of a swiftly running railway train.

-KINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY-

A Roman Scandal," Christie—

Something novel in the way of farces on stage productions is to be found in a two-reel Christie special, released through First National exchanges called "A Roman Scandal." Colleen Moore is featured in the production which has numerous laughs and has been screened exceptionally well. The featured player handles her role splendidly and helps put the offering, directed by Al E. Christie and written by W Scott Darling, over Almost all of the humor centers about an opera company which comes to town and presents "The Fall of Rome." They burlesque it just slightly when depicting the efforts of the original cast, but slaughter it when the actors go on strike and amateurs take their places. The battle of the gladiators, and Ursus' throwing the mighty bull (which is a cow) have been filmed so as to get genuine laughs You will make no mistake if you book this.

-WID'S-

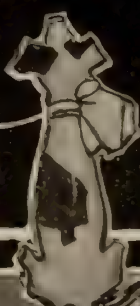
"A Roman Scandal"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reel Special)

MACK SENNETT is not the only comedy producer who can burlesque antique plays. Here is Al Christie coming forward as the sponsor of an ancient pattern and so successfully has he ridiculed it that there is no doubt of its reception among the lovers of film comedies.

At the Rialto in New York the comedy made the audience register spontaneous laughter Which is sure indication that it has its merits. There is enough incidental business and good natured tomfoolery to please a mean man. Need more be said?—LAURENCE REID

-MOTION PICTURE NEWS-



Celebrated Players list 1,100 theatres in Illinois and Indiana as "regular customers." Its hold on the Chicago territory is best indicated by the fact that 280 Chicago theatres are showing the Christie one-reel comedies.

One of the crowning achievements of the exchange in the closing days of 1919 was the signing of a contract with the Playhouse, one of Chicago's best known first-run downtown theatres, whereby beginning December 21, the Christie comedies will be given week runs permanently.

"DEADLINE AT ELEVEN"

By Ruth Byers

Directed by George Fawcett

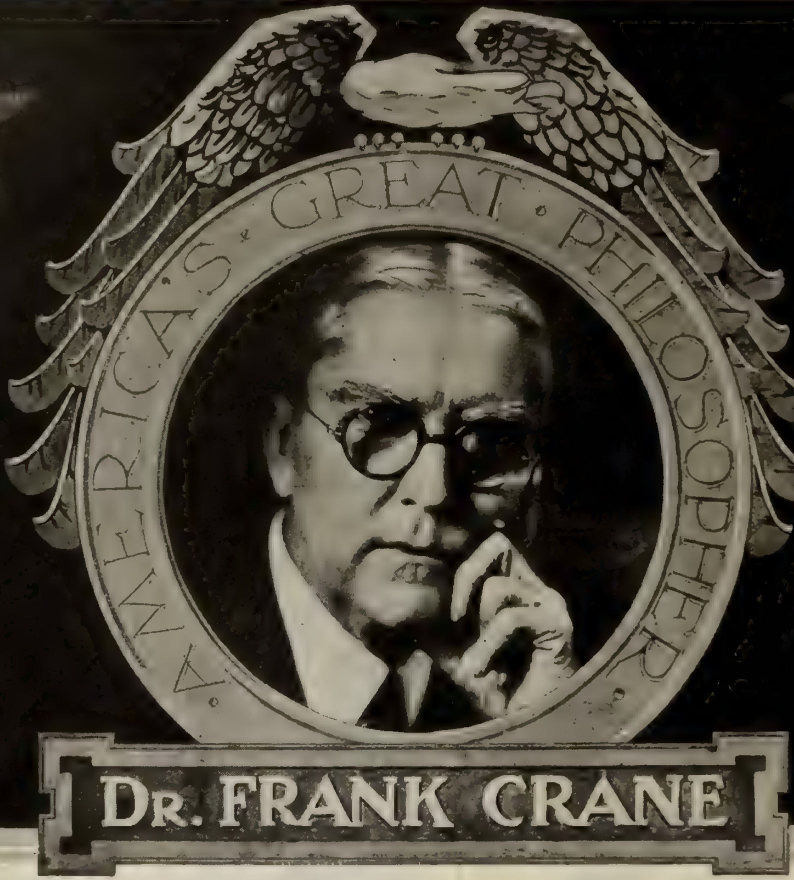
This picture would be unusual if only for the fact that it is a newspaper story done true to life.

It was written by a newspaper woman and adapted by a newspaperman, and then, many of its scenes were filmed in the editorial offices of a metropolitan daily.

The public is curious about the "behind-the-scenes" regions of a big newspaper. Here is a picture that will relieve at least a part of that curiosity.

The throb of the press is in this story, and the clicking typewriters and clinking linotypes.

"Deadline at Eleven" is like no other picture produced this season.



The Producers of

"EMPTY ARMS"

HAVE THE PRIVILEGE TO ANNOUNCE that they have contracted with one of the most distinguished literary men of the world, to write a big feature picture of timely and universal interest. The man with whom the engagement has been made is perhaps the most read writer in America. His daily editorials and gentle philosophical treatises are followed religiously by over Twenty Million Readers in the foremost cities of the country. Those who know him virtually worship him. Hence it is a distinguished privilege to announce that the producers of "Empty Arms" have made arrangements with DR. FRANK CRANE, in collaboration with CHARLES D. ISAACSON, Dr. Crane's colleague on the "New York Globe," for the famous philosopher and teacher to tell in story form his grand conception of

"DEMOCRACY"

A Super Feature will result. We have already read the script of the story, and we are able to announce at this time that it is one of the most extraordinary dramatic tales ever conceived for motion picture development!

"DEMOCRACY" will unquestionably be the biggest Feature Picture made since the "Birth of a Nation" and "Cabiria."

No expense will be spared in the filming of the story. The foremost actors and actresses are engaged, and the picture will be made with the co-operation of Dr. Frank Crane by Frank Reicher.

Options on "DEMOCRACY" for territorial rights may be secured at once. Preference will be shown, naturally, to buyers of "EMPTY ARMS."

SPECIAL EXPORT NUMBER

MOVING PICTURE WORLD presents herewith its special export number, a substantial symposium of feature articles and advertising on foreign trade, numbering fifty-four pages. Perhaps never before in the film business did its foreign experts get together in such a timely and valuable collection of facts and opinions on the business of selling motion pictures outside of the United States and Canada. Moving Picture World is proud to present this special number to the trade.

If Americans Don't "Dig Down" Now They Will Have to Do So Later On

By F. G. ORTEGA

Editor of Cine Mundial

IF every road leads to Rome, every discussion on export leads to the rate of exchange. It is a real, a tangible obstacle that looms ahead of whoever attempts to ship a reel of film to Europe. As the days pass, its proportions increase. It cannot be overcome by the commercial methods in vogue at present, particularly in the film trade.

We could print a few pretty phrases or the usual "straight-from-the shoulder talks" so dear to the film man's soul in his unguarded moments, but unfortunately they would not bring down the rate of exchange.

Those who are only interested in obtaining one or two more cents per foot on their pictures will not solve the problem, and neither ourselves nor anybody else can solve it for them.

For the man whose only ambition is to "clean up" in a few deals, or that all he knows or cares to know about the business is that Great Britain buys so many copies more than France, we have no advice to offer.

We know of no panacea capable of making the Europeans happy and at the same time increase or even maintain the price of our pictures.

We believe that the peak in the downward exchange curve has not been reached. It will be still more unfavorable to trading.

World Must Regain Its Strength.

We believe the fat seven years just elapsed will be followed by another seven years of lean pickings. The world will have to regain all its strength, acquire new wealth and start another mad rumpus before the profits and profiteerings of the late upheaval can materialize again.

We are not securing as much profit from Europe in films or any other article as we did two years ago. These present profits, instead of increasing, will decrease, and decrease very rapidly —for the good of Europe and for our own good. (It should be borne in mind that the Europeans are not the only ones to suffer in this respect: we ourselves are paying outrageous prices for almost everything.)

If the price of our films, on account of the rate of exchange and the desire for higher profits on the part of the producers, keeps mounting up, only one thing can happen: the Europeans will have to do without them.

They will have to produce pictures themselves.

If we force Europe to take this step without our co-operation the outlook is not pleasant.

Should Dig Into Our Own Pockets.

How can this situation be relieved?

By digging down into our own pockets.

Of course, this is rather painful advice to give anybody, but it is the only practical one. To think that we can help our customers in Europe by capitalizing their necessity, by waxing wealthy on their handicaps, is to commit a piece of folly. They do not need that kind of help, and even if they did, the rate of exchange would prevent us from giving it.

If we do not dig in our pockets now we will have to do so later and deeper. To do so now is the fairest course to take; also the wisest.

American producers should establish themselves in France, Great Britain, Italy and Germany (some already have done so), not to compete with the local manufacturers, but to co-operate with them—building studios, paying local taxes, developing national talent, making good pictures and marketing them throughout the world—the United States included.

Exporters Should Become Importers.

Our exporters, with their wonderful first-hand knowledge of international markets, tastes and financial conditions, should also become importers, handling all kinds of good pictures in the territories where they operate.

Europe cannot become an absolute tributary to us in the realm of motion pictures. If there were not other reasons to prevent it, the rate of exchange alone would do it. We should, therefore, aid Europeans to get on their feet as soon as possible by offering them the benefit of our superior knowledge and organization in this field.

Moving pictures, by their very nature, cannot be a strictly national industry or art. If we help now where help is most needed, when the art becomes international, as it is bound to be, we will hold in its councils that dominating position to which we are entitled by our pioneering efforts and our enormous consumption.

Competition?

There will be room for everybody. Only the surface has been scratched in motion picture development.

In Russia alone there are 180 million human beings.

For every theatregoer today there will be twenty ten years hence.

And competition only kills the weaklings, anyway.

When we are all producing and exporting and making money again, we shall be quite able to take care of ourselves—as in the past.

Master Projector Agencies Opened in Foreign Lands

EUGENE H. KAUFMAN, manager of the accessory department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and who was recently instrumental in effecting the contract with the Master Projector Company for the exclusive foreign distribution of their product, announces that he has already concluded arrangements for the disposition of Master Projectors in many foreign territories. He further reports that exclusive sales agencies for Master Projectors have been established in India, Burma, Ceylon, South Africa, Australia, Cuba, Porto Rico, Brazil, England and other foreign countries.

During the past two weeks Mr. Kaufman also completed satisfactory negotiations for the distribution of Speer Carbons on an exclusive agency basis in Brazil and Argentine. These are said to be two of the largest contracts ever closed for Speer Carbons.

Many sales are reported by Mr. Kaufman for the Fulco Accessories in France, Egypt, England, Philippine Islands, Central America, Belgium, Holland and Mexico. It is interesting to observe the growing popularity of Fulco products in foreign territories.

Donald Campbell Increases His Activities in Exports

IN his new offices in the Leavitt Building, Donald Campbell is expanding his export business with an energy that springs from years of successful achievement in foreign merchandising. To the trade in India, Burma, Ceylon and that great district blanketed under the designation of the Far East the name of Donald Campbell has for years been known as a symbol of fair dealing and enterprise.

Mr. Campbell has exported American film to every country where coin of the realm is figured in exchange for commodities and through his recent acquisition of more capital his business will expand more than it ever has. Mr. Campbell is a student of finances and money exchange, and knows the foreign market in all of its ramifications.

Just lately he secured the world's rights to William N. Selig's newest serial, "Vanishing Trails." "The fact that Selig made the serial," says Mr. Campbell, "is of itself a twenty per cent. advantage in marketing 'Vanishing Trails' in foreign territories. Selig's animals and Selig's method of producing serials appeal to the sense of adventure that abounds particularly in the Far East, while in European countries the name of 'Selig' is standard for good reputation and confidence of the picture-going public."

Four Serials for Far East.

Another deal of importance, especially in India, Burma and Ceylon, is the sale of four serials of current interest to American audiences for exploitation in the Far East. Mr. Campbell has sold the Far East rights to N. & H. Woolf, of London, Eng., for the following chapter-productions:

"Mystery of 13," produced by Louis Burston and featuring Francis Ford;

"Lightning Bryce," produced by National Film Corporation and featuring Ann Little and Jack Hoxie;

"Hawk's Trail," produced by Louis Burston and featuring King Baggot, and "Lurking Peril"; a Wistaria Film Corporation serial featuring Ann Luther and George Larkin.

Motion Picture Abroad Is Salesman for America's Expanding Commerce

For Five Years the United States Has Had Things Much Its Own Way, but Now the Great Question Is How Best to Capitalize the Established Trade-Mark "Made In America"—Facts and Figures

By SAMUEL GOLDWYN
President, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

THE products of America have a trade-mark in foreign lands which our manufacturers and exporters have not yet utilized to its fullest possibilities in developing and maintaining international trade. That trade-mark is the American motion picture, which is an advertising medium for everything American; a psychological advance agent for America's foreign commerce. Every photoplay shown abroad inevitably brings the name America to the attention of its beholders. But more than that, every American photoplay is capable of bringing to the favorable knowledge of its foreign audiences striking and attractive information about American industry which could otherwise be brought to their attention only through expensive and lengthy advertising campaigns.

During the past five years America has had little need for using the motion picture to trumpet the wares of American commerce. An impoverished world has looked to America for vitally necessary supplies, first for the carrying on of the war, afterward for the immediate needs of post-war reconstruction. Our merchant ships have carried our country's name to every corner of the globe, and with the expansion of our commerce to meet the urgent need of other nations for our raw and manufactured products American goods have become household familiarities abroad. In other words, during the war American products had an inevitable monopoly on foreign trade because the United States was the only country in a position to export a surplus over and above its own needs.

Our Monopoly at an End.

Conditions, however, are rapidly changing. An era of international commerce is opening up which will substitute the keenest competition for the monopoly which America enjoyed during five years of war. All the nations of the world are embarking on vast plans for reconstructing their devastated lands and for resuming their interrupted industrial operations. It is true we have introduced ourselves and our products to Europe, Asia, South America and Africa. Our merchandise has been eagerly sought.

Everywhere buyers have learned that the trade-mark "Made-in-America" means honest value to those who purchase on the strength of it. But the question which the American exporter must now ask himself is how he can best develop the demand created during the war and how he can best maintain that demand to the highest possible point in the face of what will probably prove to be the keenest competitive era which international commerce has ever seen.

American Pictures in the War.

During the war, and especially after America's entry into it, all the Entente Allies showed a significant appreciation of the value of the motion picture as a means for supporting the morale of their armies and their civilian populations. At a time when the shipping situation was so difficult that everything unessential was barred as largely as possible from taking up space in the holds of outgoing vessels, room was always found for American films to be delivered to our own troops, to the allied troops and to the allied countries in general.

Samuel Goldwyn.

Necessarily, American moving pictures thus received a degree of fame abroad which it would probably have taken a much longer time under normal conditions to develop. Nor were all the pictures thus distributed war pictures in the strict sense. Many of them were on commercial and agricultural subjects, and in fact it may be said that the films sent to Europe and Asia during the war were representative of every important phase of our American life.

In this way, the American government was able not only to furnish regular entertainment to our own soldiers and to those of our allies, but also by means of a purely American product to bring the importance and value of other American products to the attention of the civilian populations abroad.

In this connection, the report of an American representative sent to Archangel by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information is significant. In many of the towns in which he showed his pictures the inhabitants had never seen a photoplay before. Of special interest was the demand for agricultural and industrial subjects. The Russians seemed far more interested in modern American methods of agriculture and manufacture, in our fisheries, mines and forests, than in our feature photoplays. They had heard vague reports of America, but had rarely come in contact with American products. And here was the motion picture showing industrial life as lived 4,000 miles away.

The reaction of the Russian peasant and the workingmen to the American photoplay was similar to the romantic enthusiasm of the discoverer of a new country. The Russian masses had discovered a new land—America—at the very door of their own home. And so a movement that began as political propaganda soon revealed the tremendous possibilities inherent in pictures for creating a demand for our products.

Growth of Demand for American Films.

Advertising rates are a direct index of the circulation and distribution of the advertising medium, showing concretely how large a public is reached by the periodical in which an advertisement is inserted. Considered from that point of view, the increase in exportation of American films and film products during the war may be taken as an important indication of the possibilities resident in American photoplays for reaching large sectors of foreign buyers. This increase in the exportation of motion picture films covers every continent.

A statistical report of South American, Asiatic, and even African exports, reveals the same huge advance that reports on exports to Europe shows. In Argentine, Brazil and other South American countries, the French and Italian moving picture films formerly flooded the market; but during the war the demand for American photoplays almost completely replaced the former type of picture.

The figures in Tables I. and II. reveal statistically what American government agents have discovered by an investigation of the exports to the various countries which use America's surplus products. The conclusion is unmistakable that American films—films which are absolutely American in spirit and subject—have a ready market in every country in the world.

231,000,000 Feet Exported in 1916.

Despite the newness of the motion picture industry, and the understandable limitations of shipping space which somewhat curtailed our export of films, the figures in Tables III. and IV., showing the value of films both exposed and unexposed which were shipped to foreign countries during the war, are indicative of the remarkable increase in foreign demand for our motion pictures during the past six years.

When one recalls that America with her 15,000 motion picture theatres has only 2,500 less than all the rest of the world combined, the shipment in 1916 of 231,000,000 linear feet of film, valued at almost $9,000,000, may be appreciated. At the present time, almost 500,000,000 linear feet of motion pictures are made in America annually.

Compared to this, the shipment of 158,000,000 linear feet of finished pictures in 1916 is a creditable showing for a new industry in a new field. It is interesting to notice that with regard to finished or exposed films, as the tables indicate, the amount exported increased as the war progressed altogether out of proportion to the amount of unexposed films sent abroad.

Big Jump in Norwegian Business.

A notable example of the tremendous increase in the use of American films in a particular country may be seen in Table III. in the case of Norway, whose imports of American films increased from $5,666 in 1915 to $220,886 in 1918. Spain, which imported no American films previous to 1915 and only $1,276 worth in that year, bought American films in 1918 to the value of $45,555. Even in Mexico, where the work of the Division of Films was somewhat hampered by German propaganda, it is notable that from $6,614 worth of American films purchased in 1914 the amount increased to $65,727 worth in 1918.

British Colonies Big Buyers.

In the British colonies and dominions, the influx of American films has been prodigious. Exports of American films to Australia jumped from $118,553 in 1913 to $682,091 in 1918; and our film commerce with Canada increased 60 per cent. In Australia, where the Eastman Kodak Company maintains a factory, the demand for unexposed film reached $47,219 in 1918, as compared with $509 in 1914 and none in 1913. (See Table IV.) While these figures are not large, they show that new markets have been opened for our foreign commerce.

Our own island possessions in the Philippines, which were formerly supplied with French, Italian and German films, turned to America and increased their imports of films from $6,485 in 1914 to $84,502 in 1917 and $71,295 in 1918. Raw film stock exports to the Philippines increased in an even larger proportion.

Turning our attention to Asia, we find increases similar to those that occurred in other lands. Japan, which formerly was almost self-sufficient in the moving picture field, making both the unexposed film itself and the pictures, has recently begun importing finished American films and a comparatively large quantity of

Times have changed since Shakespeare

SHAKESPEARE thought of all the world as a stage. Motion pictures have made that thought a fact. When the olden plays were first put on at that queer little cockpit in London called the Globe Theatre the audience had to imagine suitable settings to the action of the drama.

How the old playwrights would have been amazed and delighted by Paramount Pictures, in which are supplied all the living realities of romance—scenery, climatic conditions, tall forests, salty oceans and the flesh and blood of men and women!

Hardly a community anywhere that lacks a theatre worthy to show unexposed film. For example, we shipped unexposed stock to Japan in 1913 to the value of only $9,563, whereas in 1918 the amount had increased to $62,974.

Significance of the Increase.

Now, what does this mean to the export trade? It means that people in every corner of the world have had one product from America flashed before their eyes continually for the past five years, and have liked it. It means that they are familiar with America through a knowledge of her fishing, mining, forestration and mechanical industrial methods. And their interest does not cease with knowing about these things. It extends to the desire to apply them to their own countries, to adapt American methods to European, Asiatic or South American needs.

The exporter who appreciates the advance work which the photoplay has done for him will keep the new markets he has secured for his particular goods. He will realize that the American motion picture is continuously campaigning for him, that it is advertising the slogan "Made-in-America" to millions and millions of people. More than that, he will appreciate that his interest is bound up with the development of the American film industry abroad. And in order to keep the hold which the American photoplay has secured in other lands, he will publicize this comparatively new article of export at every opportunity. If he has a shipment of goods in which American films are included, it is to his interest to see that they are well disposed of. In all his business efforts, the exporter cannot afford to neglect the motion picture film.

First Licensed Producers Slow to Seek Business in Other Countries

By WILLIAM WRIGHT

IN this day of the keenest kind of film competition, when producers of pictures are counted by the scores and the export trade is considered a part and parcel of producing and distributing plans at good fat footage prices, it doesn't seem possible that but thirteen short years ago the export possibilities of films were not only hardly sought but often spurned, and when such business was accepted it brought only a return of about 8 cents per foot. My knowledge of the film business dates back only to 1907. From that time until 1910 the eight so-called licensed producers of pictures in the United States did not seek export business.

It was in 1910 that the Kalem Company, with which I was then associated, put serious thought on the possibilities of the export trade. Kalem had at that time materially increased the size of its manufacturing plant and I was selected to get the export business under way. I started out as systematically as I could with the facilities at hand at that time. Through the Secretary of State at Washington I obtained the names of all the American consular agents in South American countries, the West Indies, Mexico, Cuba, Japan, China and South Africa. I then made a request to each consul to supply me with names of every one in his particular territory engaged in the film business.

Initial Calls Through Mail Orders.

In the course of a few months I had received a fine bunch of names and proceeded to solicit their business by mail, addressing them in the language of their own country. There was plenty of replies to my letters—yes, a bushel of them; many from a lot of philanthropical adventurers and fly-by-nighters asking for samples and willing to pay if they liked them. However, among these answers to my correspondence there was an encouraging number of legitimate exhibitors and dealers who sought to know how they could obtain American film. Their supply at that time, it must be remembered, came almost entirely from Europe, purchased through agencies or exchanges in Paris, London or Spain and produced by Gaumont, Pathe, and Great Northern Productions, the latter a Swedish company.

William Wright.

I followed up by firing back at them with bales of descriptive matter on our most sensational pictures, suggesting that their orders be placed through a New York bank or exporter and always cash with order. This, in time, led to very desirable business, and many of the export customers secured during 1910 remained with us until the Kalem company stopped production.

Indifference of Producers.

Then the foreign trade came seeking us. I remember very well the coming of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer, of Australia to this city. We greeted them cordially at Kalem when they called at the Twenty-third street office of the company. Mr. Spencer during his conversation with me dropped a remark that pretty well illustrates the indifference shown by many of the licensed American producers at that time in regard to the export market. He seemed surprised at the open arm reception and said that ours was the first office where he had been able to get inside the outer rail. He was genuinely surprised at the lack of desire for his business, especially because he had cash in his pocket to pay 100 per cent. full when he placed his order.

Eventually Kalem acepted Mr. Spen-

WHEN SHALL WE AWAKE?

THE United States Senate is still holding up the Peace Treaty. Meanwhile, the foreign rate of exchange has so far depreciated that our film exports to Europe are being rapidly wiped out. The income we used to get from Europe will have to be made up either by producing cheaper films or increasing the rental fees to Exhibitors or both.

This country is still in a state of war. No peace-time legislation has been enacted. Taxes remain heavy through the enormous waste of maintaining the various departments on a war-time basis. All this most seriously affects the Motion Picture industry in America. It must eventually bring about a financial reaction here that will cause the public to violently retrench. Moving Picture Theatres and amusements of all sorts will be the first to feel the depression. The situation is exceedingly serious.

There can be no remedy until the Senate gets the peace treaty out of its way. Bankers, Financiers and Governments will then know what to expect and be able to move in the daylight in their efforts to restore and stabilize exchange rates. The Congress will be free to work out the problems of peace. Billions of dollars will be saved to the tax-payers by eliminating cumbersome and obsolete war-time machinery. We will be free to go after our European trade again. Pictures need not be cheapened—rentals need not be raised—the box offices need not suffer. The producer can proceed with peace of mind to advance the standard of American-made films——

IF IT IS NOT TOO LATE

It is up to you to let your senator know what you think about it. But action will have to come quickly. Leave politics to those who make money out of it. Be a patriot. Consider the interests of the American public, and your own in particular. Act today.

cer's order for a large quantity of film, which he bought from us direct. His previous purchases had all been through London, which was the biggest export center at that time. Later on our old friend the great American hustler J. D. Williams started operations in Australia and bought the bulk of American films direct in this market.

B. Nichols an Export Pioneer.

During 1910 we finally arranged with B. Nichols of the M. P. Sales Agency, Inc., of London, owned and controlled by Mr. Nichols, a good old-fashioned Vermont Yankee, to handle our film in England and Continental Europe. Mr. Nichols bought at a flat price per foot. The invoices and documents were presented to the bank in New York that financed his purchase, and payment was made within three days. This grew to be a very large and profitable business, and in the early years of our business with Mr. Nichols he also handled exclusively the film of Selig, Biograph and Essanay.

At that time the American pictures were building the popularity in London and Europe that is today so well developed and universal. Mr. Nichols did a big business in opposition to the Continental product and he undoubtedly reaped a large fortune from this source. While American film was thus growing in favor in Europe it also advanced in popularity in the Latin-American countries and gradually very largely replaced the European product.

Some of the Early Handicaps.

At one time, however, for a short space, Cuban importers brought in a line of European subjects that would not have been permitted a showing in the United States. This reduced their business to "Men Only" shows. Eventually more enterprising men got control of the field and this condition was remedied and Cuba again become a fertile field for American productions.

Early experiences with Japan were not entirely satisfactory. The shrewd Oriental would buy one print of a subject, dupe it and make ten or a dozen prints, thus defrauding the American exporter out of a profit of nine or ten prints. This condition was extremely aggravating, not to say unprofitable, and we met it firmly in the end by refusing to sell to Japanese accounts and maintained this position for quite a time until eventually legitimate Japanese importers took hold of the business and relations were resumed that were satisfactory and maintained for years. Our exports to China largely consisted of junk film and that in limited quantities, for until the last few years there were no picture theatres, except in the European quarters.

London Buys 140 Single Reel Prints.

From 1910 on the export busness increased in leaps and bounds and I would say, beginning in 1912 until 1917, the profits on export trade equaled and often surpassed the money made on domestic business. To illustrate this I remember a single reel picture that Kalem made in Ireland, directed by Sidney Olcott and put out under the title of, "The Lad from Old Ireland." In London alone was sold 140 prints of this subject, and I think up to that time it was the largest sale of any single subject in England. This is reckoned exclusive of the sales of Mr. Nichols made on the Continent.

The American producers were thus making great inroads on the European markets of some of the Continental producers, as you may see. It became quite a serious situation for these latter producers and they sought to counter it by imitating our product. An instance of their feeble and really laughable attempts to do this was the making of cowboy pictures in Italy. One of these particular subjects was a scream. The cowboys wore derby hats with a feather stuck in the ribbon band. All their horses had bobbed tails. It is easy to conclude that this type of production did not stem the American advance and they all soon gave up the idea of trying to make American pictures in American style.

In conclusion I will venture to predict that the export market will continue to grow even beyond expectations just as soon as conditions steady themselves "over there" and the rates of exchange become more stable.

Coming Year Will Be One of Opportunity as Well as Endurance Owing to Exchange

By JOHN CECIL GRAHAM,

General Foreign Representative Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

THE year 1920, in my opinion, is to be a year of great opportunity as well as a test of endurance for the American exporter of film. Unnatural conditions, brought about by the exchange situation, have complicated matters greatly, but there is no reason why the company producing pictures which will meet the high standards set by English and European theatres generally should not do a thriving business.

Because he must pay so much more for his pictures, owing to adverse exchange conditions, the European importer is going to be a more particular individual when he buys productions from America. The acid test will be applied to these productions, and the company which finds itself unable to maintain the high standard established by a few of the leading producers will find itself on troubled seas, insofar as its export business is concerned, it seems to me. The old rule of the survival of the fittest will undoubtedly become an important consideration in the film export business, if present conditions are to be accepted as a criterion.

Europe Hungry for Good Films.

Europe is hungry for high grade American productions, and the company which maintains this standard will be least affected by the adverse exchange rates. The British and Continental exhibitors are willing to pay well for American pictures, provided they meet the exacting demands of the present day. The revival of theatre construction work in Great Britain, now well started, and which will be followed shortly by the inauguration of similar work in France and other progressive European nations, will be of great benefit to the American producer of the best motion pictures.

John Cecil Graham.

General foreign representative of Famous Players-Lasky.

Both Great Britain and France have urgent need for at least 1,000 new high-class theatres, and as soon as building and labor conditions for this kind of work are improved work will be begun on many motion picture palaces.

The year 1919 was the most prosperous in the history of the European business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Everywhere Paramount-Artcraft pictures are holding high place in the estimation of the public, and the latter's interest in these productions undoubtedly will serve to make 1920 another record breaking year for the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Film Exports Increasing.

Monthly exports of moving picture films are rapidly approaching the million dollar mark, according to figures compiled by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce. Our exports during December, it is declared, totaled more than $975,000, 3,853,050 linear feet of unexposed film valued at $109,704, and 20,727,450 feet of exposed film, valued at $865,919, being shipped abroad.

Our most important customers for positive films, of course, were England and Canada which together took more than half of the total shipments of exposed films. Our best markets for unexposed film, however, is not England, as would be supposed, but Japan and Spain.

Vitagraph Productions

THERE are many territories still available for VITAGRAPH PICTURES on an exclusive basis for a definite number of productions to be purchased during the year.

IN many other markets in which VITAGRAPH PICTURES are at present being exploited there are reasons (which we cannot now make public) why we are able to consider competitive offers for the productions for the year 1920-1921. In some cases present contracts are about to expire; in others, concessionaires are failing to take a maximum amount of the material offered.

WE are frank in stating that we wish to sell as much material as we possibly can in the market-places of the world from the great variety of productions at present being produced by VITAGRAPH. Inquiries and competitive offers will be kept in strictest confidence by Mr. L. H. Allen in all cases, and acted upon in the interests of all concerned. If interested, please get in touch with Mr. Allen promptly.

FOREIGN MARKETS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION also acts as confidential buying agent for any responsible foreign concern. This work will be transacted under the personal supervision of Mr. L. H. Allen, whose chief concern will always be for the foreign buyer. Inquiries and buying assignments will always be treated in the strictest confidence.

Motion Pictures in China Competing with Vaudeville and Traveling Shows

By F. MARSHALL SANDERSON

Shanghai

NINE years in China are behind F. Marshall Sanderson, now in the picture business in Shanghai, and formerly general manager of China Theatres, Ltd., a concern operating a chain of fourteen picture houses in North China with headquarters in Tientsin. During these nine years he has been close to the practical showmanship field in the Oriental republic, has written advertising and exploited his pictures with a keen insight into Chinese psychology. His house organ, edited by him when he was with China Theatres, and localized for several cities, was of a higher editorial character than any similar publication in this country. Consequently, when Mr. Sanderson speaks of the "exhibiting field" in China, you may rest assured he knows his ground.

THE moving picture industry in China is keeping pace with the trend of the times, and business, on the whole, from the exhibitor's point of view, is satisfactory. In fact, one might go further and say that the "movies" are more than holding their own and constitute a very serious competitor to the many vaudeville and other shows that are presented in the larger ports from time to time by traveling companies.

If Shanghai is any criterion, some of these companies must have been badly hit; attendances have been mighty poor, in spite of the fact that many of the shows have been good in many instances, but the picture shows have suffered very little where the offering has been anything at all attractive.

It is a noticeable feature that most of the screen theatres in China have considerably brightened up of late, and improvements in construction and decoration, to say nothing of added comfort, are now conspicuous features. Shanghai, in particular, is paying more attention to matters of this kind, probably because patrons are demanding the best and are becoming more exacting in their requirements, and while it may be difficult for people in other countries fully to apreciate it, it is a fact, nevertheless that audiences in the Far East are extremely critical in their likes and dislikes of what is presented on the screen, and not less so in the manner of its presentation.

One Projector the Rule.

All this does not infer, however, that China in particular has yet reached anything like a state of perfection. Most theatres, in fact one might say all, are still using only one projection machine, with the inevitable result that between every reel of a feature there is that abominable display of advertising slides crowded in, causing an irritating delay, and oftentimes marring what would be a very good offering indeed. Probably some day the exhibitors here will wake up to the fact that the few dollars obtained as a result of such screen advertising is not commensurate with the effect it has upon an audience, especially when one see night after night the same old slide advertising somebody's corsets or toilet soaps.

Imagine the effect, if you can, of suddenly having your interest shattered by the display of a slide announcing a perfect cure for an ailment not discussed in mixed gatherings or of some other patent dope, and remember that about thirty of such atrocities are inflicted upon you during the course of one evening's entertainment. If the offering is a ten-reel production, then look out for a repetition, and so the game goes on.

Shanghai Expects Good Season.

The winter season here seems to have opened with some promise. The Victoria Theatre, Shanghai, is presenting quite an attractive bill of fare and its advance bookings show that some really good features will be presented at this theatre during the next few months. The Apollo Theatre, Shanghai, has by no means been left behind, and is making a strong bid for popular favor, and some very good productions are booked and the season here promises to surpass anything previously attempted.

China Theatres, Ltd., of Tientsin and Peking, a company that operates the Empire at Tientsin and the Pavilion at Peking, is steadily forging ahead. The company relies more or less on Metro and Paramount productions, and having practically the monopoly of the movie business in North China, and, equipped as it is with handsome theatres it has a somewhat easier task to make good than exhibitors elsewhere in China, where competition is more keen.

But this monopoly is only for a season, and developments are, I understand, well under way, for a very strong competitor to enter this field. The Empire Theatre has a handsome ballroom attached and as this has recently been enlarged and its capacity doubled, it should become the center of social functions and provide an added attraction for theatrical business.

Exchange Rate Hurting Business.

Exchange at its present rate is not helping the amusement business generally. It is a sort of fixed idea with many people that when they pay a dollar Mex. for admission they are paying more than a dollar American, and this is, of course, actually true, and the same applies to sterling. When residents in China can buy £1 for considerably less than $4 mex, and a gold dollar for less than a Mexican dollar, the price of a dolar seat in any theatre seems greatly magnified and the question is therefore presented shall we pay the dollar to go to a movie or save it and buy gold.

This is especially true when such expensive productions as "Intolerance" and "Hearts of the World" are presented. It has recently been my pleasure to organize and present both these pictures throughout China, and in order to make anything like a satisfactory return on the captial invested it was necessary to raise the prices of admission.

Protest at Admission Prices.

Immediately a howl of protest was raised, letters appeared in the local press, exhibitors were denounced as profiteers, and the box office was not a happy place for the manager to show his face. But it has invariably been proved that when the public has been convinced that you have the goods they pay the price, if they do use language a little heated when handing in the dollars for a ticket of admission.

It is a pleasing feature of the "movie" business in China to note the increased patronage of the Chinese themselves. They are the most conservative people in the world and slow to respond to anything new, whether in the shape of amusements or commercial enterprises, but the "movies" have certainly caught on, and theatres specially catering to the Chinese masses and run by the Chinese themselves are springing up in all directions, and it is safe to predict that in a few years a chain of theatres will be formed right through the country; and when this is an accomplished fact a good deal of lucrative business will be handled.

Theatre Business Being Exploited.

New companies are springing up like mushrooms in a night, and syndicates are being formed to exploit this business in China. In Shanghai, at the time of writing, at least a dozen American financiers are located, all eager to survey the field and get a footing, and all equally positive that they are going to set the pace in the movie business here.

Several American concerns, big producers, have sent their representatives here to report on future possibilities, and more than one company has arived for the purpose of establishing studios and making pictures on the spot. It's going to be a slow business and many thousands of dollars will be utterly last before any profitable business will be established.

I am not suggesting it is an impossibility, as there are wiser heads than mine in this movie game, but this I am prepared to state, that several years' residence in this country, combined with an intimate knowledge of many other countries of the world, have forced me to the conclusion that no other country is so beset with difficulties as China, look which way you will, transportation, location, organization, and to a casual visitor, with but few weeks' experience of the country and its people, the position is by no means an easy one.

Some of these promoters have grand schemes up their sleeves, but to imagine that the only thing necessary to establish a show in China is plenty of push and plenty of dollars, with a nice little piece of land located favorably to put up a theatre, is about the maddest dream possible. It sounds very easy, but get to work and see what you are up against in nine out of ten of the big cities of China and you will almost die of a broken heart.

Motion Pictures in China

I was talking to a well-known Chinaman the other day, and in the course of our conversation he casualy mentioned that he had entered the moving picture business. Seeing the surprised look on my face he explained that a broker somewhere in the United States had been sending him circulars from time to time offering great bargains in films, one in particular that was a sure moneymaker.

One Chinese Who Was Imposed Upon.

It was an eight-reel production and the sum required for this was near $4,000. Convinced that he had struck something that would net him a fortune overnight he cabled the cash and the picture arrived. I saw the masterpiece at his invitation, and found it was a very early release by a company that has long since gone out of business, and this poor Chinaman has about as much chance to make money out of it as I have to become President of the United States. No exhibitor will look at it, and the best he can do is to rent it to a few cheap Chinese shows at $10 a run.

The "Get-Rich-Quick" Desire.

Need I say the attitude of my Chinese friend to this rascally broker is nothing short of murder? And yet it is becoming quite a common thing for films to be offered to firms who have no relation or interest whatever in the movie business, and who are led to believe that all that is necessary is to purchase a film for a few thousand dollars and make a fortune out of it in a month. A few have nibbled at the bait and got caught, but I have yet to learn of any single case where money has been so expended and a return made of a satisfactory nature. It is not a savory state of affairs, and certainly a practice that does not add dignity to the motion picture business.

I am writing this on Christmas day, and not for many years have I seen a more festive spirit abroad in China. The theatres are offering extra attractions, but the Christmas season is not good for business out here, strange as it may seem to you. People entertain largely and have the stay-at-home habit, while dancing at the numerous cafes and cabarets are strong competitors. The Victoria is screening "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp." The Apollo is featuring Jackie Saunders in "The Wild Cat," while the Oylmpic is showing "Joan the Woman," with Geraldine Farrar in the leading role. The Isis has "Hearts of the World" and "Intolerance" and is doing a good business. As a Christmas attraction Tientsin is screening Charlie Chaplin in "Sunnyside."

China's New Year, which commences this year on February 19, and generally last four days at least, is a much better time for business.

American Producers Directly Affected by Export Situation, Declares Howells

American Managers Will Have to Shoulder Added Burden to Offset Deficit in Foreign Receipts

THERE is trouble and severe financial loss ahead for American producers, with a back-fire that will hit the pocket book of every exhibitor in the United States, if immediate action is not taken to relieve conditions affecting the world export of American productions, in the opinion of David P. Howells, executive head of David P. Howells, Inc., who has given to Moving Picture World a statement of discoveries he made on his recent tour of Europe.

The revelations he makes may be said to reflect the general attitude of foreign producers, renters and exhibitors toward their prototypes in the United States. Mr. Howells spent six months visiting England, France, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Russia, arranging new contracts for the use of First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions abroad. He met all of the important buyers, producers and exhibitors in these countries, and traveled extensively with leading film agents from the Latin countries and the Orient, who were negotiating for English, French and Italian made pictures.

Predicts Higher Rentals at Home.

"Few, if any, American producers and distributors realize the absolute seriousness of the situation affecting the foreign sale of their outputs," declares Mr. Howells. "The deplorable condition of foreign exchange is primarily responsible, but instead of devising means for countering the havoc and menacing effects of this are great majority of our producers and distributors have ignored the prophetic phases of the merited attempts foreign buyers have made to negotiate here under easier terms and with less stringent financial considerations.

"Unless heed is given to this the American producers and distributors within a year will face the task of making American exhibitors assume the responsibility of paying increased rentals to offset the deficit that will follow when foreign markets are closed to them by the increased production, which even now is a fact in England, France and Italy.

"European producers are fast realizing the opportunity before them. The foreign buyers today are paying as much for rights in one, two or three countries to American productions as it would cost an English, French or Italian producer to make a feature picture, on which production costs could be recovered, with a profit, from distribution only in the country of its origin, thereby leaving to the producer and his distributor the world rights, including South America, the United States, Canada and the Orient, as additional sources of profit.

David P. Howells.

"The great question abroad now is that of the kind of production talent capable of making pictures which will find a market among American exhibitors. The solution is not so much a matter of serious study and investigation as it is one of time. Foreign producers know that the most accurate knowledge of the requirements of the American market is to be had from capable studio attaches in this country. And it is only a question of time before many of them will be offered exceptional opportunities to affiliate with foreign producing companies to provide the technical genius needed to inject more of the American characteristics into European-made film.

No Building for Four Years.

"'Theory' and 'exaggeration' may be charged against me by American producers for this statement, but I will stand pat on developments to evidence the correctness of what my observations abroad demonstrated to me. The average American exporter is imposing upon the foreign buyers today the conditions and terms which prevailed when rates of exchange were normal, and when general economic factors had not been shattered by the impositions of war-time restrictions.

"There has been practically no theatre construction in England for a period of four years. When Great Britain declared war the Government prohibited the use of materials for theatre building. Consequently, the British film market is sadly limited. It is true, although almost unebelievable, that American productions sold in England now for large cash sums cannot be released to exhib-

ROBERTSON-COLE, with its unlimited capital—its prestiges, and its unfailing reputation for square dealing, it is enabled to carry out its policy of presenting to the world market only those productions that come up to its high standard of quality.

That ROBERTSON-COLE has succeeded is best shown in the fact that barely twelve months have elapsed since its first feature was offered to the buyers, but in that short period every country under the sun has received and accepted them at their true value and they have won an enviable reputation of universal merit.

ROBERTSON-COLE with its world-wide organization, its knowledge of conditions and shipping facilities is enabled to offer buyers SERVICE in addition to QUALITY in its dealing with the buyer. Dependable service extends down to the most minute detail and ROBERTSON-COLE has the reputation of never making a promise that it cannot keep.

itors there for not less than eighteen months. And it will be two or more years before the foreign buyers or renters will receive, in rentals, the amounts they are paying out in cash today for current American-made releases. Let the American producer and distributor do a little table-cloth mathematics for a moment, and estimate the tremendous financial outlays which foreign buyers must make to fulfill the obligations of their contracts here. There are very few American film men who, if placed in the position of the buyers abroad, would not take active steps to seek relief in one form or another.

Handicaps of Foreign Buyers.

"And still this country persists in its utter disregard of consequences and of the certainties that will follow if remedial measures are not generally granted. The foreign buyer today looks at a cost statement for film to be shipped to him from this country, and he translates the amount into terms of his own national currency. With the pound sterling down to $3.18, it means that a picture which an American exporter sells to him for $10,00 costs him, in English funds, $13,760 without import duty. And the money he pays out is gone for at least two years, without interest, and without means of realizing an equivalent value excepting through rentals to exhibitors.

"The same example applies to France and to other countries. France has no new theatres, not by governmental restriction, but because of lack of building essentials. The theatre market is just what it was four years ago. Prices for American made productions have increased, and the number of them exported has increased. This makes for an excessive supply applied to a restricted demand.

Seeking American Technical Aid.

"Foreign producers have an exceptional supply of practical screen material. There are hundreds of books, novels and plays available to them. They can overcome any natural handicaps of climatic conditions. Whatever they may lack in technical knowledge of American studio achievements can be obtained by employing our competent directors, cameramen, scenarists, lighting experts and laboratory superintendents. These people are not immune to offers from abroad. At the moment representatives of several European producers are in this country to transplant able departmental workers from our studios and laboratories.

"These producers have abundant financial backing. And they are determined to elevate the domestic market price for technical ability so that they can take advantage of the opportunity for profit and progress which foreign exchange has literally thrust at them. They are keenly alive to the extreme difficulties attending the affairs of foreign buyers of American films, and they propose to alleviate these exigencies by doubling or trebling the sums they now spend per picture, and produce a quality of subject that will compare favorably with American output, and which will have a definite value in our domestic market.

Foreign Producers Have Advantages.

"Few American producers and exporters realize that a film made in England, France or Italy for very little more money than it costs a renter in either of those countries to buy local national rights to one American made film will gross as much revenue in the country of its origin as will the American product. This, then, leaves the foreign producer the world field in which to seek a satisfactory profit.

"I have originated none of these statements. They are but repetitions of things said to me in all seriousness, and with the conviction of an ambition to make them true by foreign producers and buyers whom I met on my trip. From the American point of view the outstanding fact is that an utter disregard of conditions in the markets to which they look for from 20 to 40 per cent. of their revenue per picture is slowly forcing the doors to those markets to close as the number of English, French or Italian made productions increase in quality and quantity and provide, on far more reasonable terms, and with greater fields for profit, the amount of footage necessary to the maintenance of foreign theatres.

"So far as the future of David P. Howells, Inc., is concerned, I do not propose to share the fate of other American exporters of American films. I have granted modifications of contractual conditions to help lighten the burden of the buyer, and I intend to pursue a similar policy until international conditions again are normal, and my foreign customers no longer need feel the necessity for speeding home production to save them from the menac of overinvestment at excessive rates of exchange.

"An identical concession will have to be granted by others, or the American exhibitor soon will find our producers and distributors seeking 20, 30 and 40 per cent. increases in rentals with the cry that 'we have lost our foreign market and we've got to get the money somewhere, and you are our only alternative.'"

Signs of the Times Indicate That This Is the Era of Film Importing

By LOUIS AUERBACH

President Export and Import Company

EXPORT is a most highly specialized phase of the film business as conducted today. Its most intensive development in the United States has been within the past two to three years. Prior to that time all those who undertook as their tasks the exploitation of American films by placing them in profitable contact with foreign releasing and distributing agencies, were looked upon as idealists. They were considered to be men who somehow missed the big opportunities of the motion picture field and were condemned to dabble in a small and almost unremunerative end of the business.

Among these so-called "idealists" was one Ben Blumenthal, today popularly known throughout the trade on both sides of the Atlantic and Pacific—who then had that same foresight and grasp of the future as he possesses today. Nor was he an "idealist," as times have since verified.

Blumenthal Among Pioneers.

It is now five years since Ben Blumenthal and the writer, having acquired the Metro productions by purchase, took their ideas and arguments to the Continent. We then persuaded the nations that comprise Central Europe that instead of the sporadic buying of American made film, a little from this producer, a little from that one, that there was a better way.

Their total purchases from the North American studios did not exceed 5 per cent., one-fifth were new productions. The balance was second hand films of doubtful authenticity and in most cases irrepresentative of the development in quality that the studios in California and the East were achieving.

It is fair to say that the European markets then either knew nothing about American films or looked upon them with disfavor. Yet Mr. Blumenthal had a genuine idea and succeeded in convincing the territories mentioned that Yankee pictures were good, could be handled profitably, providing current releasing methods were to be "scrapped" or so adapted as to popularize a series of films of even quality by advertising them under their "brand" name.

Putting American Pictures "Over."

So it happened that France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Denmark, Austria, Hungary and European Russia got their initial taste of first fifty-two Metros and later fifty-two World Film productions per year. This taste more than broke the ice and then the bitter conflict that raged throughout the whole of Europe proved psychological for American productions by eliminating competition from France, Italy, England, Germany and even neutral Spain and Scandinavia.

By 1917 the supremacy of the American film was world-acknowledged. By 1918 buyers from every exhibiting territory of the globe had representatives in New York buying Uncle Sam's output for their native screens.

In the meantime the larger manufacturers had revised their estimates on the matter of export. Their foreign revenues had greatly increased their scope of activity.

Yankee Circulation World Wide.

Thus we see the Yankee film production registering practically one hundred per cent. sales and distribution efficiency throughout the world today. But there are new and mighty factors now that challenge the lofty position of our output.

Denmark has returned to picture making since the war and its embargoes and priority lists are over. Sweden shook off the blighting effects very quickly and has also turned out some productions of present day standards, quite as Germany has.

Italy soon restored her lighting equipment, sets and properties to her studios after the armistice permitted the removal of the machinery and tools which had been installed to turn out aeroplanes.

Competition Grows Stiffer.

France is again on the job. England is not lagging; and Latin America, too, has the fever. Nor have these countries been oblivious to the strides in quality that mark the issues from the studios of California and Manhattan.

We will not refer to the incursions into the round percentage of American supremacy to be made by the better class of foreign made production in the film buying markets exterior to the United States and Canada. We allow that foreign output will drive down the dominating position of Yankee photoplays, but not essay figures or percentages at best always open to dispute because mere conjectures.

Spent Fifty Weeks Abroad.

Nor will we make more than this cursory reference to the damaging consequences of the unprecedented slump in the rate of exchange so stimulating to foreign manufacture. Our limited buying of productions recently will confirm that the Export and Import Film Company correctly anticipated the present period of inactivity.

Ben Blumenthal has seen beyond these turns in the road. While others are worrying and fretting with export from the U. S. A. he has turned his attentions to import into the U. S. A. In the last twelve months the president of our company has spent only two weeks in New York; the remaining fifty weeks having been passed in London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiana, Barcelona and Rome.

Importing Foreign Productions.

Some months ago we received a shipment of productions from Scandinavia that rank high in international film appeal. One of these productions in particular stands up with any American-made spectacle.

Only lately are we assured a shipment of production Blumenthal is sending from Germany. What is said of the Scandinavian series in the foregoing paragraph we can bestow upon these German photoplays. It is super-productions such as these that only interest Ben Blumenthal.

He long since has seen the handwriting on the wall. Good foreign made films can't be kept from distribution throughout this country. Logic demands this evolution and North American audiences are not only hetergeneous of nativity but are also keenly alive to their interest in the lives of the rest of the populations of this planet.

Indeed, the era of import is dawning.

Great Undeveloped Territory Awaits Enterprise of American Picture Men

By EMIL E. SHAUER,

Assistant Treasurer and in Charge of the Foreign Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

NO greater industrial romance can be found in American business life today than that of the whirlwind development of the motion picture as the fifth greatest industry. Within a period of five years the business of producing and exhibiting motion pictures developed from an infant of more or less uncertain possibilities to the rank of a billion dollar industry. Today we see in the motion picture screen the most powerful instrument for molding public opinion to be found in American business life. It has become such an intimate, such a vital part of the every-day life of the nation's millions, that the impairment of its efficiency or future development would be catalogued as a public calamity.

All of this is more or less preliminary to the world position occupied by the American motion picture industry today. Another five years, it seems to me, will bring about a period of expansion in our export trade which will duplicate the enormous growth of the industry at home. American motion pictures have demonstrated their superiority against the keenest sort of competition from the other producing nations of the world, having long since attained world leadership. Despite this success, however, vast fields are awaiting development, and it is this period of expansion and development that we have before us today.

Wide Fields Opening Up.

Central Europe, which has been closed to American films for more than five years; Russia, which some day may emerge from its present turmoil; Africa, with its vast undeveloped territory; the Orient, practically virgin territory, and, coming nearer home, Central and South America, present an inviting field which will command the earnest endeavors and dreams of the Alexanders of the American film world for years to come.

There is room in all these territories and some day there will be need of thousands of high grade motion picture theatres for the entertainment of the amusement hungry millions who have not been fed upon the motion picture diet made available to the people of America, England and the more fortunate nations of the world. To capture their share of this potential business the American producer will have to enter into sharp competition with the film producers and exporters of England, France, Italy, Scandinavia and Germany, who are beginning to get on their feet again after the ravages of the world war.

Emil E. Shauer.

Assistant treasurer and in charge of Famous Players-Lasky's foreign department.

Heavy Increase in Exports.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation began its preparation for the development of its foreign business long before the end of the war, in conformity with its usual policy of anticipating coming events. Although the war laid a heavy hand upon the film export business, the corporation's income from foreign sales increased approximately 300 per cent. in three years' time. The year 1919 was the most prosperous twelve months in the history of the corporation, the foreign business showing an increase of nearly 100 per cent. over the preceding year.

On the threshold of 1920 the exchange problem is the most important issue confronting the foreign film business. There is no question but that the terrific slump in the buying power of European money is having its adverse effect upon the exportation of film.

Foreign Exchange Vital Factor.

The foreign buyer, for instance, must pay from 200 to 400 per cent. more for his film today than he did before the war. This is due in a measure to the increase in the cost of producing film and to the heavy drop in the value of the franc. It is apparent, therefore, that his buying power has decreased in proportion to the increase in the cost of films. This condition is true of practically every European country, varying in the degree in which the value of the country's money has slumped in the world exchange markets.

As baffling as the exchange situation is today there is every reason to believe the financial leaders of the world will shortly work out some solution which will bring to bear a corrective and helpful influence. The tried and tested recuperative powers of such nations as Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, etc., will not fail them in the present crisis. As a result, the film industry can look forward to the future with every confidence that time will remedy the present situation.

Prospects Good for Business Abroad.

The prospects for the foreign business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were never better. Contracts signed to date and those in the process of being worked out give every indication that the year 1920 will be a record breaker in the foreign field. Reports received from our various offices and from the agencies with which we are doing business indicate a greatly increased demand for Paramount-Artcraft productions, which will be reflected in the year's income from foreign sales.

The people of the world are hungry for high grade motion pictures, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is constantly enlarging its producing and distributing units to care for this increased demand. By far the most important event of the year, from a production standpoint, will be the inauguration of producing activities in the London studios of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., the three million dollar corporation formed last year for the production of Paramount-Artcraft pictures in Great Britain and Continental Europe.

Delays caused by the difficulty of obtaining labor and materials have postponed the official opening of the studios for months, but I have been informed by Milton E. Hoffman, the production department's representative abroad, that work will be begun on the first picture early this year. The inauguration of production work abroad will be of vast importance in the future development of the foreign business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The principal aim will be to produce pictures which will have an international flavor and which will cater to kindred tastes for amusement in all corners of the world.

While American technical men and other experts were taken abroad last year to open the new studio in London, it is the plan of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., to develop and use British talent wherever possible. American methods and improvements will be utilized, but within a short time they will be carried out by experts more closely in touch with British and European tastes in the film world.

8,000 Houses in Central Europe.

Plans now under consideration call for great expansion in the worldwide distributing activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Just as soon as the ban on the importation of film into Germany is removed the Danish-American Film Company, of Copenhagen, will begin the work of carrying out its contract for the distribution of Paramount-Artcraft productions in Central Europe. It is expected that this contract will become operative sometime during the year. Approximately 8,000 motion picture theatres are included in this huge territory, which is ripe for the fullest possible exploitation of American pictures.

Arrangements are being perfected here and abroad for the opening of Asia Minor, India and other territories during the coming months. Inquiries now on hand indicate a record breaking demand from the Continent.

Demand Heavy for New Theatres.

The year 1920 will undoubtedly witness a revival in the construction of motion picture houses in Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Spain and other countries, where new building has been restricted for more than five years. Great Britain alone has urgent need for 1,000 new theatres, and the same is true of France. Reports from Germany indicate the resumption of theatre building operations in that territory, and the Scandinavian countries are already turning their attention to the matter of relieving the world-wide shortage of theatres for the presentation of high-grade motion pictures.

With thousands of new theatres required to supply the demand for motion picture entertainment, there seems to be no doubt but that the year 1920 will be by far the most prosperous in the history of the industry. Much history will be made in the export field in the coming months, and I feel certain that the American exporter will be equal to the emergencies that may confront him.

Rothacker Plans to Photograph Big South American Expositions

THE Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago has just been appointed the official cinematographer of the exposition of United States manufacturers in Buenos Aires, which will be held next November. American manufacturers will not be content with merely exhibiting their products at this exposition, as they have made arrangements to supplement their display with the screening of films showing where and how their products have been made. Some American firms will use for this purpose films which the Rothacked Company has made for them in the past, while quite a number will have new pictures produced for the occasion.

Mr. Rothacker will send skilled cameramen to picture all the important sights at the Buenos Aires exposition, and to attend the exposition to be held in Rio de Janeiro, in the spring of 1921. These pictures will not only serve to show Americans at home what Uncle Sam's commercial representatives are accomplishing in South America, but they will also be shown in other important South American cities.

To Have United States Week.

It has been planned that American manufacturers attending the expositions will divide forces on their way home, one group returning by the Pacific Coast and the other by the Atlantic. It has also been planned to observe a United States week in each of the other chief cities of South America, where, by showing pictures of the exhibits at Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires, those expositions can be extended to all of them.

"American manufacturers are awakening to the possibilities of using motion pictures to open the way for the United States merchant marine," says Mr. Rothacker. "British manufacturers this spring are starting a collection of industrial pictures on a tour of the world. These pictures will show in other lands just what England's industries have to offer.

"The decisive battle for the South American trade probably will be fought within the next two years—maybe sooner. The year 1922 will unquestionably see some nation the acknowledged victor in that sector of the 'war after the war.' The leading manuacturers of this country are determined that America shall be the victor. The right kind of industrial film can accomplish a great deal toward turning the decision in Uncle Sam's favor. The Rothacker Company is at the disposal of American manfacturer.

British Try Worldwide Advertising of Home Products by Use of Screen

MOVING picture advertising of British products is soon to be undertaken in all parts of the world. Pictures showing the production of many English commodities, taken by the Moving Picture Exhibition of British Industries, Ltd., a concern organized in 1914, will shortly be sent out, accompanied by representatives who will explain the pictures to audiences in various countries.

Organized just before the outbreak of the war, that conflict made impossible the carrying out the scheme for showing the world how British industries manufactured goods and it has only recently been possible to resume the work.

The scope of the project is most complete, according to reports just received by the Department of Commerce at Washington, D. C., from London. While its ultimate purpose is to widen the markets for British products throughout the world, it will put distant buyers in direct touch with English manufacturers of those products which they most need. Foreign buyers will be able personally to see the production of British goods of all kinds—textiles, metal ware, etc.

Three Routes for Films.

Accompanying the pictures will be explanatory titles in four languages, English, French, Spanish and Portuguese, and the films will be explained by representatives who are competent linguists in the native language of the country in which they are being shown.

For the first tour the world will be divided into three sections. One set of films will go to Latin America, another to South Africa, Australia and the Far East, and the third to Western Europe, Canada, and the United States. During the next year the films will be shown in ninety-seven of the world's leading cities.

The first films to be put out, it is declared, do not represent the best of the motion picture photographer's art. Inasmuch as the different manufacturers who combined to defray the expenses of production and the showing of the films throughout the world naturally want to have as much space as possible given them on the film, there is considerable duplication of processes, which becomes rather tiresome.

Show Sheffield Industries.

Also, the interior lighting of many of the plants was never intended for the making of pictures, while so closely is the process of manufacturing followed that the audience is likely to lose interest. To care for this last defect, it has been suggested that some attempt be made in future films to show something of the historical development of the industry being depicted.

The first films are those showing the cutlery and steel industries of Sheffield. In the near future pictures will be taken to show the textile and other industries of Birmingham, Glasgow, London and Liverpool.

Fine Market for Serious and Comic Subjects in China's Vast Interior

Major St. P. Rudiger de Rodynko has been a resident of China and of other countries of the Far East for a considerable number of years and is known as author of several books on eastern conditions. He is an ethnograph and specialist on characteristics of various races and nations, a painter of some note and masters twelve languages. He is about to enter the service of American Film producing concerns in the capacity of adviser on natural touch and local color.

By ST. P. RUDIGER de RODYNKO
Major, Chinese Military Forces, Retired
Late Attaché of the Governor of Shanghai

HAVING left China but recently, after several years' residence at Shanghai and other places I wonder why China and the Far East have not been exploited by American film producers to a greater extent.

I am not merely dealing with treaty ports, with a large foreign population like Peking, Shanghai, Canton, Tientsin, etc., but with the interior of China with its seething hundreds of million of inhabitants.

There are, for instance, at Shanghai about six movie theatres, owned by foreigners, which cater both to foreigners and Chinese; in addition there is a considerable number of exclusively Chinese movie shows, intended for the poorer classes of the natives. These establishments are receiving their supplies of films mostly from the Pathe Exchange at Shanghai, and some exporters and importers who carry films as a side line. Films of American, British, French, Italian, Danish, German and Japanese prominence were shown, serious five-reelers as well as slap-stick comedies. The unanimous statement of the movie owners is that they were "doing fine."

Fine Market in Interior.

The interior of China is a splendid market for films, comical ones as well as serious ones, on acount of the fact that the percentage of movie fans among the Chinese is far greater than among white people—with the exception of Latin nations perhaps. This important fact eliminates preliminary and preparatory work. There should not be any serious difficulties in establishing exchanges throughout the interior of China. Many cities and towns possess electrc lighting plants to supply electric current for the projectors, and in the absence of such, acetylene could and has been used to great advantage in some instances known to the writer.

Japanese Meet Strong Opposition.

There are, however, two items of importance: (1) Japanese competition, (2) Translation of titles.

The Japanese, in the course of the last five years or so, have made various attempts to swamp China with their goods, including films, of course. Their success, however, is small in comparison, for the Chinese have a sound and very justified hatred for the Japanese and everything pertaining to Japan, which even the low prices of Japanese goods cannot overcome—proofs are the numerous boycotts of Japanese goods.

Concerning Title Translations.

The second difficulty, the translating of titles, is almost ludicrous in its smallness. However, during six years I had only twice an opportunity to see pictures whose producers were far-sighted enough to have the titles translated into other languages, and it is typical that those pictures were of German and Japanese origin, respectively. In the German pictures the titles were translated into English, Chinese, Hindostani and Spanish, beside German; while the Japanese product explained the scenes in Japanese, Chinese, Malay (in arabic characters) and English.

Major St. P. Rudiger de Rodynko.
Former aide of Governor of Shanghai.

There is no doubt that, were it not for the war, the Germans would have gained a pretty good place in the movie market in China, for, in addition to the ability to understand the picture, the Oreintals and especially the Chinese, are exceedingly proud of their race and show great appreciation for any endeavor of foreigners to attempt to use the language of the Oriental.

It is a deplorable fact that American producers neglect to go to the trouble of such a small courtesy toward foreign markets which could be exploited to a tremendous extent.

It is important to mention that the Chinese, contrary to the general opinion, are possessed of a brilliant sense of humor and of appreciation of histrionic art, whether on the screen or on the stage. This mistake is caused by the reserved habits of the Chinese, who reveal their feelings very rarely toward foreigners, fearing ridicule.

Chinese Are Born Actors.

I have lived with and among Chinese and am in a position to know, for I have seen. It is not only slap-stick stuff the Chinese appreciates, but serious pictures as well. The Chinese is a born actor and has in the average a greater understanding for art than the white man, irrespective of whether the art is foreign or native.

Chinese actors "register" expressions just as well as their American colleagues and are very studious when it comes to imitate popular American artists. I remember when a well-known Chinese actor at Shanghai, W. T. Pang, of the Sin Wo Tai Theatre, scored a great success by an extremely clever imitation of Charlie Chaplin.

I hope that the few remarks I have made on China will convince American producers of the excellent and prepared market for their pictures which is waiting for them in the Far East, and that the small difficulties, which are almost ridiculous to mention will be overcome by them in the near future. The Chinese Government, modern and progressive as it is, would be only too willing to extend a helping hand to any enterprising American who would take up the mission of making America and its products and its art still more popular in China. It is an undeniable fact that the Chinese have a "warm spot" in their hearts for America, which even the events of the recent war and foreign propaganda cannot eliminate, and it is to be hoped that American film producers will take advantage of this splendid opportunity.

Exchange of Films Will Improve British-American Understanding

COL. H. A. BROWNE, chairman of the Walturdaw Company, Ltd., London, the long established English supply house for many years distributors of Power's Projectors in the United Kingdom, is in New York and has furnished information about trade and general conditions in his country, which we believe will be of great interest to those connected with the American film industry. Colonel Browne has been chairman of the Walturdaw Company, Ltd., since 1910, and as this position corresponds with the presidency of an American corporation his comments are proportionately authoritative.

Walturdaw Company, Ltd., has been in business for over twenty-two years. This firm was the pioneer in many important developments of the film industry.

Colonel Browne spoke of the natural bond of brotherhood that existed between the two great English-speaking nations. He expressed the hope that strong commercial relations might be established which would be of lasting benefit to both nations, without doing injustice to any of the other great countries.

The Exchange Stumbling Block.

Just at the present time the depreciation in exchange is seriously interfering with export trade, and if not soon controlled may temporarily halt purchases of all American goods except those which were vitally necessary. Colonel Browne referred to the possibility of commercial relations between the United States and European countries becoming a matter of actual barter.

Put in an American way this would be a matter of swapping goods for goods, but such a condition could not last long if the various countries interested use energetic measures to correct the present unfortunate conditions.

Regarding the sale of American films in England, Col. Browne says that the market is glutted at the present time. He then explained the reasons for this condition.

Theatre Building at a Standstill.

No new cinemas have been built for over five years and none can be built for two years more, as they are classified as "luxury buildings." The shortage of homes is worse in England than in the United States, and in a practical effort to overcome this serious condition all construction not regarded as vitally important is forbidden by law until the necessary number of dwellings have been erected.

There are less than four thousand cinemas in England as against something like sixteen thousand in the United States. Every week there are between twenty-five and thirty films released in England comprising films made in England, Italy, France, Denmark and the United States.

It is obvious that all these productions cannot prove profitable under the circumstances. Good films are successful and bring fair prices, but of course competition is very keen.

Colonel Browne said: "Although no new cinemas are being constructed, one of my objects in coming to the United States is to arrange for an increased supply of projectors. The order I have placed is, I believe, one of the largest ever given to a manufacturer of projectors.

Projection Machines War-Worn.

"Power's machines have a splendid reputation in England. I believe I am safe in stating that fifty per cent. of the cinemas in the United Kingdom have installed Power's machines.

"During the war, cinemas were, of course, very short of experienced help. Women and every variety of mechanically incompetent operators were employed and it is easy to realize the machines received very hard usage.

"The popularity of films has increased in England four or five hundred per cent. during the past few years. The houses now operating will have to replace much of their equipment.

"As in America, motion pictures are no longer looked upon as a cheap diversion for the masses and are patronized by members of the royal family and leaders in every branch of the social and industrial world in England.

An Eleven Year Association.

"Walturdaw Company, Ltd., has had eleven years of uninterrupted and pleasant relations with the Nicholas Power Company, and I am inclined to believe this is something of a record in the film industry.

"During the war Power's machines were used by the British Army and Navy, the Air Force, the Y. M. C. A., and Red Cross.

"We are the oldest and largest cinema supply house in England and we look upon our connection with the Nicholas Power Company with great satisfaction. It is just this kind of confidence and loyal business relations that can be established in England at the present time, and American and British firms who are able to overcome the existing abnormal conditions will have won a mutual good will that money cannot purchase when the financial ship again rides on an even keel.

Commends English Films.

"In regard to English films they are as yet perhaps technically inferior to American films, but possess certain natural qualities of their own, and some day I hope to see them more popular in the United States. The film industry in England was shut down during the period of the war, and in those four years American films have made such strides that they undoubtedly have captured the film market.

"Apart from their technical merit American films are extremely popular in England because they so frequently depict scenes which have a life and vigor that make a strong appeal to English people, especially of the younger generation. In view of the fact, however, that English romances have been so popular in the United States, it seems to me that English plays enacted in their natural surroundings possess an atmosphere which cannot be duplicated by mere technique or stage craft.

Suggests Film Reciprocity.

"If there is any way that good English films can be made popular in the United States, I think it will serve to make your people as well acquainted with English life as Englishmen are with American scenes. All this will help to cement the friendly relations between the two nations.

"In addition to this, such reciprocal arrangements are a good thing for the trade of the two countries. They serve to stabilize exchange and prevent the repetition of the financial crisis such as now exists.

"The Walturdaw Company, Ltd., some year and a half ago entered into contractive relations with one of your youngest and most progressive film organizations, the First National Exhibitors circuit. The result of this alliance will be an increased popularity of the artists and directors whose films are distributed by the First National organization."

Why Comparisons Are Unjust.

In concluding his statement Colonel Browne said: "American film manufacturers must remember that it was impossible, owing to post-bellum restrictions and to conditions arising out of the war, for the English exhibitor to keep pace with his American cousins in the matter of increasing the prices paid for film hire. Because a film in the United States passed a million dollars, it would not gross a proportionate amount in the British Isles.

"Generally speaking, English films made by such well known firms as Broadwest, Hepworth and Samuelson would command much higher rentals than American films. I make this statement merely to illustrate the point that as a rule home-made films are of much greater relative value in the country of their origin, so that films, unlike prophets, have honor in their own country."

Colonel Browne will be in the United States for some time. He will shortly leave for a trip to the Coast.

Foreign Market Buyer Must Have International Perspective of Values

By GUS SCHLESINGER

Manager, Department of Foreign Sales
Inter-Ocean Film Corporation

I HAVE been asked by the Moving Picture World to express my views on the buying and marketing of motion pictures in foreign marts. I do not propose to write extensively on these two subjects in their relation to the foreign market from the point of vantage of one who has studied the business from an unbiased point of view. By the very nature of my connection with the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation I am better qualified to talk primarily of the business of buying and selling as conducted under Inter-Ocean auspices, and consequently shall devote most of my attention to this angle.

Five years ago the foreign market was a thing unknown and exploited. At that time an American producer was content to dispose of his foreign rights for an amount of money close to what would now be regarded as negligible. He looked upon the returns which a production brought in the foreign markets as that much money found. Today, however, conditions have changed. When a producer makes a production he first of all sleects a story possessing an international theme, and then counts upon the returns that the production will bring in foreign territories as an important item in the cost.

Two Controlling Factors.

The history of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is verily a history of the export branch of the motion picture business. From the time of my association with this organization back in 1915, when the company occupied an insignificant suite of offices in the Chandler Building, at 220 West Forty-second street, until the present day, when it has been found necessary to use an entire five-story building. Inter-Ocean has more than kept pace with the progressive strides which the foreign market has taken and maintained.

From my experience I have found that there are two vital factors which one must consider in purchasing the product of an American film manufacturer for distribution in foreign territories. He must know what films to buy, and at what price to buy. This may look very simple to one not familiarly associated with the business, but a close and careful analysis will convince one of the magnitude of the task.

Must Have International Perspective.

In order successfully to know what motion pictures to purchase for foreign territorial sales, one must of necessity appreciate the fine technical qualities of a motion picture as well as possess what I would term an "international perspective" of motion picture values. This knowledge is only obtained after years of diligent labor in foreign fields and personal contact with foreign buyers. The knowledge of the market you are buying in and the market you are buying for must be at your finger tips, accessible at any moment.

Ever since the formation of the firm of Winik & Brock, the early counterpart of the present Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, the policy of our company has been to satisfy the exporter and satisfy his pocketbook. In our business the two go hand in hand, and I am glad to say that we are unalterably opposed to making a profit where we cannot make a friend.

Customer Never Forgets "Bloomer."

The foreign customer never forgets a "bloomer." The average American salesman of foreign rights (attached to a responsible concern) is conscientious in his advice to customers, both because it is a safe business rule and because the other course spells loss of prestige. And its odd how quickly news of a "bad buy" gets around.

Gus Schlesinger.
"Exporter must keenly study likes and dislikes of his customers."

As manager of the department of foreign film sales for Inter-Ocean I have striven to show in my dealings that we are more than a seller of American films for the world market. We aim to act as the confidential and honest advisor of our clients on the suitableness of American film productions, and the fact that we are still doing business with our oldest customers shows that we have not only preached this doctrine but have successfully carried it out in practice.

Heretofore, foreign buyers visiting New York lost most valuable time through lack of familiarity of our language and customs, methods of doing business and facilities for short cuts known to Americans only. At Inter-Ocean Building, however, the foreign buyer will find himself conducting his business with the same ease as if he were in his native country. A place is set aside for his exclusive use during his stay in America, and to that desk will be harnessed the co-operation of Inter-Ocean's force of experts.

Conveniences for Visitors.

We have at our building competent translators and interpreters who are able to speak the language of every foreign buyer. And, besides, we have what is regarded as one of the most thoroughly equipped projection rooms in the world—all at the visiting buyer's disposal. We realize that great expense attached to the maintenance of such a service gratis to the foreign buyer, but we are also appreciative of the reward it brings in good-will and sales.

In London, where Inter-Ocean Film Corporation occupies the entire building at 164 Wardour street, the same service that one can find at Inter-Ocean Building, New York, is evident there. The London offices were established a few years ago, and its growth under President Paul H. Cromelin's personal supervision has been nothing short of sensational.

In London our offices handle the product of Inter-Ocean for Great Britain and her colonial possessions. Horace G. Harper, who is at present in London will doubtless be in full charge of the London offices. Mr. Harper is a film man of broad experience.

Jean Rosen, Paris representative of Inter-Ocean, is a man well-versed with the European film market. His handling of our French business has been a credit to the film business as well as a credit to us.

Ricardo Castro, representative of Inter-Ocean in Central America, is another member of our sales staff who we are proud to have associated with us.

Foreign Buyers Want the Best Pictures Even as Americans, Says Robertson-Cole

ROBERTSON-COLE productions are now playing in every country in the world today. This announcement was made by the foreign department of Robertson-Cole, after statistics were compiled showing the export of films during the year 1919. Plans are being made to double the output of Robertson-Cole films in foreign lands during the present year. A staff of specially trained advertising writers versed in the conditions of the various countries are now planning an advertising and exploitation campaign.

Robertson-Cole has inaugurated a policy by which foreign buyers of merit who handle its films will continue to do so indefinitely and that the home office will not attempt to arrange exchanges outside of the United States.

The special campaign has been arranged for Japan, India, Dutch East Indies, Australia, Mexico, Africa, Spain,

Germany, Argentina, West Indies, Scandinavia, France, Chile, Italy and Brazil. The various trade journals dealing with foreign purchases will be used in advertising exploitation and publicity. It is the aim to have the trade-mark as well known as any manufacturer sending the necessities of life to various parts of the world.

"In spite of the rush for American productions," said the head of Robertson-Cole's export department, "buyers for foreign countries are indeed particular as to the quality of productions sent broadcast. Prior to the war foreign motion picture fans were educated to accept any kind of film as long as it was amusing. Now they have turned with the tide and, like Americans, want only the best.

"The day of the bunk picture shipped to other lands is over. Those who are in charge of purchasing film for European countries demand that they receive the same calibre of productions as are given to America. This is conclusive proof that the motion picture world has been revolutionized and that only the best will be accepted in any country.

"Robertson-Cole in selling its features for other lands have followed out in detail the American policy of the concern; close exhibitor-producer combination. To do this it was necessary to give the foreign exhibitor as many hints and aids as we have been giving to the local exhibitor.

Cannibals Astounded as Peerless Flashes on Martin Johnson Films

GIVING cannibals of the South Seas a thrill surpassing that of "Missionary a la King" has been the pleasant work pursued by Martin Johnson during his present sojourn in the islands of the Southern Pacific.

When Mr. Johnson and his wife left New York last summer to film the savages of Malekula, they promised to show to Chief Nagapate and his wild men the pictures they had taken of him two years previous.

With the aid of the Pathescope Peerless projector Mr. Johnson was able to fulfill his promise. The following letter from Mr. Johnson to Willard B. Cook, president of the Pathescope Company, describes his experiences in showing the savages to the wild men themselves. The letter is a fine tribute to the field work of the Peerless and is an entertaining account of Mr. Johnson's work in filming his next picture, to be called "Wild Men of Malekula."

The letter, written from Sydney, N. S. W., is as follows:

We have been six months among the most savage people on earth, among cannibals and head hunters, and the greatest pleasure we have had was the nights we would hear the exclamations of surprise and wonder as the savages saw the moving pictures. They went wild when I showed them moving pictures of themselves that I had made two years ago.

I used radium flares and made movies at night of the savages looking at themselves on the screen—and the negative has developed up fine.

Movies of the "Shows."

We first landed at Malekula—where the savages (and Chief Nagapate in particular) tried to hold us two years ago. Under an armed guard we showed them the pictures on the beach and the next day I was treated like royalty. To think that anyone could make devil-devil magic and make their own faces move about on a white screen was too much for their simple natures and it opened Malekula for me.

I was much in demand, and through the story having traveled from tribe to tribe in the mountains I was sent for and offered safety in the way of whole armies of savages. Nagapate himself found great pride in guiding us—and probably behind our backs he would take credit for bringing us!

For months we traveled from tribe to tribe—just Mrs. Johnson and myself—and the Peerless opened the way for us. It would have done you good to see it and the generator going over mountains and into valleys, on the backs of savages, and at night to have seen hundreds of cannibals squatting around the devil-devil grounds, watching the wonderful things they never dreamed of before. Many a time the trees and houses would be full of human heads—dried—all about us.

We turned the handles of the generating outfit so much they both twisted off (they should be slightly heavier), and we made new ones of hard wood.

The savages liked a five-hundred foot piece of Armistice Day in New York City better than any of the films. It shows hundreds of thousands of people on the streets. These cannibals never dreamed that there were so many people on earth. They thought the earth revolved around Malekula up to this time.

We arrived here in Sydney several days ago and now I am busy printing positives of the finest films I have ever made. They are going to create a big sensation when shown. I think I will name them "Wild Men of Malekula."

I have the Peerless set up here in the house, and will do all my cutting and assembling on it. Another remarkable thing about the Peerless and the generator is that when we showed among the cannibals away up in the mountains the picture was as clear and sharp as any I have ever seen in a picture show, of course slightly smaller, but the light was perfect and the picture showed as clear and steady as any you ever saw.

To Go Up Fly River.

The Peerless will be a part of every expedition I make—my next trip is among the tree dwellers, six hundred miles up the Fly River in New Guinea.

Sincerely yours,
MARTIN JOHNSON.

Will send you photographs of the Peerless in use among the savages. I feel that I owe the Peerless credit for most of the fine pictures I have made on this expedition. As I said before, it opened a safe road to savage tribes, which I never could have reached otherwise. M. J.

Foto Player and Robert Morton Organs Amaze the Critical Foreign Visitors

CONSISTENT with the demand for American merchandise, the American Photo Player Company is receiving inquiries for the Fotoplayer and Robert-Morton Orchestral Organs, not only from foreign exhibitors, but is also booking orders over the seven seas.

Previous to the recent war Australasia was a very fruitful territory for Fotoplayer products, the Pianola Company, Ltd., of Australia having represented the American Photo Player Company for a number of years, and was successful in distributing the Fotoplayer in both the closed and open air theatres; the material and construction of the instrument being of such character as to withstand severe climatic conditions everywhere.

During the period of the war South America, unaffected by actual hostilities, enjoyed a continuation of moving picture prosperity and this particular territory made energetic inquiries for Photo Player products.

Due to their artistic temperament, it is quite natural that the Latin lands would demand better music. The natural tendencies and musical temperament of these people have always been characteristic of the best in the arts.

Constantly Entertaining Delegates.

Following the cessation of European hostilities, exhibitors from the Scandinavian peninsula and the British Isles have written and sent over representatives to investigate the moving picture industry, particularly the popularity of the organ not only because of the solo possibilities, but the ability of this instrument in augmenting an orchestra. The American Photo Player Company headquarters are constantly entertaining delegates, not only from these countries, but the far East, who are touring the continent and stop off at headquarters to listen to a demonstration or to be shown actual installations of the Fotoplayer and Robert-Morton organs.

It is the policy of the Photo Player Company to design the instrument for installations particularly adapted to the characteristic tonal requirements of the various countries to which the organs are sent, and the number of specifications for these various instruments has already required a special assistant for the foreign department.

It is particularly noticeable that European countries demand a more refined quality of voicing than is characteristic of this country, which is possibly due to their greater knowledge of classical music and more general popularity of this subject among the masses.

European Is Amazed.

The European, however, is amazed at the ingenuity displayed by the American manufacturer, the popularity of the double touch system, the remarkable, swift shutter action and the absolute control of a wealth of orchestral stops, has opened the eyes of not only exhibitors but foreign organists who have investigated modern pipe organs. The Robert-Morton type of organ, from a point of view of power and versatility, is a near approach to the reproduction of a symphony orchestra and has already achieved a remarkable recognition from the motion picture industry in foreign fields.

English, French and Italian Films Will Reduce American Exportation

By A. GEORGE SMITH

Foreign Representative Goldwyn

TODAY the export position is one of the most interesting features of the motion picture business. There are now so many different angles that it is increasingly difficult to diagnose the situation or forecast the future.

Since the armistice the trade papers have discussed at great length the relative positions of London and New York as centers for the export trade, but those who have predicted that London will again become the leading export center of the world overlook the altered conditions in New York, brought about directly as a result of the war.

Prior to and during the early period of the war the export of pictures was mainly conducted through London. American producing firms either had branches or agencies in London, and the custom was that as soon as possible after the necessary prints had been made for use in the United States the negative was dispatched to the London office. Returns on the sale of rights from that center were in the majority of instances very small compared with returns received from the same territory during the last three years. They did not reckon on foreign sales returning a fixed proportion of negative costs as they do today.

Advance the Date of Foreign Showings.

In addition the custom of release for foreign countries is becoming reversed, so that instead of foreign countries getting a picture twelve months after its showing in the United States it is now not unusual to have a picture exhibited abroad before it has been released in this country.

When the shipping question became acute and foreign buyers not only found difficulty themselves in getting to England, but even in shipping the goods they bought, they were compelled to come to New York to purchase their requirements. This immediately opened up a new phase of export conditions and values to the American producing companies.

Only the larger concerns maintained export departments, the bulk of the sales being made through agents, but even the special export departments had little actual knowledge of territorial definitions or values.

For instance, in the fall of 1917, when I first arrived in New York, I was discussing prices with an export manager for certain territories. One particular territory he advised me was sold, and I asked about an adjoining territory. At first he said this was open, but upon thinking the matter over, he recalled that the party who made the contract for the first territory had asked him to include the other without extra royalty, which he agreed to do. Judge of his great surprise when he learned from me that the second territory he had thrown in was twice as valuable as that for which the contract was originally negotiated.

A. George Smith.

This kind of thing can hardly happen today. Competitive buying has demonstrated the value of the different markets; and, having this knowledge, it seems unreasonable to assume that America will send her produce to London for sale when it can be sold right here, and the cost of London agencies avoided.

True, on account of its geographic position London may be a better center for certain foreign territory, but South America, the Orient, Far East, Australia and Africa can be just as easily sold here.

Decline in Export Predicted.

In regard to the volume of export trade as distinct from values no man of judgment will deny that for various reasons this year must show a considerable decrease over the two previous years.

In 1918 and 1919 picture production in other countries was spasmodic owing to the war. Now England, France and Italy are planning to produce on a big scale, and the additional output will seriously curtail the exportation of American pictures, especially when we take into consideration the present foreign exchange rates, which apparently are going from bad to worse every day.

Notwithstanding this American producers are asking more money for their product instead of assisting their own industry by carrying a part of the burden imposed on foreign buyers by the low exchange.

Take the British Colonies, for instance. Is it not natural to assume that as soon as they can fill their requirements in London they will do so, and save a loss of 30 per cent. on exchange?

Many Pictures Barred from Export.

Does the American producer realize that hundreds of pictures will be made here during the next twelve months that cannot possibly be sold for England and Europe generally? Quality, not quantity, must obviously be the keynote of every one who has the interest of the trade at heart.

The American picture will, in my opinion, continue to have preference over the English or French pictures for some little time to come. They appeal to international audiences because they are created in the international atmosphere of this country by groups of men of cosmopolitan origin and outlook, who unconsciously reflect in their productions the art and temperament of their countries of origin. The result is the

THERE ARE A FEW CHOICE TERRITORIES STILL AVAILABLE FOR THE FOLLOWING PRODUCTIONS

WHEN BEARCAT WENT DRY!

The production that startled America! Written by Charles Neville Buck, one of America's greatest writers of fiction. A super-feature that embodies all that is best in plot, direction and cast.

THE LONG ARM OF MANNISTER

A big vital drama that beats true to the pulse of life, starring Henry B. Walthall, America's foremost emotional actor. Based on the famous novel of romance, revenge and forgiveness by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

AN ADVENTURESS

Julian Eltinge, internationally known as the most celebrated male impersonator of female characterizations, is here shown in a production that is new in theme, unusual in treatment and startling in development. Julian Eltinge is at present making a tour of the world, and "An Adventuress" should prove a ten-strike to the foreign buyer who is shrewd enough to capitalize on the extensive publicity that will precede and trail this famous star's personal appearance.

Quality Accessory Products

Master Projectors The MASTER PROJECTOR is the most recent product of an organization that already enjoys a notable reputation. The mechanical principles embodied in this machine are new, original and exclusive. By the elimination of numerous gears found in the ordinary projector, the MASTER PROJECTOR runs noiselessly. The shutter is driven from the cam shaft, while the take-up is driven by a shaft connected direct to the mechanism. There is absolutely no friction disc similar to the take-up devices used in other projectors.

Smith Portable Projection Machines This new portable projector is easily the leader of all makes of portable projectors on the market today. Its chief strength is that every detail of its mechanism and operation has been worked out on the basis of its availability for use in the hands of non-experts. The Smith Portable Projector is equipped with a water-condensed cooler. The light is steady and causes no flicker upon the screen.

Speer Carbons Why has the SPEER the largest international sale of any projector carbon? Why does every purchaser of this carbon re-order? Why do the discriminating film accessory dealers of the world swear by SPEER? Because the SPEER is constantly improving—each year finds a newer and better SPEER. 1920 introduces the SPEER DIRECTO CARBONS, which actually runs more reels per inch of carbon than any other carbon on the market today.

Fulco Accessories The FULCO list of every necessary accessory product in motion pictures numbers 300 articles, every one a time-saver in one or more directions. It would be physically impossible to present the list of products here, but we invite you to write us for it. Until you have this list, you have no idea of how accessory standards have improved the past year. Everything from rewinds to carbon holders is manufactured by FULCO.

Our Textbook on Projection

Inter-Ocean has taken over for distribution "An Elementary Text Book" in motion picture projection. It is written by JAMES R. CAMERON, Instructor of Projection in the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, and it tells all that there is to tell about projection. The author has kept his eye upon simplicity in language, and as a result the book can be understood by a beginner. The book is reliable and informative. For sale by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. Price $2.50 in American currency.

Export an Interesting Game popularity of American productions in foreign markets.

Another question which will require serious consideration during this year is that of reciprocity. It should be made clear that the antagonism said to exist in this country against foreign productions is not because they are foreign, but for the most part because they are inferior productions.

Superior Pictures Sells Anywhere.

My own experience is that the superior picture has no difficulty in selling, no matter on which side of the Atlantic it is made. The public has become super-critical; and certain producers, who for years have been making the so-called program features, have found it necessary to discontinue programs and instead produce fewer and better pictures.

This being the case it is unreasonable on the part of the foreign producer to expect a market here for what are really program features. As soon, however, as he produces a picture that will compare favorably with the American picture (and he most assuredly will) the whole position will have to be reconsidered and room made for the picture on the programs of the American exhibitors. Otherwise the foreign producer's grievance will become a real instead of an imaginary grievance.

Screen and Theatrical Interests Merge to Control Australian Houses

THE gradual evolution of the motion picture theatre from the nickolodeon to an ever rising standard of presentation will receive great impetus by the amalgamation of certain interests of Australasian Films, Ltd., and the leading theatrical producers, J. C. Williamson, Ltd., as it is the intention of the directors to immediately set about the construction of million-dollar theatres in both Sydney and Melbourne, Australia. The houses will bring the capital cities into line with Broadway and enable the new organization to lift the old haphazard tent show proposition up to the same plane as the legitimate.

The Williamson division of film controls the Goldwyn productions, while Australasian Films, Ltd., ranks among the World's biggest film importing firms. It has the sole rights for First National, Greater Vitagraph, Select, Robertson-Cole, Jewel and Pathe productions, and they are buyers on the open market. It will be readily seen, then, what an enormous organization the amalgamation of these two firms has brought about. There are whispers in film circles that the capital of the new company will run to ten figures.

Musgrove Now "On His Own."

Harry Musgrove, one of the leading motion picture personalities in Australia and the man who was mainly instrumental in the amalgamation of the companies which resulted in the formation of Australasian Films, Ltd., has resigned his position as general manager of that organization to exploit the world of entertainment on his own behalf. He has had an interesting career, having risen from the position of scretary of one of the concerns which merged into the original association of companies to the topmost rung of the ladder.

It is possible that he will leave soon for the United States, where he is intimately known, to give effect to the new plans he has fomulated for the future.

Wilfred Lucas has finished the "Man from Kangaroo," which was shown at the Lyceum and Lyric on January 24th. They are now cutting his second picture, "Shadow of Lightning Ridge," to be released in February. They are highly pleased here with the work he has so far done, and he returns to Los Angeles in February to wind up his affairs to return and make more pictures. Mr. Longford is in charge during his absence. Two of the American company he brought with him, Miss Brownie Vernon and Mr. Wells, have sailed for America.

The "Selznick boys" are showing the "Perfect Lover" at the Strand. This is their first release here, and they have been lucky enough to get into the game quickly, having made arrangements with Union Theatres for six different pictures for the same number of consecutive weeks.

I did not know the "Dear Old World" when I saw the last copy (November). Well, if its any consolation, strikes are right in fashion in this country. The musicians' strike is over and has signally failed. The regular theatres and also the picture houses got help outside the union, and a number of professional musicians are playing in street bands for a living. This, together with returned soldiers' bands, has given us a surfeit of street music and has made the police take notice of the many complaints of storekeepers at congested parts of the city.

Have just received a copy of the Tribune of November 30 in which there is a discussion as to whether Le Prince or Edison was the real pioneer of the motion picture on flexible film. To settle the argument I should say neither. This is due acknowledgement of the great impetus that Edison has given in this direction.

The late Dr. Marey, scientist of the "College de France" in Paris, to my mind was the real pioneer. He experimented for year with the assistance of the French government, first with glass plates. I personally saw in the fall of Industrial Pictures, Which Chinese Like, Will Develop Market for U.S.

"CHINA likes to 'see the wheels go 'round.' China wants industrial and commercial pictures of all kinds." Such was the film thought uppermost in the mind of Julean Arnold, attaché of the United States Chamber of Commerce in China.

When a man has been "at" something for eighteen years, particularly if he has been on the payroll of the government, it may be taken for granted that he knows what he is talking about.

"I do not mean to say that the Chinese do not like the program picture," said Mr. Arnold to the Moving Picture World man when interviewed at the Customs House, "but they prefer to see on the screen the story of America's great industries, the details of manufacturing the articles they use, the social welfare activities in our big commercial organizations.

China Wants to Learn.

"China is vast and growing. It wants to see and learn. The picture theatres are competing strongly with the 'legitimate' show in China, for the Chinese have always been theatregoers.

"Industrial pictures from this country will not only show China how things are done on a big, efficient scale, but they will help tremendously to boost American commercial products there. I should like to arrange with either the producers of industrial films or the companies for whom they are made to give them distribution in China for the advancement of American commerce. I have already shown a number of such pictures, but the supply is far from sufficient."

Promoting American trade through the motion picture is just one of the many ways in which Mr. Arnold develops the consumption of Yankee products in the Oriental republic. He is the connecting link—the suggestion-box—between the producer in America and the consumer across the Pacific. Now in this counrty, his work will take him into the office of the railroad president, the oil magnate, the tobacco king, the mine owner, the big manufacturer—to suggest ways and means of developing the Chinese market for America.

"China would make a beautiful background for pictures made by our American film men," concluded Mr. Arnold. "The Chinese would like to see pictures dealing with their own social customs. The Chinaman is interested in plays. Every Chinaman is an actor, and a casting director would find no trouble at all in getting 'local talent' for his pictures."

Well, Mr. Producer and Mr. Maker of Industrial Pictures, are you going after China?

MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE

Wherever a motion picture projector is to be operated, thousands of miles away from its place of manufacture, unquestionably the biggest argument in its favor is its dependability under all conditions of service.

If it costs ten dollars to have a projector break down in New York, it will cost one hundred dollars to have a projector break down in Melbourne. New York is near the center of manufacturing distribution. Melbourne is thousands of miles away.

The Motiograph, across many years, has established an enviable reputation for being "always on the job." It is built like a battleship whose working parts are staunch and true. It can't go wrong.

In hundreds of theatres throughout the United States it is providing that faultless projection which has done so much toward elevating the motion picture industry to its present high plane.

For a space of many years the Enterprise Optical Company has had an earned reputation for reliability and square dealing.

1892, shown to a large audience in the lecture hall of the "Music des Arts et Metiers" (the Museum of Arts and Trades) Paris, the first motion picture taken from one point of view on flexible film.

It was a mammoth head of a Frenchman saying, of course in French, that French was a beautiful language. This was, I believe, the first public exhibition in France. The film was taken by Dr. Marey's camera, and the projection by the electrician, Moltoni. You will find reference to Dr. Marey in Talbot's Practical Cinematography.

Suggests Experimental Laboratory.

What would be the matter in having an experimental national laboratory in America similar to the Marey Institute? I certainly think the film trade is able to subscribe to such an institute, where operators in all branches of the business could get in touch with all developments in electrical, photographic and practical matters of interest.

As in Paris, it should contain a library, lecture hall, work-rooms and even living rooms for visiting students. It might be called "The Edison National Institute" in compliment to the man who certainly did a great deal for the advancement of present day cinematography.

Bigger Pictures Only Can Make Money in Europe at Present Exchange Rate

THE condition of foreign exchange throughout the world in relation to the value of the American dollar has developed a serious situation in the foreign field and is of far-reaching consequence to all distributors of American photoplays in Europe and Asia.

The present unsettled state of foreign exchange and the fluctuations of the European money value is pointed out by Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., through its directors, Messrs. J. J. McCarthy Theodore Mitchell, Guy Croswell Smith and George Bowles as the thing that is going to have a far greater effect in keeping a large bulk of the American made motion pictures out of England, France and other European countries than any present agitation which has been raised to check the heavy flow of American material.

Guy Croswell Smith.
Executive head of Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd.

Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., is an American corporation which has been meeting with success in the foreign field by elaborate presentation and distribution of special feature subjects like the D. W. Griffith big specials such as "Broken Blossoms," "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and material of this distinct quality and stamp. Their relations are such, as explained by Mr. Smith, president of the company, that they can finance their affairs in Europe.

Prices of Film Are Prohibitive.

With lire, francs, marks and pounds sterling quoted at the lowest figures in the history of their respective countries, it is fast becoming impossible to sell ordinary American film in those countries at a profit. In fact, the difference in exchange is so heavy that the profitable prices are prohibitive and there is not enough demand in any European country to offset the wide difference in the rates of exchange.

Unless companies are making only the big specials and have the minimum expense of handling them in their overhead charges for distribution throughout Europe with world finances in their present state, it is impracticable to waste time upon a film subject. Then, too, with the war over, the foreign film companies are now working to better advantage, and an ordinary American subject cannot meet the difference in exchange and compete with the home product in either England, France, Germany or Italy. Of course, the other countries are affected in a like manner, so that it can be seen that the foreign market is fast closing to the American output except in such cases of outstanding excellence that they have to be taken over and can do a business which warrants the additional cost of purchase.

Jump Four to Six Times.

At the current rates of exchange pictures in the European countries cost the film distributor there from two to six times what they did a year and a half back. There are not enough picture houses in those countries to absorb this heavy additional expense, and naturally the foreign market will depend upon less expensive subjects until the old trade relations are working at a sufficient pace to readjust the difference in exchange.

As Mr. Smith points out for Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., this difference is not so marked in the few concerns like his company that have reciprocal relations with foreign distributors and are handling the big vital subjects which can create a market under pressure of more than ordinary conditions of exchange, but for the ordinary run of films it is a serious matter and the outlook for adjustment is not in sight.

Scandinavians Look for Continuing Prosperity

By INGVALD C. OES,

Manager, Scandinavian Office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

HAVING enjoyed a prosperous year during 1919, the exhibitors and importers of film in Denmark, Sweden and Norway are looking forward to a continuation of this prospertiy during the coming months. The relief from the strain of the war period is already making itself felt in film circles, and another twelve months should see a great forward move in Scandinavia.

The demand for Paramount-Artcraft productions has grown enormously throughout Northern Europe in the last few years, and any improvement in the exchange situation will be the signal for a much greater increase in business in the future. The darkest days of the adverse exchange situation will soon be a matter of history, in the opinion of Scandinavian business men, and the film business is preparing itself for a record-breaking business.

Ingvald C. Oes.
Scandinavian manager for Famous Players-Lasky.

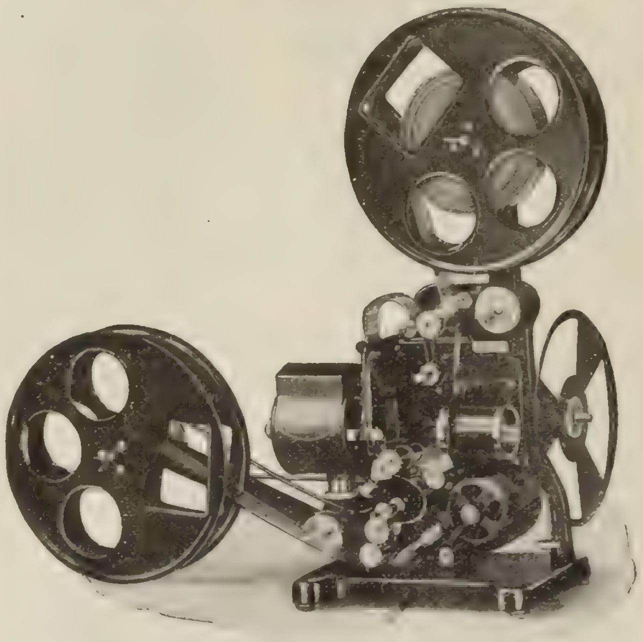
High grade motion pictures are extremely popular. There is a great need of more high-class theatres, and this building movement has assumed considerable proportions, especially in Sweden, which already has approximately 700 theatres exhibiting motion pictures. The difficulty of obtaining licenses for the erection of theatres is one obstacle in the way of building theatres, but this difficulty is passing.

Clarke Gets Valentine.

Horace T. Clarke, the traveling representative for David P. Howells, Inc., who traverses Australia, the Far East, and the Orient in behalf of Howells' picture productions and accessories, received a six and one-half pound son as a valentine last Saturday, February 14. Both wife and baby are doing very well.

Mr. Clarke starts off on his next swing to the Pacific Archipelago in April.

PEERLESS STANDARD PORTABLE PROJECTOR



Price as shown $275.
Also made with enclosing magazines.

The unanimous choice of the expert projectionists, because it combines the most advanced ideas in design with unique convenience in operation.

Motor (or hand) drive and rewind at any speed.

Film threads easily, runs in a straight line without twists or turns and where you can see it. Studios and directors use it to cut and edit film as easily as on a rewind table.

Less flicker at three-quarter speed than any other projector at normal speed.

Its skillful design and superior mechanical construction are a revelation to users of ordinary portable projectors.

Triple, meniscus, bi-convex, French condenser lenses.

Monoplane Mazda Lamps.

Frame and supports all of aluminum.

Widefaced, helical-cut, bronze on steel noiseless gears.

Oil-less bearings throughout. Westinghouse universal motor.

Operates on 32-volt, 110-volt or 220-volt line current A. C. or D. C., or on a small portable storage battery, or, when no electricity is available, on the wonderful Peerless Hand-Driven Electric Generator, weighing only fifty pounds!

READ WHAT MARTIN JOHNSON WRITES FROM THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS:

For months we traveled from tribe to tribe—just Mrs. Johnson and myself—and the Peerless opened the way for us. It would have done you good to see it and the Generator going over mountains and into valleys, on the backs of savages, and at night to have seen hundreds of cannibals squatting around the devil-devil grounds, watching the wonderful things they never dreamed of before. Many a time the trees and houses would be full of human heads—dried—all about us.

I have the Peerless set up here in the house and will do all my cutting and assembling on it.

Another remarkable thing about the Peerless and the Generator is that when we showed among the cannibals—away up in the mountains, the picture was as clear and sharp as any I have ever seen in a picture show, of course slightly smaller, but the light was perfect and the picture showed as clear and steady as any you ever saw.

The Peerless will be a part of every expedition I make—my next trip is among the tree dwellers six hundred miles up the Fly River in New Guinea.

I feel that I owe the Peerless credit for most of the fine pictures I have made on this expedition. As I have said before, it opened a safe road to savage tribes where I never could have reached otherwise. M. J.

Peerless Hand Driven Electric Generator—Simple, practical, fool-proof. In use with universal satisfaction all over the world. Ball-bearing dynamo. Folding stand. Weston voltmeter. Boxed for Export, 15"x15"x33". Weight, 90 pounds. Price, $175. (Cannot be used with other projectors having the old style optical systems.)

Screens of the World Reflect the Projection of Power's Cameragraph

THE expansion of the American cinemachinery industry, the fact that American projectors are greatly preferred abroad, even though they are sold at a much higher price than European makes, and the part the Nicholas Power Company has played in creating this demand will be of interest to those interested in the advancement of the American film industry. The subject takes increased importance when considering the influence this European demand may have upon American prices and exhibitor needs.

President Earl, of the Nicholas Power Company, authorizes the statement that the requirements of American exhibitors will always be paramount with his company and no attempt will be made to develop the foreign field at the expense of the home market. There are, however, certain very definite moral as well as legal obligations which the company owes to its foreign representatives—some of the oldest and largest concerns in the foreign film industry—but those obligations, it is declared, will be fully lived up to without neglecting those at home who have so loyally stood by the Power's machine during the last twenty years.

Link in a World-Round Chain.

Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, went to Europe last June, and spent some months in England, France and Italy. A number of important matters were carefully considered during his visit, and one of the results was the completion of the world-round chain of Power's representatives.

It is important, however, for American exhibitors to fully understand to what extent American projectors are favored in foreign countries. To avoid all possibility of delay and disappointment it is necessary to order machines for new theatres or additional equipment for their old houses well in advance of actual need. Europe is hungry for American machinery of every description and where the article is superior to their own product it will be readily understood by exhibitors in this that the foreign demand is very extensive.

Although American projectors cost much more than European mochines, foreign exhibitors realize that no house is better than its projector and initial cost of this part of the equipment of a theatre is comparatively unimportant. In great international contests the Nicholas Power Company has frequently demonstrated that American projectors are internationally supreme.

Spanish Grandees Have Cameragraphs.

The royal family of Spain recently selected Power's machines in an international test in which every effort to win was made by foregin manufacturers of motion picture machines. The owners of the magnificent Palads Theatre, Copenhagen, to a description of which the Moving Picture World devoted a page and a half, purchased the Power's machines after visiting European centers to carefully test all well known foreign projectors.

Finally, a representative of the owners of the Palads Theatre was sent to the United States and the Power's machine was selected. This strongly indicates the care taken by European exhibitors in the selection of their projectors and demonstrates the superiority of American machines. The extent of this European demand is shown by the statement made by the Walturdaw Company, Ltd., that it was believed upwards of 4,000 Power's projectors have been installed in the United Kingdom.

President Earl recently announced that the Fox Film Corporation had taken the agency for Power's projectors in France, Belgium and Switzerland. This completed a chain of great concerns representing this American corporation in all parts of the world

A single order was recently received by the Nicholas Power Company for fifty machines for Australia. Another order came for a single machine for a town in the interior of Africa, on which the Postmaster of New York could give no information.

South America's Lively Market.

South America has always been a heavy purchaser of the Power's machine and recent orders from China show that this will some day be a big field for American films and motion picture equipment. The Nicholas Power Co. was a pioneer in the foreign field as well as in this country, and the development of this great demand for American projectors is to a considerable extent the result of the aggressive export policy of President Earl.

Under normal conditions the export trade is an excellent thing for American exhibitors as it enables American manufacturers to sell larger quantities of their products, keeps the factory busy in dull periods and serves to keep down overhead charges. The result of this means lower prices for American as well as foreign users of moving picture machines and its general effect is to promote the advancement of the film industry.

President Earl Figures Ahead.

Large manufacturing concerns such as the Nicholas Power Company, of course, anticipate the effect of their efforts to develop the export market and have provided additional manufacturing facilities. The Nicholas Power Company supplied nearly 1,800 new machines to the Y. M. C. A., the K. of C., and various departments of the United States Government during the war, and much of this business was actually of an export nature.

The Nicholas Power Company, therefore, has ample facilities for a large export business and will be able to take care of a very large foreign demand without, in any way, inconveniencing American exhibitors. However, there is every reason to believe that the demand for Power's projectors and other American motion picture equipment will be very heavy and the far-sighted exhibitor will avoid all disappointment by "coming early to avoid the rush." This is the important lesson of the present export situation.

Solving Problems in Studio Lightings

Sun Light Arc Pinch-Hits for Old Sol

TO get an immediate valuation on Sun Light Arc and to see at once the benefits that come to artistic picture production through the use of Sun Light Arc's possibilities in creating light effects, the Paramount-Artcraft production of "On With the Dance" is cited by J. Justice Harmer as embodying all the requisites of skilled lighting. Mr. Harmer declares that the Mae Murray production is an ideal exposition of artifice in studio illuminations.

Because it is a release of current interest "On With the Dance" is cited; but there have been scores of other photoplays in which Sun Light Arc has stepped in where Old Sol could not, or would not, shine. In repeated instances the Harmer system has been used by Famous Players-Lasky, Selznick, Norma Talmadge, Bray Pictures, Pathe, Educational Films, Metro, Fox, Goldwyn, Sydney Chaplin, Marshall Neilan, Hodkinson, United Pictures, Johnson-Hopkins, Vitagraph, Guy Empey, Realart, Tourneur, Lois Weber, Mayflower, Master Films, Allan Dwan, Universal, Mary Pickford, Fairbanks, Brunton, Erbograph, Blackton, Novagraph, King Cole Comedies and many others.

Mr. Harmer declares that Sun Light Arc is capable of commercial as well as artistic uses and he is every day finding new demands for his system of lighting. The apparatus may be secured for a day, a week, a month or a year for any purpose to which it may be applied, distributing stations having been established in the principal cities in the United States and Canada.

Sun Light Arc's equipment weighs 764 pounds—1,200 boxed for domestic shipping. Its candle power is 100,000 and the lamps burn on direct current only at a voltage of between 95 and 145 and consume 150 amperes at the arc.

Mirrors Carry Light Afar.

Height of lamp 8 feet to center of arc but it has a worm lifting mechanism that raises it to 10½ feet. The drum is mounted on trunion arms on the top of the tripod and by a mechanism of a chain hanging therefrom, can be tilted or elevated to any desired angle. In fact, this light can be manipulated the same as a camera box on top of a tripod.

Excellent photographic results have been obtained with the light one-half a mile away through projection of the light by the parabolic mirror. For flood lighting in a hall 80 by 100 and 60 feet in height two of these lamps will light up this space equal to a beautiful sunlight.

Mr. Harmer declares the actinic value of Sun Light Arc is 100 per cent. with that of the sun. It is declared to be perfect in definition of color, having the true spectrum.

The light is supplied with an iris shutter. In using the iris shutter without the parabolic mirror a beautiful spot light of wonderful photographic value can be projected to any part of the studio irising down so that the spot would illuminate the character desired; and in this case nothing of the surroundings are photographed other than that covered by the beamless spot light.

Lends Multiplicity of Effects.

There is no end to the odd effects that can be obtained through the use of the parabolic mirror, iris shutter and diffusing lens; and many spot lights for a series of beamless spots can be had from this one lamp, whereby spot lights of photographic value can be directed on four, five or six different objects in the set from one lamp at the same time.

Reflected lighting, back lighting and high intensity spot lighting and particularly for back lighting the Sun Light Arc has no equal. While this is true of the odd effects that can be obtained through this most wonderful light, it also has the value for general illumination.

President Harmer, of Sun Light Arc, whose knowledge of colors made the art of studio lighting come so near perfection in his invention, is one of the pioneer experts in the art of reproduction. He has for forty years been engaged solely in the graphic arts.

Preparing Further Innovations.

"The day is coming," declares Mr. Harmer, "when our corporation will have three powerful generator sets mounted on trucks carrying several thousand feet of cables. This will be a great step forward in the production of motion pictures because of the fact that these trucks can go anywhere in the country regardless of conditions. Each set will carry three of these immense Sun Light Arcs which mean an illumination of 300,000 candle power in open flood light or a combination of 12,000,000 candle power by the use of the parabolic mirror.

One of the most conspicuous successes, of more recent record, was the use of Sun Light Arcs in illuminating Madison Square Garden during the Caddock-Stecher wrestling match. So brilliant was the illumination that the newspapers commented upon it and the photographic cameras were able to get every move in the match from "close-ups" to long shots without missing a detail.

While developing the mechanical features of his light President Harmer has not overlooked the commercial aspects. He has arranged for immediate distribution on any demand from either studios or the textile and other commercial trades where they are fast coming into use.

Developing the Foreign Market.

The domestic and foreign market is adequately covered with depots for distribution. Frank Elliott, at 1735 Highland avenue, Los Angeles, has the west coast with its numerous studios in charge. William Sandoz, of Rio de Janerio, is in touch with the Latin Republics and Adolphe Osso, 416 rue St. Honore, Paris, has assumed control of Sun Light Arc interests in France, Italy, Belgium and Switzerland.

Mr. Harmer is particularly gratified in the sale of two lights he recently negotiated with David Wark Griffith for that famous director's new studio in Mamaroneck. With America well covered Mr. Harmer is turning his attention to the foreign studios and feels gratified with the indorsements he has for Sun Light Arc in its use in practically every production plant here at home.

"Necessary to Extend Credit to Foreign Buyers," Says Shallenberger

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, as president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has recently arranged with a number of independent producers to distribute their productions for the entire world. For years the Arrow company has concentrated upon building up the independent market in the United States permitting their productions to be handled abroad by outsiders.

Having decided to expand and handle their various productions throughout the entire world, President Shallenberger proceeded to establish connections abroad that would enable the Arrow to expand rapidly and in the right direction, and with this in view secured a number of big productions that are especially suitable for the foreign trade.

For the United Kingdom, Arrow has secured as its representative Montague Cohen, who has opened offices under the firm name of Film Rights, Ltd., at 33 Soho Square, London. For Continental European buyers, Arrow has arranged with J. Rosen, with offices at 43 Rue Labryere, Paris, France. At both of these offices all of the Arrow attractions can be secured and negotiations conducted.

Future Depends on Right Prices.

In an interview with the Moving Picture World, President Shallenberger stated: "The future of American productions abroad depends on the selling at reasonable figures. At the present rate of exchange it is impossible for the foreign buyer to purchase productions and pay the proportionate share of the cost of said productions. Until conditions change it is absolutely necessary to extend credit to foreign buyers and assist the foreign buyers by giving them an advantage in price.

"The Arrow company does not care to make money in its foreign business at this time with the low rate of exchange so decidedly detrimental to the foreign buyers, but if we can assist the foreign buyer in maintaining his business in American productions we are satisfied, for I know that when the conditions change and are more favorable to the foreign buyer, that he will be glad to pay his share.

"It is the aim of the Arrow company to assist the foreign buyer whenever and however it can, and with this thought uppermost, has arranged to release at this time a large number of features, as well as many short subjects, which includes the Hank Mann comedies, other comedies, two-reel westerns, several serials and other subjects that are now being produced on the coast for Arrow."

Allen Believes in Specialization in Export; to Open Far East Depots

IF L. H. Allen were the kind of chap who hangs up "Do It Now" and "Never Say Quit" signs over his office desk, he'd probably have the placard "Specialization," framed in a judiciously prominent place.

L. H. Allen,
President Foreign Markets Distributing Corporation.

L. H. Allen believes in specialization, but he doesn't advertise it by office placard-bromides. He advertises it by service. As president of the Foreign Markets Distributing Corporation he maintains an unbreakable hold upon his buyers by service.

Middleman Dominates.

"In America the producer dominates the field," said Mr. Allen to the Moving Picture World representative. "But in the foreign market, the exporter or the middleman dominates. The exporter's buyers must depend upon him absolutely for a square deal, and it is up to him to give dependable service.

"And since this is an era of specialization, naturally exporters are specialized agents. One man knows Scandinavia better than anybody else because he specializes on that territory. Another specializes on Australia, another South America, and so on."

And before we let Mr. Allen get any further along in his story, let us interrupt long enough to say that specializing in South America is to him like doing the popular act of rolling off a log. Mr. Allen long ago saw the possibilities of the Latin-American field in such a favorable light that he influ-of Moving Picture World, now hitting all the circulation high spots below the Rio Grande. Mr. Allen was the first editor of Cine-Mundial.

The Foreign Markets Distributing Corporation handles all the Vitagraph product in foreign markets and also takes independent productions under its wing. It has just taken up spacious quarters at 126 West Forty-sixth street, where it will be equipped to project, edit and title a tidy number of reels a day.

Eighteen Depots.

Another evidence of the fact that the Allen service is succeeding is that Mr. Allen has under way a project to establish eighteen distributing depots in the Near East.

"Mesopotamia, Egypt, Syria are all new fields," said Mr. Allen. "No one knows much about them. But we expect to find out about them and be getting good results within a few months."

And when Mr. Allen puts on that housewarming he promises as soon as the plasterers and plumbers leave his new quarters—well, just keep the date open.

American Films Dominate World, But Producers Must Nourish Exchange

By ARTHUR E. ROUSSEAU

Export Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

AT the beginning of the war the American product, already favorably considered in the foreign markets, did not take long to establish some kind of a monopoly in all countries where it was introduced, and until long after the armistice no change was in sight.

The American producer, finding a ready outlet for his product everywhere and consequently the wherewithal to make good pictures, took advantage of all the facilities at his disposal and his inventive genius developed motion picture productions, which, the foreign producers admitted, surpassed their own best efforts. Before long the foreign market became a real source of revenue, giving our producers a larger latitude in making elaborate productions and largely contributing to the high standard we have reached these days.

Foreign Countries Not Self-Sufficient.

American films had established themselves firmly in foreign territories and were not going to be eliminated so soon. Home productions started slowly, as though afraid to tackle the proposition. The producers realized perfectly well that their pictures would not attract from the standpoint of quality, but rather from that of curiosity, sympathy or patriotism.

The foreign producer also realized that this curiosity or sympathy would not extend far beyond his home market and therefore hesitated as to whether he should invest the necessary amount of money to bring his productions up to the required standard. It is an admitted fact that, with a successful film in America, the producer can break even aided by the exploitation in this country, whereas few other countries afford sufficient opportunity for a picture to earn back its investment in home territory.

Must Supply Market.

It looked as though we were going to enjoy prosperity for a long time to come, when within a comparatively short time the rate of exchange with European countries rendered all export business impracticable. This decrease in value of European currency was not the effect of heavy purchases during a few months, but the effect of the leveling of a rate of exchange which had been held up artificially for several years; and the wise ones believe that it will take several years before European currency will be stabilized.

America cannot afford to keep away its product from Europe until the rate of exchange is stabilized, but must continue to supply the European market and take the depreciated European currency into consideration. It should go so far as to give its product at the cost price of the positive, in countries where the local money has hardly any value compared to the dollar, this merely for the purpose of keeping American films before the public and to prevent foreign producers from seizing the market, which in their own currency might represent a fair return for their product.

The main object of the American producer must, therefore, be to maintain the demand for his product. In cases where the foreign currency is depleted considerably, since the producer is not waiting for this money to continue his business, he should either grant the purchaser a long credit or leave the money derived from the sale in banks in the respective countries, thereby creating working capital for those countries which will help it to improve conditions, tend to increase the rate of exchange and increase the value obtained for his pictures.

By so giving the European countries working capital the American producer will not only have the benefit of the improved rate of exchange later on, but he will help to the improvement of the situation in general in these countries and allow them to construct new theatres, sorely needed to satisfy the demand of the public, which during the last few years has developed a tremendous appreciation of good motion picture shows. This will mean increased possibilities for each picture and allow the distributing organizations to pay the producers higher prices for their product.

American Films Abroad

THIS issue of the Moving Picture World marks its last appearance in the page size adopted by its founder, James P. Chalmers, only a week less than thirteen years ago, the initial number having appeared on March 9, 1907. Many things have happened in the film world in the intervening years—in fact, practically everything pertaining to motion pictures as we know them today has developed within that period.

We believe another factor also marks the present issue. We believe our readers will agree with us in the assertion that never before has there appeared in any motion picture trade journal a section treating so comprehensively of the growing importance of American film abroad; that never before have the conclusions of so many men competent to speak with authority on this great subject been brought together within two covers of a trade publication. The story of film export is well told, from the beginnings in 1910 as outlined by William Wright to the summary of the latest official figures by Samuel Goldwyn.

Mr. Wright tells us of the indifference of the American producers in the early days to the possibilities of selling films abroad. That feeling perhaps may have been due to the ascendancy at that time of the work of French and other European producers.

One of the topics under general discussion is the matter of the world's trade center. A. George Smith in his informing article touches interestingly upon this not unimportant question. Mr. Smith is an Englishman who for many years lived in South Africa, who has been in New York for two years and now has returned to London as the representative of an American company. He may be said to look upon the subject with an open mind. His conclusions are that partisans of London as the coming or returned center of the world's film trade overlook the altered conditions now prevailing as a result of the war. While the English capital may be the better center for certain territory, South America, the Orient, the Far East, Australia and Africa may be sold from New York with equal facility.

According to the figures compiled by Mr. Lachenbruch the United States exported in 1916 231,000,000 linear feet of film, of which 158,000,000 were of finished pictures. Mr. Lachenbruch estimates that at the present time almost 500,000,000 linear feet of motion pictures are made in this country annually.

Showing the growth of the export trade we may quote from these tables the figures showing that Norway in 1915 imported from this country pictures to the value of $5,666; in 1918 the sum was $220,886. Mexico in 1914 bought of us films valued at $6,614; in 1918 the amount was $65,727, and this in spite of the lively German propaganda under full swing in that country. Australia jumped from purchases of $118,553 in 1913 to $682,091 in 1918. Coming to larger figures while Europe's bill in 1914 was but $949,980, in 1916 the peak was established at $4,851,866, the amount declining to $1,991,351 in 1918. Not all figures are dry, and there are many more in the tables from which these statistics were gathered that well will repay perusal.

Mr. Goldwyn points out that the United States with 15,000 motion picture houses has only 2,500 less than all the rest of the world. His description of the motion picture of America as the Yankee salesman abroad fits in with the remarks of returning travelers. The statement, too, that the advertisement "Made in America" is one the exporter cannot afford to neglect, that the American film is a psychological advance agent, has sound business force.

Mr. Shauer sees an expansion abroad during the coming five years that will equal the one through which the trade in this country has passed recently. He sees thousands of theatres under construction in the near future throughout the world to provide entertainment for amusement-hungry peoples. He predicts the financial leaders will work out a solution of the exchange problem, so that there will come a marked change in the situation compelling the foreign buyer to pay from two to four hundred per cent. more for film today than he did before the war.

The exchange situation naturally is uppermost in the minds of many of the contributors. Guy Croswell Smith expresses the opinion that the present unsettled state of foreign exchange and the fluctuations of European money value will have far greater effect in keeping the large bulk of American motion pictures out of England, France and other countries than will any agitation which has been raised to check the heavy flow of American material which poured into that field during the war. He says there are not enough picture houses in these countries to absorb this great additional expense, and that naturally the foreign market will depend upon less expensive productions.

Mr. Howells calls attention to the same angle of the export situation as that of which Mr. Powers talked in our issue of last week—i. e., that the reduction of foreign demand for American pictures will throw added burdens upon the producers and exhibitors here. Mr. Howells' statement that foreign buyers today are paying as much for rights in one, two or three countries to American productions as it would cost an English, French or Italian producer to make a picture may cause concern. He pleads for easier terms for the foreign buyer.

Colonel Browne speaks with authority from the viewpoint of the English distributor. He tells us of the building shortage in his country, which is even more serious there than here, he says; that no new cinemas have been built for over five years and that none can be for two more, as they are classified as "luxury buildings." Every week, he says, between twenty-five and thirty productions are released in England, and consequently all can't make money. As one reason, and a sound one, too, the Walturdaw chairman urges that, as English romances are so popular in the United States, English plays enacted in natural surroundings possess atmosphere that cannot be duplicated by the arts of technique or stagecraft.

Major De Rodynko wonders why China, with its hundreds of millions of inhabitants, has not been more exploited by American film men. He refers not alone to the treaty ports, but to the interior, which he declares is a splendid market. The major says producers should cater to the native pride of race and translate the sub-titles, explaining that the Oriental and Chinese display great appreciation for any effort in that direction. He adds that the Chinese government will help the producers. Mr. Arnold, an attache of the United States as Major De Rodynko was of the governor of Shanghai, says the Chinese are enthusiastic over industrial and commercial subjects.

The year 1920 undoubtedly will show a lessening in European demand for American film. Several reasons to account for this readily will occur to the mind. Aside from the exchange factor there is the growing number of releases by foreign producers. The lull will be temporary. With the restoration of normal conditions and the building of many theatres throughout the world and the consequent addition of millions upon millions to the number of screen followers the makers and exporters of American pictures will find ample opportunities for the expansion of their business.

GEORGE BLAISDELL.

Speakers at Northcliffe Luncheon Urge Better Anglo-American Film Relations

AT the invitation of Arthur Levey fourscore representatives of the financial world, the press and motion pictures gathered at a luncheon tendered at the Hotel Astor February 17 to W. G. Faulkner, visiting the United States on behalf of Lord Northcliffe, the English publisher. The object of the gathering avowedly was to discuss ways and means of bettering the relations between England and the United States, with the employment especially of motion pictures as a means to that end.

Present were many of the producers and distributors of motion pictures. Melville E. Stone, head of the Associated Press, presided. At his left was William A. Brady, president of The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and at his right Mr. Faulkner. The speakers were the two just mentioned and Walter W. Irwin and Louis Tracy.

"The educational value of the picture is almost limitless," declared the presiding officer. "It is a great and responsible work the picture men conduct. The manner in which they carry it on may make for the welfare or the injury of the world in the largest measure."

Mr. Stone read a message from Lord Northcliffe, in part as follows:

Pleads for Better Understanding.

"In asking my friend Faulkner to cross the Atlantic I had in my mind the creation of a better understanding in the film worlds of our country and yours. My personal interest in films is frankly educational—not in the dull sense, but largely in the sense of accuracy of detail.

"Some American films, beautiful in conception, that include reels depicting English life, are occasionally spoiled by little but damaging mistakes which make the public disregard the fine creative and accurate portion of such films. Such errors hurt filmland as badly as false news hurts newspapers. They make people doubt the accuracy of all films.

"A good understanding between the film people of our countries is the more essential because the development of cheap private projectors will produce such an increase in the manufacture of films and the desire to see films that for every film put on the screen to-day I venture to predict that there will be a hundred produced in ten years' time.

England Not Awake to Possibilities.

"I find that my own private projector has increased the desire of my household and circle of friends to go to all the neighboring picture theatres.

"This new development has infinite possibilities. In Great Britain we are not sufficiently awake to the fact that the moving picture is absolutely the greatest instrument of recreation and education that the world has ever known.

"In the United States I found during my residence there two years ago that there were plenty of people even in that country, which is the home of the film, who did not realize the possibilities of 1925 in filmland

"My friend Faulkner goes to you with a message of good-will from all of us here, and especially to say that any efforts in the direction of accurate and elevated production will meet with very warm support from the Northcliffe Press. "NORTHCLIFFE.

"London, 14th January, 1920."

English Houses Cater to All Classes.

Mr. Faulkner in opening his remarks expressed his appreciation for the attendance of the prominent representatives of finance, the press and the motion picture. He described how impressed he had been by one of the subtitles in "The Land of Opportunity," which he had seen on the evening of Lincoln's Birthday, and which quoted the Great Emancipator as saying that "Nations like individuals sometimes need friends." He predicted for the motion picture in 1920 the biggest year in its quarter century of history.

"For five years 90 per cent. of the pictures shown on our screens were of American origin," said Mr. Faulkner. "Today the picture theatres in our country are drawing all classes where five years ago they were drawing practically only one class. Thirty millions of our people out of forty-five millions see pictures every week.

"A year ago in London the average newspaper gave two thousand words a week to motion picture news. Lord Northcliffe gave some 12,000 words. Now all of the London press prints 30,000 words weekly, a record which has not been approached by any other industry in our country."

The luncheon ended with the adoption of a resolution pledging those present to co-operate in the plan to promote good-will between the people of Great Britain and the United States along the lines suggested by Lord Northcliffe.

A bill has been introduced in the National House prohibiting the sale of tickets in any theatre in the District unless there are available corresponding seats. Forfeiture of license is to be imposed for a third offense.

Sunday Closing Bill Is Introduced Friday the Thirteenth in Congress

A SUNDAY-CLOSING bill for the District of Columbia has been introduced in the House of Representatives. The author, or the sponsor, of the measure is Representative Henry Wilson Temple, Republican, of Washington, Pa. It is a sure-enough closing bill, and although Dr. Temple does not agree, it would preclude the sale of all kinds of merchandise, even down to bread, milk, cigars, Sunday papers and whatnot.

This bill has been in the offing for some time, so that its appearance on Friday, February 13, a day that may be ominous for or against it, was nothing of a surprise. Dr. Temple is one of the ablest members of the House of Representatives. He is a native of Ohio and graduated from Geneva College in 1883, and from Covenanter Theological Seminary at Allegheny in 1887. Later he became pastor of churches in Baxter, Leechburg and Washington, Pa. In 1898 he became adjunct professor of political science and in 1905 of history and political science in Washington and Jefferson College, where he remained until his election to Congress. This is his fourth term in the House.

Wants Full Expression of Opinion.

Asked regarding his bill, Dr. Temple stated he simply wanted to bring the proposal before the people for full discussion and expression of opinion.

"There is agitation in a good many places, both for Sunday closing and for Sunday opening legislation, and I believe it will be wholesome to have a full expression of public opinion on the subject," he told the Moving Picture World correspondent in answer to a suggestion that for the most part the people in the places where the amusements were denied them the activity was for Sunday opening. "The purpose of the measure is to give every man who works an opportunity to rest one day in seven and to protect those who wish to spend that day in religious observance."

The text of the bill is as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, for any person to labor or employ any person to labor or to pursue any trade or secular business, works of necessity and charity always excepted; provided, that persons who recognize as a day of rest any other day in the week than Sunday shall not be held to have violated the provisions of this section if they observe as a day of rest one day in each as herein provided.

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, to keep open and use for secular purposes any dancing saloon, theatre, bowling alley, or place of public assembly or amusement where sports are carried on for such purposes.

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, for any person, firm, corporation, or municipality, or any of their agents, directors, or officers, to require or permit any employes engaged in works of necessity or charity to work excepting in household service unless within the next succeeding six days during a period of twenty-four consecutive hours he or it shall neither require nor permit such employe to work in his or its employ.

That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50 for the first offense and for each subsequent offense by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, or by both fine and imprisonment in jail of the District of Columbia for a period of not less than one month, nor more than six months, in the discretion of the court.

That all prosecutions for violation of this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia.

Congress Is Now "Going Slow."

Dr. Temple states that the terms of his bill have been tried out in other places where there are "blue laws," its provisions being worked up from those of a number of state laws, some of which, however, are not observed. He declined to state who is advocating his measure. Resolutions have been adopted by a number of organizations religiously inclined which from time to time have met in Washington. The Lord's Day Alliance has urged the passage of legislation that will bring about a closer observance of Sunday.

There was a time when a bill such as the one proposed could have been shunted through Congress with little or no delay or obstruction. In view of the trouble brought about by the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, Congress is "going slow" in adopting reforms. No one can be said to be a slave to the "screen habit"; no one is prevented from attending church, if they want to go; the motion picture theatres are not noise producers and cannot be said to form a nuisance; there is only one thing against them, and that is they form keen competition for the churches, and the ministers, finding their attendance dwindling, seek assistance through the passage of laws of a subsidizing nature.

The members of Congress are aware of these things, and they are not going to stir up any more unrest than will normally come about. Further, they see pending requests for legislation that will prohibit the use of tobacco. The women of Kentucky are planning to memorialize Congress for legislation that will regulate women's dress. If Congress wants to close up shop, all it will have to do will be to levy a few more taxes and make a few more regulations restricting personal liberties and Congress will be successful.

Censors Invite Clergy to See Condemned Reels

THE pot is boiling in Winnipeg because the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors invited members of the Winnipeg Ministerial Association to see a private screening of condemned portions of moving pictures which had been examined by the censors. Objection was taken to this stunt by the local exhibitors on the ground that such an exhibition would tend to increase the prejudice on the part of some preachers against moving pictures as a whole.

The opinion has been expressed that the presentation of deleted sections of pictures without continuity or context would undoubtedly convey the wrong impression. The censors have also been asked why the objectionable film should be shown to the preachers and not to other people.

The Manitoba censors also recently notified two Winnipeg exhibitors that the continued use of "strong" newspaper advertising would lead to the cancellation of their theatre licenses. The theatre managers assert that the censors have no real authority in the matter and that the board is attempting to extend its own powers. A couple of local managers have submitted newspaper advertising to the censors for approval but the majority claim that the censor board has no jurisdiction.

One Winnipeg exhibitor recently "enjoyed" the distinction of having three comedies condemned in a row so that he was unable to show his complete program for three weeks as booked.

City Council Holds Up Construction of Theatre

DUE to objections against the proposed building of a moving picture theatre, which, it is said, will be exclusively for colored people, at 1610-12-14 Druid Hill avenue, Baltimore, Councilman McGuinn made a motion that the ordinance granting permisssion to John T. Murphy to construct this theatre be sent back to committee on Monday night, February 9, when it made its second appearance in the City Council.

It was sent back to committee so that an opportunity may be given the residents in the neighborhood and property holders near this site to be heard. Plans for this theatre have been drawn up by Oliver B. Wight, architect, Munsey Building, Baltimore, who designed the Parkway and McHenry theatres, and the theatre is to be erected by the Druid Theatre Company, which recently filed a certificate of incorporation. The capital stock of the company is $500,000 and the incorporators are Charles H. Knapp, Robert B. Ennis and Leo H. Miller. The offices of the company are at 1515 Fidelity Building.

According to the plans the theatre will measure 64 by 171 feet, will be two stories on the front and will be constructed of reinforced concrete and marble with a slag or composition roof. The seating capacity will be 1,500 and the cost of construction will be approximately $150,000. A dance hall on the roof of the theatre, provided in alternate plans to measure 64 by 75 feet, will cost probably over $50,000.

Government Gives Figures on Rental and Seat Taxes

RENTALS of moving picture films netted the Government $362,506.66 in taxes during the month of November, according to a report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In addition, the seating tax resulted in a revenue of $59,364.76 for the month, an increase of $41.831.32 over the collections of November, 1918, while the tax on admissions totaled $5,877,692.43, an increase of $3,891,249.27 over the sum collected during the same month of the preceding year.

Total collections during the month were $163,736,297.48. This was an increase of just under $37,000,000 over the amount collected during November, 1918, despite the fact that the Government lost $40,000,000 in liquor taxes through the operation of the war-time prohibition act.

Collections in which the moving picture industry is interested were freight, $9,714,884.58; express, $80,199.07; personal transportation, $7,514,645.34; seats, berths and staterooms, $889,474.61; long distance telephone and telegraph messages, $1,217,991.77.

Exonerate Indiana Man of Sabbath Desecration

CHARLES M. WALKER, proprietor of two motion picture theatres at Plymouth, Ind., who was arrested on December 28 charged with desecrating the Sabbath, has been recently exonerated of the charge by a jury in the circuit court there. The charges against Walker were brought by the Plymouth Ministerial Association.

The evidence in the case was very brief and the attorneys for the defense were so confident of acquittal that they were willing to submit the case to the jury without argument. Eighty-five men were examined before the jury was finally selected.

Walker, however, was not the only Indiana exhibitor who was victorious in the Sunday closing fight that is being waged in some sections of the state. Angelo Ghlarinda and Fred Howe, who operate a theatre at Cambridge City and who were arrested two weeks ago for operating their show on Sunday, were discharged by a jury in the Wayne county circuit court at Richmond. Their contention was that the show was given for charitable purposes and that a percentage of the proceeds was given to a charity fund.

The case of the state against Dolly Spurr, who operates the Lyric, Indiana and Royal-Grand theatres at Marion and who is charged with violating the Sunday closing law, will be tried in the Grant county circuit court on Wednesday, February 18. There are four separate charges against Miss Spurr for operating her theatres on Sunday.

Compares Censorship to Devil Screens in China

RUPERT HUGHES, one of the Eminent Authors associated with Goldwyn in the production of pictures, such as "The Cup of Fury," had some pertinent remarks to make on censorship at the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. He considers censorship very much like the devil screens in use in China. The National Board of Review does not believe in devils and that is why Rupert Hughes loves it.

"In China," says Mr. Hughes, "they erect devil screens in front of the houses on the theory that when the devils approach the house in a straight line they hit these screens and bounce off."

Mr. Hughes suggested this as a test of the alleged evil influence of the moving picture; take a community, he said, that never has had a moving picture theatre—in Italy, Spain or the heart of Africa—do girls go wrong there? Are some of the crimes and delinquencies to be found there which some people in the United States are fond of ascribing to the motion picture?

"Consider what Bradford said in his history of New England," said Mr. Hughes. "After relating how pure and religious were the motives from which the colony was founded, by a group of people who left the shores of the wicked Old World and sought in the wilderness to establish a state free from corrupting influences, he plaintively confessed the result—that crimes had multiplied in this new haven to an extent so far exceeding their number in the places they had left that this condition could be accounted for only by the extra overtime efforts of Satan."

And the Pilgrims, as Mr. Hughes pointed out, were not subjected to modern temptations such as magazines, light evening gowns, fox trots—and motion pictures.

"Manager Wanted" is an advertisement frequently appearing in The World's Classified department. Give it a try and better your position.

in Short Snappy Statements

Here's the Very Latest in Exhibitor Taxation

THE theatre managers of Sherbrooke, Quebec, are taxed by the local municipality a "commission" of $1 on every real of 2.000 admission tickets used in the box office of a theatre. Because of this requirement, a tax is paid on admission tickets used at the local theatres in two different ways. One is the regular admission tax which is paid by patrons and the other is the special additional tax which is collected on each reel of tickets used.

R. L. Vallee, proprietor of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke, has complained vigorously against the new tax and has asked for advice from exhibitors in other cities in Canada. Mr. Vallee has been getting it hot and heavy for more than a year because of prosecutions over the holding of Sunday performances in the Casino. The charge of violating the Lord's Day Act against him has been hanging fire for a year, but a final decision is expected shortly as Judge Alfred Desy of the Court of King's Bench has promised an early judgment.

$250,000 Theatre for Knoxville.

The construction of a new motion picture theatre, which will exploit First National attractions at Knoxville, Tenn., has been announced by Frank H. Dowler, Jr., secretary and manager of the Signal Amusement Company.

Work on the new playhouse, which will cost approximately $250,000 will begin about May 1, according to plans. It will have a total seating capacity of 2,500 nearly 1,800 of which will be arranged on the main floor. Special heating and cooling systems will be installed. A twenty piece orchestra and a $30,000 organ will provide elaborate musical programs.

The Signal Amusement Company has obtained a sixty year lease on the site for the theatre, which will probably be called the Rivoli.

Police Captain Aided New York Exhibitors

THE thanks of every exhibitor as well as of the general public of Greater New York are due Captain James Cooper, chief of the telegraph bureau of the police department, for the transportation of film during the recent crisis which the combined forces of influenza and the big snow storm precipitated.

Mayor Hylan's order restricting the use of trucks except for carrying fuel and food resulted in film delivery trucks being held up by the police while on their way from the exchanges to the theatres. H. H. Buxbaum, manager of Famous Players-Lasky's New York exchange, appreciating that this was the time when nothing should be left undone to hold up the public morale, called up the station house in his district and was referred to Captain Cooper at headquarters.

When the matter was explained to him, Captain Cooper said that in case the police officers continued to hold up the film trucks the drivers should refer the officers to himself. This was communicated to the various film exchanges and there was no further trouble.

Sidney Cohen Addresses Directors.

At the regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, Sidney S. Cohen outlined a method whereby a closer co-operation between the exhibitor and the director would work out to the ultimate advantage of both the producer, the man who directs the picture and the exhibitor.

The address included many excellent suggestions as to how the plan outlined could be put into action, which were enthusiastically applauded. Many of the members, after the meeting, sought further information.

Goossen Becomes Art Director.

Stephen Goossen, nationally known as an architect, has been engaged as art director by Harry Rapf, West Coast production manager for the Selznick interests. In 1911, he was awarded the scholarship gold medal by the New York Association of Architects from competitors from the United States, Canada and England.

More recently Mr. Goossen has specialized in the designing of expensive homes. One of his recent assignments was the executing of plans for the home of a well-known automobile manufacturer which will cost $1,500,000 to build.

Byron Morgan Signs Contract.

Byron Morgan, popular fiction writer of Saturday Evening Post fame, has just signed a long term contract as a member of the scenario staff at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky, according to an announcement made by Charles F. Eyton, general manager of the corporation's production activities in the West.

Mr. Morgan has been at work on the adaptation of "The Hippopotamac Parade," the first motor truck story in fiction. Wallace Reid will start on this picture under the direction of Sam Wood as soon as "Sick Abed" is completed.

Some Theatres Close in Southern Michigan

INFLUENZA and pneumonia have hit some of the smaller towns in southern Michigan hard and the result has been that quite a number of the theatres in that section of the state are closed. In Detroit the "flu" has reached its peak and the number of cases is now on the downward grade. At no time, however, during the epidemic was there any effort made by local or state officials to close the motion picture houses.

All theatres have for sometime been showing a slide in co-operation with the Detroit Board of Health, urging people to be careful—and to sneeze in their handkerchiefs. For a few weeks attendance at the motion picture houses was "off," but business has regained its normal stride and managers are reporting satisfactory conditions.

Bankruptcy Proceedings Are Instituted Against Waldorf

SAMUEL H. KAUFMAN has been appointed ancillary receiver at New York of the assets of the Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd., which was engaged in the production of motion pictures in Boston, which were released through the Republic Distributing Corporation.

Bankruptcy proceedings were instituted against the corporation in Boston by David G. Fischer, who asserts a claim of $9,897 for salary and advances and $40,000 for alleged breach of contract; Dixie Lee, who asserts a claim of $2,200 for salary and advances and $4,800 for alleged breach of contract, and George M. Carleton, who asserts a claim of $786 for salary and expenses and $2,400 for alleged breach of contract.

It is alleged in the bankruptcy petition that the corporatian recently transferred its assets to a company incorporated under the style of the Waldorf Photoplays, Inc., with intent to evade the creditors of the debtor corporation.

Among the assets of the debtor corporation were the following photo plays: "Kismet," "Where Bonds Are Loosed" and "Dad's Girl." The receiver is taking steps to collect the percentage of the receipts due the producing company from the distributing company and marshal any other assets which may be located in this jurisdiction.

The liabilities of the corporation are reported to be approximately $100,000, including the contingent claims for alleged breach of contract, and the assets are indeterminate, depending upon the amount realized from the distribution of the motion pictures produced by the company, which are now being exhibited.

Adler Goes to Indianapolis

Bert Adler, recently connected with the publicity department of Realart, is now a resident of Indianapolis, associated with S. Barret McCormick as publicity director of the Circle Theatre, "the shrine of the silent art."

"Captain Swift" Being Completed.

Earle Williams' last scenes for his next Vitagraph production, "Captain Swift," are now being completed by Director Chester Bennett at the Hollywood studios and on location near San Diego. Another ideal location for Australian exteriors has been found at Palmdale, Cal., in the Mojave desert, and many scenes particularly fitted to this back ground will be taken at this point. Kangaroos and other typically Australian animals have been obtained for the scenes. Only the prologue for "Captain Swift" is being made at Vitagraph's West Coast studio.

Ince Arrives February 21; to Speak at Columbia

THOMAS H. INCE, who arrives in New York Saturday, February 21, has been invited by the faculty of Columbia University to address the Photoplay Class on Monday evening, February 23. The occasion will mark the first time this compliment has ever been extended to a motion picture producer. Its advantages to students of photoplay technique will be of the greatest value for they will hear every angle of the scenario question discussed by a veteran producer.

The subject of Mr. Ince's talk will be the "Great Opportunity Confronting Screen Authors." It is his intention to give his audience first hand information such as could only come from intimate contact with the subject and with his hearers as well.

Mr. Ince purposes to tell precisely what the writer must furnish to please the public and wherein the original story, if it answers the requirements of the producer, answers more satisfactorily the question of what the public wants than the picturization of a novel or stage play.

Preparations are being made to accommodate several times the number of students in the class, Mr. Ince's acceptance of the invitation by wire having awakened interest throughout the University.

"River's End" Has De Luxe Premier Before Canadian Club at Biltmore

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production, "The River's End," an adaptation from James Oliver Curwood's popular novel of the Canadian Northwest, was given a de luxe premier before 1,000 members of the Canadian Club and friends in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Biltmore, New York, Monday evening, February 16.

A view from the balcony of the ball room offered one of the most auspicious settings ever given the debut of a motion picture. Seated at as many tables as could be crowded into the immense hall, men in evening dress and women in beautiful gowns offered a striking color contrast to the gold and grey appointments of the ball room, with its mirrored walls reflecting a thousand times the splendor of the gathering.

In view of the fact that the entire plot of "The River's End" is laid in Canada and involves the Royal Mounted Police, it was particularly appropriate that this premier should take place before the members of the Canadian Club, comprising on its membership roster the names of many prominent persons in civic and social affairs of New York and throughout Canada.

Has Special Musical Score.

Preceding the showing a sumptuous dinner was served. At 9.30 o'clock with the sound of a bugle call the lights were slowly dimmed as the orchestra took up the opening prelude to the presentation. Featured in the musical prelude was the rendition of the song, "The River's End," inspired by the picture and sung by Harold Hoch, the author. From a balcony, Grace Hansen, a beautiful and talented artist, took up the theme of the song with the accompaniment of a violinist, and enhanced by various lighting effects.

With the conclusion of the prelude a leader was run off disclosing telegrams from Mr. Neilan and Mr. Curwood in which they expressed their regrets at not being able to attend and voiced their pleasure over the fact that the picture was receiving its premier before the Canadian Club.

The picture was then shown, accompanied by a special musical score, which accented the merits of the film, as did the excellent projection under the supervision of Thomas G. Wiley and Will C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company.

Wire Neilan Congratulations.

Immediately following the presentation various prominent Canadians dispatched telegrams to Mr. Neilan, congratulating him on the great success of the picture on this occasion and predicting a particularly bright future for it.

Arthur Knowlson, president of the club, wired Mr. Neilan as follows: "Premier of 'The River's End' before Canadian Club tremendous success. Everyone immensely pleased with your wonderful production, which will surely prove a triumph for the motion picture art. You are to be congratulated on this achievement which thoroughly warranted the ovation given it here tonight by the assembled members and guests."

Arrangements for the affair were handled by Peter Gridley Smith of the Neilan organization, in conjunction with the entertainment committee of the Canadian Club. Among the motion picture people present were: Mr. and Mrs. Millard Johnston, Australia; E. B. Johnson, Turner & Dahnken; Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. J. Klein, Ernest Shipman, Mr. and Mrs. David Howells, Louella O. Parsons, J. M. McCaffory, Lilian W. Brennan, Joseph Dannenberg, Mr. and Mrs. George Blaisdell, James Beecroft, Lawrence Reid, Tom Terris, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. F. Rothenberg.

One of the Biggest Pre-Release Showings Ever Arranged, Marshall Neilan's "The River's End," at the Biltmore.

Because of the setting in Canadian country, this First National feature was shown first to the Canadian Club on the evening of February 16.

Charles Ray Soon to Start Work on "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway"

FORTY-FIVE Minutes From Broadway," the famous George M. Cohan play that made a name and a fortune for its producer, has been purchased by Arthur S. Kane as the vehicle for Charles Ray's initial First National attraction.

Negotiations were concluded last week by the producing company for the screen rights to the famous stage success, and Ray will begin work on his first independent film as soon as he returns from a short vacation in the California hills.

"Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" is a name to conjure with among famous stage plays that have become American theatrical institutions. In securing for Charles Ray a title that is known everywhere because of its brilliant stage associations, the Kane corporation is fulfilling the promise made at its inception to present Ray in unbeatable combinations—one of the greatest stars of the day plus big vehicles and great stories—as the introductory contribution to the industry.

Fits Ray's Personality.

"Charles Ray is due for a home run," was the comment of President Kane following the announcement of Ray's first production for First National distribution. "If there's a story that better fits Ray's lovable and appealing personality than the tale that George M. Cohan made famous up and down the country, we have given up hope of coming across it.

"'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway' is as bright as gold dollars fresh from the mint. It simply sparkles and there isn't any doubt that if the play was a classic on the stage it's going to be immortal on the screen. Ray has been seeking just such an opportunity for a long time, to put a national favorite of this type on the screen, and he feels that he has ample room with this story to do something really big and lasting.

"Just mention this piece of news to the average picture fan—Charlie Ray in 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway'—and see the result. Ray is going to create a screen character that will live. This First National picture will make photoplay history."

Play Had Spectacular Career.

One hundred thousand dollars was the profit to the producers for the George M. Cohan play in the first nine months, alone, of a spectacular stage career that extended over five seasons and made it an immediate necessity to send out road companies to the western, central and eastern parts of the country. The Cohan stage production, which played a solid year at the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York, was credited with being one of the biggest money makers in recent theatrical history, the unusual attraction being attributed to the rough and ready humanness of the character who gave to a humorous story tears and laughter and all the genuine situations that go to make up real life.

The reputation of the play, built up season after season by companies which continued to stage it in cities from coast to coast, is an unusually valuable advertising asset today, in the opinion of First National officials. Such was the impression made by the play during its extensive run over five seasons that publicity on the film will be in the nature of a continuance of a definite reputation that is permanently associated with the title, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway."

To Benefit by Past Publicity.

The additional value that comes with Charles Ray's determination to do the story adequately for the screen makes the news of the production of strong interest to picture patronage everywhere. The new sponsors of Ray's work declare that he not only agrees with their desire to see him continue in the winning screen character with which the industry has come to associate his name, but he is also anxious to take advantage of the added benefits of a well-known story vehicle, such as the forthcoming First National picture will be.

The selection of George M. Cohan's play for Ray's first offering under his new affiliations is causing favorable comment as being an especially fine vehicle for the star's honest-to-goodness personality.

British Army Barracks Reproduced in Detail

BRITISH army barracks in the city of Peshawur, the strongest fort in India, have been reproduced in exact scale by Metro technicians for "The Hope," the Drury Lane melodrama now being picturized by Screen Classics, Inc., at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Second only in size to the Pekin street of "The Red Lantern," this East Indian cantonment is one of the largest sets ever constructed by Metro. It is 500 feet long and 150 feet wide. There are seven barracks buildings, each fifty feet high. The gateway to Peshawur from the Khyber Pass road is also part of the setting. The cantonment was built at the old Universal ranch under the supervision of A. W. Alley. He was assisted by H. R. M. Maddock who, as a British soldier, was for some time housed in these Peshawur barracks.

Director Herbert Blache will take scenes showing the return of British soldiers after a victory over Afghanistan troops. The battle was photographed in Santa Susanna Pass several weeks ago. Scenes on a street of Peshawur were recently photographed.

"Tarnished Reputations" Is Dolores Cassinelli's Next

DOLORES CASSINELLI, whose last big Pathe successes were "The Web of Deceit," "The Right to Lie," and "The Virtuous Model," will make her next appearance under the Pathe banner, in a Leonce Perret Production, "Tarnished Reputations," which has been set for release on March 14. Mme Alice Blache directed. She has handled this story of a woman's struggle written by Mr. Perret himself in a manner that brings out most convincingly the woman's angle.

A small but select cast assists Miss Cassinelli. Albert Roscoe, George Deneubourg and Ned Burton comprise the support.

As is the case in a Leonce Perret production, the settings when the occasion presents, are lavish and highly artistic. The lighting effects are beyond the ordinary. Particularly effective are the artist's studio scenes. An entire street was built in the Perret studio in order that the director might obtain the proper lighting effects for some night pictures.

"In Old Kentucky" Breaks Record.

"The exhibitor gleanings in the motion picture business often amount to as much as the initial harvesting," says L. R. Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Downs referred to his recent experience with "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart and distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. After the Strand, Metropolitan and Orpheum Theatres had run this attraction simultaneously, Mr. Downs applied to the First National Exchange for a booking.

"You can't play a big picture out in a week," said Mr. Downs. "Why, the advertising I'll get from word-to-mouth sources will enable me to attract crowds."

His philosophy proved correct. "In Old Kentucky," broke every record in the history of his house.

Associated Producers May Market Own Product, Says Director Read

COINCIDENT with the announcement by wire from Los Angeles of the appointment of J. Parker Read Jr., as general business representative of the Associated Producers, Mr. Read telegraphed a special statement to Moving Picture World in response to its query relative to the distribution plans of the "Big Six."

The naming of Mr. Read for the important post of business manager is the first definite step taken by the Associated Producers toward formulating plans for a releasing scheme that will operate for the interests of the producing directors who compose that organization—an organization whose activities, incidentally, have been watched with perhaps greater interest than any other motion picture development of the hour.

In company with Thomas H. Ince and Marshall Neilan Mr. Read left Los Angeles on Tuesday morning, February 17. The trio were to arrive in New York on Saturday morning for the conference of the "Big Six" that is to determine their future policies, and which will eventualize in the announcement of a combined system of distribution.

May Distribute Themselves.

"Whatever the plan for the marketing of the Associated Producers' pictures will be," wires Mr. Read, "it will be decided upon in New York. Despite rumors and reports to the contrary, nothing has been done as yet and no new contracts have been signed.

"Of course, the Associated Producers have received offers from every importtant distributing corporation in the industry—and, it goes without saying, from many of the smaller companies as well.

"Present indications are, however, that the producers will form their own exclusive system of distribution and will market their productions direct to the exhibitor. This is not definite, on the other hand, and the meeting in New York may develop an entirely different attitude on the part of the members of the organization."

Mr. Read stated, also, that actual detail organization will follow immediately upon the conference of the "Big Six," which is composed of Thomas H. Ince, president; Mack Sennett, treasurer; Allan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur and George Loane Tucker.

Allan Dwan already is in New York with Mark Larkin, his representative George Loane Tucker is here also.

Mr. Read brings with him from the West Coast a print of "Sex," Miss Louise Glaum's third super-film in seven reels, directed by Fred Niblo and with an all-star supporting cast that is said to rival that of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

Reservations have been made at the Claridge for the "Big Six."

Pictures Via Simplex Entertained President

RECENT newspaper articles touching on President Wilson's condition speak particularly of his great interest in viewing motion pictures that are shown him in the East Room of the White House. Always an ardent patron of the theatre, the President feels that the amusement afforded by the screen does much toward aiding his condition during the convalescing period, and the showing of entertaining dramatic and news weekly subjects are a part of the program in the President's household.

The President, who was interested in motion pictures while going back and forth to the Peace Conference in Paris on the U. S. S. George Washington, which had three Simplex projectors, has been using a Simplex during his convalescence at his official home. The installation was made under the personal supervision of Edwin S. Porter, vice president of the Precision Machine Company.

In order that nothing should mar the tile floor nor the furnishing of the East Room where the presidential showings take place, a special truck was devised, equipped with rubber-tired wheels upon which is mounted a battleship-grey, nickel-trimmed Type "S" motor-driven Simplex. This truck, when the machine is not in use, is kept in one of the White House storerooms.

Advertisers Vote to Aid Americanization Work

THE Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, of New York, at its weekly luncheon on February 11, voted unanimously to co-operate actively with Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, in the Americanization campaign. This was decided upon after C. C. Pettijohn had outlined the situation with regard to motion pictures and Americanization.

After the vote had been taken, Chairman Paul Gulick announced that a committee composed of members of the A. M. P. A. would meet at noon on February 17 at the Claridge to discuss the appointment of a special A. M. P. A. committee on Americanization to handle all trailers and other motion picture propaganda for the furtherance of Americanism.

"We have 250,000 feet of these trailers," said Mr. Pettijohn. "These will have to be assembled and others prepared. It is my belief that this matter should be handled by a committee from the A. M. P. A."

The A. M. P. A. voted to communicate with Harriette Underhill, who is ill at Lake Saranac, and express the hope that she soon would return to her post as motion picture critic for the New York Tribune.

Buffalo Managers Elect.

The annual election of officers of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers Association was held on Friday, February 13. The new officers of the ensuing year are: J. E. Kimberly, manager of the Republic office, president; Henry W. Kahn, Metro exchange manager, vice president; P. H. Smith, manager of the First National office, treasurer; C. A. Taylor, Pathe booster, secretary, and Warner Bates, executive secretary.

A committee was appointed to investigate film thefts and alleged abuses, such as keeping films overtime, sub-letting, etc. This committee is composed of Henry W. Kahn, C. A. Taylor, W. P. Allen, Vitagraph; and F. D. Lawlor, Hallmark.

Those Who Haven't Believed It Heretofore Will Hafta Believe It Now.

Metro to Build Big Studios in East; To Get More Stars and Scenarists

EXPANSION plans involving among other things the immediate construction of new studios in the East and enlargement of its plant on the West Coast are announced by Metro Pictures Corporation with the return of its president, Richard A. Rowland, from California to New York.

Additions and improvements to the Metro studios in Hollywood, already under way, will call for the expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars. The proposed erection of a complete production plant in the neighborhood of New York will run to a figure far in excess of the amount spent in the West.

Metro further announces that its scenario department is to be trebled in size and made more imposing in personnel by the acquisition of several playwrights of national reputation. Moreover, the company is about to add a number of successful stage plays and noteworthy novels to the material it has acquired for screen production.

New stars also are to be added to Metro's galaxy in the very near future; so that viewed from every angle, the recent Western trip of the organization's president, in company with Marcus Loew, head of Loew's Inc., has been fruitful of large results.

Karger in New York.

Returning from Los Angeles with Mr. Rowland was Maxwell Karger, director general for Metro and Screen Classics, Inc. Mr. Karger, who for more than a year had been in sole charge of all production activities on the West Coast, is now permanently located in New York. He will reopen Metro's present New York studios, in Sixty-first street, just off Columbus Circle, within the ensuing fortnight as supervisor of several important screen productions.

Three or four sites are now under consideration for the new studios to be erected near New York. Selection of one has not as yet been definitely decided upon. The choice arrived at will be made public as soon as full title is acquired, and building work will start immediately thereafter. Metro officials make it known, however, that parcels of land on Long Island and also in New York state, along the Hudson, have been looked over and are being compared with a view to greatest accessibility and surroundings.

Buys More Land on Coast.

On the West Coast Metro has just acquired title to Rose Hill Park, a tract of sixty-three acres on the outskirts of Los Angeles City. This heavily wooded park, with an open space of six acres, will be utilized for panoramic exteriors and for the putting up of special outdoor settings, such as temples, streets and sometimes even complete villages.

A third dark stage is being built at the Hollywood studios and additional office building are going up to house the increasing executive, technical and clerical staff.

Bayard Veiller, the successful dramatist, author of "Within the Law," "The Thirteenth Chair," and "The Fight," has been engaged by Metro as contributing member of its scenario staff. He will write original screen dramas as well as construct continuity. Other well-known playwrights are to be added.

The identity of Metro's new stars will be made public within a short while. With its enlarged studios in Hollywood able to accommodate from twelve to fifteen companies at one time and the two studios in the East with equal facilities, Metro is making its plans to be able to produce from twenty-five to thirty special productions at once.

Rowland Pleased with Conditions.

"I found everything running smoothly," said Mr. Rowland in speaking about Metro's prospects. "The entire organization is imbued with a spirit of zeal and confidence that promises big things for Metro. The enthusiasm that was everywhere apparent made an instant impression upon Mr. Loew when we went through the plant. He was astonished and pleased by his first view of our large motion picture producing establishment in full operation.

"Mr. Loew likened the Metro studios to be a beehive. It certainly is a busy place, where every effort is bent upon a consistently conscientious endeavor to turn out better and better pictures."

Marcus Loew remained on the Coast after the departure of Mr. Rowland. Mr. Loew went to San Francisco to look after some of his theatre interests in the Bay City, which are taken care of by Ackerman & Harris. Maxwell Karger and his family accompanied the Metro president on his return trip.

Staulcup Supervises Changes.

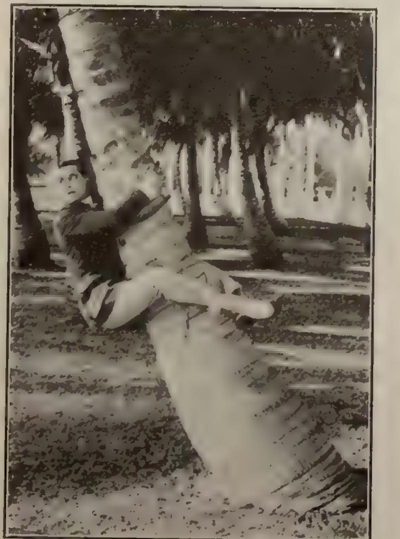
Meanwhile M. P. Staulcup, supervisor of art interiors, came on to New York in advance of Mr. Karger to prepare the Sixty-first street studios for him and make the necessary changes.

Mr. Karger did not say what will be his first production in the East. This will be announced after he has had an opportunity to look things over.

Among the early productions, however, will be "Polly with a Past," starring Ina Claire.

Final arrangements for the production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Metro's picturization of the big novel by Senor Vicente Blasco Ibanez, are still somewhat unsettled, owing, among other things, to the recent illness of the novelist, who is to give his personal co-operation to the making of the picture.

William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, will remain at the studios in Hollywood for perhaps a fortnight longer, when he will return to New York, leaving Joseph W. Engel, treasurer, in charge.



Rare Study in Trees.

Taylor Holmes has just glimpsed an alligator—pardon—shark—while at Miami filming his Metro, "The Very Idea."

William Worthington Is Now Allied with Haworth

WILLIAM WORTHINGTON, organizer of the Haworth Picture Corporation, who directed many of the most striking successes of Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese star, notably Hayakawa's two last plays, "The Tongman" and "The Beggar Prince," and who is also director of Bryant Washburn feature pictures for Pathe and Mae Marsh pictures for Goldwyn, has resigned his connections on the West Coast to fulfil a contract with Gibraltar Pictures, of which Arthur F. Beck is president. By the terms of the contract he will direct the new series of pictures from Louis Tracey novels to be produced by the Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., the newest Gibraltar producing unit.

The Tracey series with an all-star cast will open with "The Silent Barrier," noted as one of the best action stories Mr. Tracey has written. Production has been commenced at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J. Virgil Miller, Mr. Worthington's chief cameraman in all his work on the Pacific Coast, has also joined the organization.

The Louis Tracy series built on Tracy novels will include, in addition to "The Silent Barrier," "The Bartlett Mystery," "His Unknown Wife," "Diana of the Moorland," "Cynthia's Chauffeur," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Years," "The Terms of Surrender," "Flower of the Gorse," "The Revelers," "The Postmaster's Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas," and "Carl Krier."

"The Law Bringers" Changes Cast.

Two players in the cast of "The Law Bringers," the current Ralph Ince production, have been switched in parts, according to D. L'Estrange, casting director at the Selznick studios.

P. C. Hartigan, who had the role of "Robinson," has now been assigned the part of "Ducane" and Harry L. Southard is assigned the role of Robinson, after originally having been cast as Ducane.

Three Anti-Outlaw Measures in Congress Stand Slim Chance of Being Considered

THE Washington Bureau of the Moving Picture World, following the appearance in the newspapers of a press service report that Congress had enacted additional legislation dealing with motion pictures, received a large number of inquiries from interested exhibitors, exchange managers an producers, anxious to learn of the authenticity of the report.

The story was to the effect that the Senate was considering and the House had passed a bill "prohibiting the bringing into the United States and the carrying and transporting therein, from one state, territory, or district, to another state, territory, or district, of pictures, films, moving picture film or films, purporting to show or to simulate the acts and conduct of ex-convicts desperadoes, bandits, train robbers, bank robbers or outlaws, in the commission or attempted commission of crime or acts of violence, and to prohibit the use of the mails in carrying communications relating to the same, and providing punishment therefor."

Little Likelihood of Passing.

Three bills of this nature are pending in Congress, two in the House and one in the Senate. There seems very little likelihood of any action being taken on them, according to the best information obtainable by this bureau. In the first place, the Senate and House find themselves confronted with too much far more important legislation to take up a matter of this type.

The bill that did pass the House, and which was really involved in the press report, has been sponsored by Representative Walsh, of Massachusetts. It made motion picture films subject to the same laws as immoral, lewd and lascivious pictures and post cards. This is legislation that was desired by the industry, and had no relation at all to the bill dealing with "Wild West" subjects.

The World bureau is keeping a close watch on legislative developments, and expects to be able to give early advice of any movement in Congress to enact laws having a bearing on the motion picture industry. In connection with the story that caused all this stir it has ascertained that Subcommittee No. 1, of the House Committee on the Judiciary, to which the bills were referred for consideration, has not taken them up as yet.

"Other Men's Shoes" Has Warm Welcome in Indiana

WHILE the influenza epidemic was raging in Fort Wayne, Ind., and business was at its most depressed stage, Edgar Lewis's big Pathe special, "Other Men's Shoes," had its premiere public showing in the United States at the Jefferson Theatre, Fort Wayne. In spite of the most adverse conditions, which included one of the worst storms in the annals of Indiana, the production made a great showing and induced W. C. Quimby, managing director of the Jefferson Theatre, to dispatch the following wire to the Pathe home office:

"Despite inclement weather and general depression in business due to influenza epidemic, 'Other Men's Shoes' played in Jefferson Theatre to enormous business, exceeding all expectations on extended run booking. Receipts built daily, demonstrating that they were talking about the production. Nothing but highest praise heard. Am delighted with results and tender congratulations to Pathe for having such an excellent attraction. Also my hat off to my friend Edgar Lewis. He has given the theatre a real feature again."

Mr. Quimby exploited "Other Men's Shoes" with greater forcefulness than he has backed any picture he has played this year. Conditions were such that he had to have a mighty good attraction to run up his box-office figures, for people of Fort Wayne were shy of theatre-going because of the spread of influenza.

Somebody Said the Hobo Was Going, So Frank Keenan Thought He'd Make Him Stay.

And he "stays" via. the celluloid film and Keenan's starring vehicle, "Smoldering Embers," for Pathe.

Frisco Critics Praise "Soldiers of Fortune"

GUILTY of success in the first degree" was the unanimous verdict returned recently by a jury of San Francisco newspaper critics in the case of "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, when shown at the Imperial Theatre. The verdict was a popular one. Charged with having broken house records wherever shown and with having broken the peace by causing crowds to collect, the defendant was convicted. The jurors did not even leave their seats.

Writing in the San Francisco Examiner, Buford G. Bennett said: "Anyone who has read 'Soldiers of Fortune' is fortunate; anyone who sees 'Soldiers of Fortune' at the Imperial is fortunate; and anyone who has read the book and has then seen the picture is doubly fortunate."

In the San Francisco Chronicle, Thomas W. Baily gave his opinion in the following emphatic terms: "Allan Dwan's first big production under the Mayflower and Realart banners is a filmatization of 'Soldiers of Fortune,' Richard Harding Davis' thrilling story of South American love, romance and chivalry. Filled from the first foot of film to the final fadeout with thrills of every kind, it is a photoplay offering that is bound to suit the movie fan or the booklover."

The San Francisco Call, Curran D. Swint wrote: "It was to be expected that Richard Harding Davis' 'Soldiers of Fortune' would make a motion picture far out of the ordinary should its picturization be attempted. It has been attempted—and done—and yesterday at the Imperial Theatre, where it had its first local presentation, the expectation just mentioned was carried to an eminently satisfying conclusion."

Second National Picture Is Now in Cutting Room

BLIND YOUTH," the second National Theatres production, has been cut and is now being assembled, according to Harry Rapf, West Coast production manager for the Selznick Enterprises. This story was taken from the play by Lou Telegen and Willard Mack. The screen version was directed by Edward Sloman.

As announced before all National Pictures productions are featuring excellent casts. As proof of this statement National Pictures offers, this week, a list of the members of the cast of "Blind Youth." The more prominent members are Walter McGrail, Ora Carewe, Leatrice Joy.

Clara Horton, who is in her tenth year in pictures, although she is but sixteen years old, is another member of the cast. The cast also includes Colin Kenny, Buddy Post, Claire McDowell, Joseph Swickard and Leo White.

Pathe, in India Since Cradle Days of Films, Now Strongly Intrenched

AMERICAN motion pictures have gained a hold on the film market in India, according to Alex. Hague, manager of the Pathe motion picture interests in India, who recently arrived in the United States. Mr. Hague makes his headquarters in Bombay, where, to accommodate the ever-increasing business there, Pathe recently erected a three-story building devoted entirely to its motion picture business.

Serials have a strong appeal to the people of India, according to Mr. Hague, and one of the reasons for his visit here was to arrange for the exploitation of the new Pathe serials, "The Black Secret," "Bound and Gagged," and "The Adventures of Ruth." Owing to the limited number of theatres in India, the majority of features released in this country find no outlet; but there, all the good continued plays are very popular.

Bombay "Wonderful Big City."

"Americans have a strange conception of India and Indians," said Mr. Hague. "On my arrival here, I met an American business man, who marveled at the wonderful time people of Bombay must have riding around on elephants, and enjoying other most extraordinary things. We have not seen an elephant in Bombay in years. Why, it is a wonderful, big city, with what the people of England would call skyscrapers, and with a population that is just as metropolitan and cosmopolitan as can be found any place in the world."

It was in 1907 that the French firm, true to their progressive methods, opened a branch in India. In those days the office was situated in Calcutta, with a small branch in Bombay. The venture did not prove very successful and the Calcutta office was closed in 1910.

The firm, however, did not lose heart, and opened again in December of the same year, but transferred their head office to Bombay. In those days, of course, the demand for films was much smaller than it is now and the present manager relates that when he opened the Bombay office the entire outfit consisted of but one projecting machine and about sixty films, which he himself brought from the Singapore office of the firm.

Well Located Now.

From that time the success of the Indian office was never in doubt and spacious premises in Hornby Road were taken over just a year after the first opening. The management early realized that the termination of the war would inevitably cause a greatly increased demand for cinematograph films and machinery, and they therefore determined to erect their own premises.

Thus it is that today the film of Pathe is housed in a handsome building which has been especially constructed for them on the Ballard Estate, within a stone's throw of the new pier and railway station.

Dr. Hespe Urges New Jersey to Support Sunday Opening

DR. CHARLES HESPE, president of the New Jersey Exhibitors League, was invited to address the F. I. L. M. Club at their meeting held in the Mecca Building, New York, on Wednesday evening February 18, on the Sunday opening question, in the state of New Jersey. Dr. Hespe stated that Sunday opening is a live and not a dead issue, receiving more attention, editorially, than any other public question.

He deplored the fact that the motion picture industry, as a whole, exhibitors and filmmen generally had "fallen down" on the issue, while the Lord's Day Alliance and kindred associations were waging an active campaign against Sunday movies.

Unless the New Jersey exhibitors awake to concerted action and show their interest in the movement there is little hope of passing a bill favorable to Sunday pictures, according to Dr. Hespe. At the present time fifty per cent. of the public are in favor of them and many of the church element will vote for the bill. Dr. Hespe made a strong appeal that the industry get busy, writing their representatives and getting up petitions supporting the bill. He expressed the hope that the industry would attend the hearing on the bill in a body.

After Dr. Hespe had finished his address, the F. I. L. M. men passed a resolution, pledging their full support and co-operation.

Dr. Hespe afterwards said: "I feel very much encouraged by my conference with the F. I. L. M. Club and will work with renewed effort."

Pickford-Wilkenning Suit Again.

Mary Pickford lived up to her sobriquet as "America's Sweetheart" by demurring to the suit recently instituted against her in the United States District Court by Mrs. Cora Wilkenning to recover $112,625.

Miss Pickford, through her counsel, raises the legal proposition that the plaintiff is foreclosed from pressing her suit having already done so in the Supreme Court, where the popular actress scored a handy victory.

Sad to relate, Judge Knox did not accede to Miss Pickford's idea and consequently she will have to defend the action once more at a trial in the Federal Court.

Makes Comedy with Newspaper Flavor.

The new Rolin comedy, with "Snub" Pollard, the "pint sized comedian," which will be released by Pathe February 29 is entitled "Find the Girl." "Snub" is assisted by his new leading woman, Marie Mosquini and Eddie Boland. "Sunshine Sambo," the diminutive colored actor, further demonstrates his comedy ability by his antics with a little Chinese kid, who is a new comer to filmdom. Most of the scenes are laid in a newspaper office. The fun that Pollard injects into his role of a reporter shows that the little comedian can get screaming humor out of any situation he is given to handle.

Get Behind "Americanization" With Slides and Trailers on Your Screen

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary of the Interior until March 1, and Chairman of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, has just completed writing the trailers that are to be used in connection with the campaign against Bolshevism. The trailers are all quotations from Lincoln, and Secretary Lane asks that the exhibitors of the country use them on their screens immediately.

The trailers that are being made will be furnished to the various exchange centers and will be attached to feature pictures. Harry M. Crandall, chairman of the Exhibitors' Branch of the General Committee, says: "There is no reason why a large majority of the exhibitors cannot begin immediately the using of these Lincoln quotations.

"Slides can be made without much trouble and should be shown immediately. In all of these slides it is suggested that we use a fac-simile of Lincoln's handwriting.

"This can be found in any Abraham Lincoln book. He usually signed his name 'A. Lincoln.'

"It is essential that each individual exhibitor take upon himself the responsibility of using these quotations either as trailers or as slides. They have been selected after much study by Secretary Lane, and we owe it to our Government to get behind this great movement and to make it a success.

"We have had a good start and the eyes of the whole country are watching us. We cannot fall down at this time if every exhibitor will do his share."

Secretary Lane declared that he was very much pleased at the manner in which the campaign opened on Lincoln's Birthday. The following are the quotations that have been written:

Lincoln on Mob Law

There is no grievance that is a fit subject of redress by mob law.

A. LINCOLN.

Hear What Lincoln Said!

In a democracy, where the majority rules by the ballot through the forms of law, physical rebellions are radically wrong, unconstitutional, and are treason.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln on Suspicion

Suspicion and jealousy never did help any man in any situation.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln on Women

God bless the women of America.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln on Public Opinion

With public sentiment, nothing can fail; without it, nothing can succeed.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Belief in the People

This country with all its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Modesty

Others have been made fools of by the girls, but this can never be said of me; I made a fool of myself.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln on Capital and Labor

Capitol is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln to His Mother

All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my mother.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Religion

When any church will inscribe over its altar, as its sole qualification for membership, the Savior's condensed statement of both law and gospel, that church will I join with all my heart and soul.

A. LINCOLN.

As True Today as Then

If all that has been said by orators and poets since the creation in praise of women were applied to the women of America it would not do them full justice for their conduct during the war.

A. LINCOLN.

Ballots vs. Bullets

Among freemen there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Confidence

Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world?

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln, Friend of the Poor

It is a cheering thought throughout life, that something can be done to ameliorate the condition of those who have been subjected to the hard usages of the world.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Test

It is not "Can any of us imagine better?" but "Can we do better?"

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Resolution

Many free countries have lost their liberties and ours may lose hers; but, if she shall, be it my proudest boast, not that I was the last to desert, but that I never deserted her.

A. LINCOLN.

In Time of Stress

My advice is to keep cool.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Method

Answer with facts, not with arguments.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln's Faith

I look to the American people and to that God who has never forsaken them.

A. LINCOLN.

Lincoln on Bolshevism

We shall sooner have the fowl by hatching the egg than by smashing it.

A. LINCOLN.

Hear What Lincoln Said!

Mercy bears richer rewards than strict justice.

Kinema of Salt Lake Is a Picture House of Beauty

A MODEL of artistry and comfort, the new Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City, was formally opened Saturday afternoon, February 14. The theatre is a vision of beauty; nothing has been overlooked for the accommodation of a discriminating audience. From box office to screen it represents the last word in moving picture theatre construction.

A novel lighting effect forms an important part of the general decorative scheme. The lighting is indirect, no fixtures being in sight. The light is so diffused that the screen is unusually clear and free from shadows though the house is at no time in darkness. Two thousand and one hundred electric lamps are used for illumination purposes.

The ventilating system is of the most modern and approved type. During the winter months the smokeladen air is drawn through a huge reverberating reservoir and is thoroughly washed and cleaned before being forced into the building by way of mushroom ventilators under the seats. The same system is pursued in the summer save the heating plenum is converted into a cool chamber. The air in the auditorium undergoes a complete change every three minutes. William Cutts is the manager of the house.

Hugh Walpole Sees Ince Studios.

Among last week's visitors at the Thomas H. Ince studios was Hugh Walpole, celebrated English novelist and author of scores of books that have enjoyed popularity throughout the universe. Mr. Walpole is on a tour of America, lecturing on literary topics in many principal cities, and during his stay at the Ince plant he took occasion to interview Thomas H. Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan.

National Association Mail Barrage Restrains "Flu" Epidemic Hysteria

IN spite of the fact that theatres in hundreds of towns throughout the country have been closed on account of the epidemic of influenza, the special committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, consisting of John C. Flinn, John M. Quinn and Frederick H. Elliott, feels that the situation is now well in hand and that the epidemic of hysteria, which has been even more destructive of public morale than the influenza has been destructive of life and health, has passed its peak.

The national association committee's campaign has been productive of most satisfactory results. Besides providing trailers for all the motion picture news weeklies, the committee sent out complete sets of literature to every exhibitor in the country and to municipal health and school authorities in all the larger cities and villages. This literature urged co-operation all along the line and mapped out a course of procedure in case a movement to close should assume menacing proportions.

Reports Show Many Closed.

Through the medium of hundreds of telegrams sent to exchange managers and film boards of trade, a fairly accurate line on the number of towns already closed was obtained, and in each instance a veritable parcel post barrage was laid down. Reports from many of the towns affected are to the effect that the authorities have ordered the reopening of the theatres.

In the Charlotte, N. C., territory sixty-eight towns were reported closed on account of the epidemic. The St. Louis Film Board of Trade reported fifty towns closed and the Minneapolis board reported 100 closed. Seattle reported fifteen, Chicago twenty, Denver ten, Kansas City ten, and telegrams from some twenty-five other centers reported from two to five towns closed in their respective territories. Accompanying most of these reports were requests for sets of the committee's literature.

St. John Theatre Still Open.

While there are something over 100 cases of influenza in St. John, N. B., no steps toward the closing of the theatres have been taken as yet. All the published advice has included the warning to stay away from theatres or public places when having a cold, but the epidemic is of a mild type and it seems unlikely that it will be considered necessary to shut up the motion picture houses.

Spokane Houses Close One Hour an Afternoon

THE influenza epidemic has reached such proportions in the Pacific Northwest that over fifty towns have ordered their theatres closed entirely, and Spokane has ordered its theatres to close for one hour every afternoon for the complete airing of the houses.

Most of the towns that are closed are small ones in Washington and Idaho in the vicinity of Spokane. Although there are numbers of cases in western Washington, there is practically no closing. The epidemic is now on the decrease in Seattle and no restrictions whatever have been made on the theatres or other gatherings.

There are not so many cases in Oregon as in Washington and no closings have been ordered. It is not thought likely that many more closings will take place, because the tendency among the larger cities has been to take the situation coolly, not to talk about it and not to order closings. The smaller towns will no doubt be guided by their attitude. The largest town now closed is Ellensburg, Washington.

Demand Continues for Fox Revivals.

News from the office of Louis Rosenbluh, the executive of the New York Exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, confirms the wide demand existing from exhibitors for the Fox News Reel, Fox Entertainments, and the revivals of the six super-pictures, "A Daughter of the Gods," "The Honor System," "Salome," "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables" and "A Tale of Two Cities" The revival of "A Daughter of the Gods," with the novel singing and dancing act introduced by William Fox, is meeting with exceptional favor everywhere it is booked. Extra performances were given at Jamaica, Long Island, this week owing to the demand for "The Sea Maidens," who comprise as pretty a lot of entertainers ever booked at a moving picture theatre. The act has been handsomely staged with a special and elaborate scenic setting and is effectively costumed.

Recurrence of Influenza Closes Many Theatres Along West Coast

CALIFORNIA is undergoing another siege of influenza and theatres in many places are being closed by local health boards. Houses are remaining open in the larger cities of the state, and it is believed that the example that is being set will prevent the wholesale closing of theatres, such as was the case a year ago.

At the commencement of the second week of February, twenty-two towns in the territory served by San Francisco film exchanges had a ban against theatres and public gatherings, as compared with five the preceding week. These were Clovis, Corning, Davis, Escalon, Esparto, Fresno, Gustine, Grafton, Hanford, Lemoore, Los Banos, Mare Island, Madera, Merced, McCloud, Petaluma, Pleasanton, Red Bluff, Sanger, Tulare, Visalia and Woodland.

Berkeley Order Rescinded.

Berkeley theatres were closed for two days when the city council rescinded the order of the health officer. The three leading houses of that city joined in an advertising campaign, advising people to go to theatres to forget the "flu" and get rid of fear. Attention was directed to the fact that these theatres are fumigated twice daily. The city council of Marysville is permitting theatres to remain open, but has ordered that these be fumigated at least once a week

The board of trustees of Jackson has abolished dancing, but the moving picture house has been permitted to remain open, if fumigated three times a week. The organized theatre men at Fresno have taken legal action against the board of health to prevent the enforcement of the influenza closing order, but in the meantime the houses are closed.

Many Kansas Houses Closed in Influenza Quarantine

A STRICT quarantine was placed on many Kansas towns in the week just closed because of the rapidly spreading influenza epidemic. The result is that many of the Kansas City exchanges have had numerous canceled contracts. However, the crest of the epidemic was believed to have been reached the week ending February 14, and film men are hoping that the ban will be lifted speedily.

All of Topeka, Kan., was placed under quarantine February 9. City health authorities have closed all places of amusement at Lawrence, Kan., also. The order did not close the public schools.

Many smaller towns in Kansas and some towns in Missouri also have been placed under the ban, according to reports reaching Kansas City.

The disease seemed to be on the decline in Kansas City, however. Fewer cases were being reported by the health authorities daily, and it was believed that the worst was over There was no quarantine in Kansas City.

Theodore Williams, formerly Philadelphia manager of the General Film Exchange, and C. J. Tevlin, recently with Realart, has joined the National Theatre forces, in Philadelphia, under Harvey Day.

Riesenfeld Books Pathe Review.

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, has booked the Pathe Review for an indefinite period.

Mr. Riesenfeld was most anxious to obtain the Pathe Review, because of the wide variety of subjects it contains weekly. He has been particularly impressed by the latest novelty introduced in the Review, Julian Ollendorff's "Spirit of the Dance" series, in which the foremost dancers of the world will appear. The slow motion demonstration which is featured weekly, was another appealing subject for Dr. Riesenfeld, because of its popularity with motion picture theatre goers.

Books "The Sagebrusher" for Washington Theatre

THAT a succession of big pictures made under the same guiding hand build exhibitor confidence and create a heavy volume of business for the next production to come from the same maker, is evidenced by the success of Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher," the second Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors production. This producetion, distributed through Hodkinson, is the third winning picture made in California by Benjamin B. Hampton, the previous two having been "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold."

Tom Moore, the Washington, D. C., exhibitor, has booked "The Sagebrusher" for immediate presentation in his biggest first-run house, and A. G. Talbot, Denver exhibitor, has booked it for his America Theatre, where "Desert Gold" and "The Westerners" both played to record business. The Jake Wells houses in Norfolk and Richmond have also made first-run bookings for quick play dates.

"The Sagebrusher" has been booked by the following theatres: the Palace, Wichita, Kan.; Rex, Racine, Wis.; Columbia, Peoria, Ill.; Liberty, Davenport, Ia.; La Salle, La Salle, Ill.; Majestic, Erie, Pa.; Rialto, Kewanee, Ill.; Gold, Madison Square and Vendome, Chicago; Princess, Terre Haute; Grand, Williamsport ,Pa.; Lyric, Fort Collins; Wonderland, Clinton, Ia.; and by several hundred other theatres tributary to these larger houses in the territory.

Selznick Continues Buying Stories, Planning Big Achievements for 1920

IN support of a recent statement made to the trade to the effect that the Selznick organization expected to surpass its former achievements within the coming year, the Selznick offices have made some important announcements which bear out the original statement. In fact, progressiveness and a means to a worth-while goal are seen in each of the statements which follow.

Among the major announcements of the week from the Selznick offices is the one announcing the purchase by Myron Selznick of five new stories for screen production. Despite the fact that Mr. Selznick has purchased more than a score of good stories since the first of the year, he continues to obtain them with a view of obtaining as many worth-while stories as possible.

Michael J. Phillips, well-known author, has sold his "Toll of the Wilderness" to Mr. Selznick. It has been given the production title of "The Wilderness Fear." The story originally appeared in Munsey's Magazine and tells of the regeneration of a selfish business man. "Heart of Flame" is the title of another story just purchased from Robert Alexander Wason.

"Poor Margaret Kirby" Secured.

Kathleen Norris, who since 1910 has been a consistent contributor to the more popular magazines, is the author of "Poor Margaret Kirby," which Mr. Selznick has purchased. This story was published in the Saturday Evening Post in 1913. "The Way of a Maid," a story by Rex Taylor of Hollywood, has also been purchased.

An original story titled "Daphne, Co-Respondent," was purchased from Marc Connelly, author of many vaudeville sketches. Mr. Connelly has left for Florida, where he is at work on another scenario, besides preparing a musical comedy for Miss Irene Franklin and Burton Greene.

Jack Costello and Bobby Agnew have been signed for parts in "The Prince of Pines," by Richard L'Estrange, casting director. This is the new Benton George production. Agnew will have the role of Tommy and Costello the part of Jacques. Mary Brennan, child player, attached her signature by making an "X" mark to a contract which gives her the role of Baby Rosemary in the Eugene O'Brien production "A Fool and His Money."

A group of players including Thurston Hall, William Davidson, Bobby Agnew and Miss Anna Lehr have left for Waterville, N. H., where they will take part in the outdoor lumber camp scenes of the Selznick special production, "The Prince of Pines." The story is by Willard Mack and the continuity by R. Cecil Smith.

Success Attends Showing of Industrial Picture

THE first serious and systematic effort to present a special industrial picture at Toronto moving picture theatres was conducted recently when the Seaman Kent Company, Ltd., 263 Wallace avenue, Toronto, arranged for the showing of a film which depicted the manufacture of a new hardwood flooring.

This reel was booked for three-day runs at seven different Toronto theatres and complimentary tickets were distributed among patrons at the various theatres before the presentation of the picture. Numbered admission cards, which bore details of the product, the name of the company and the theatres at which the picture was scheduled to be screened, were used for the purpose, and the company arranged to pay for the price of admission and ticket tax when the cards were presented. The tickets enabled the user to enjoy the whole performance at the theatre as a "guest" of the company.

The stunt worked out very well for all concerned. The company was enabled to have its film screened at theatres in all parts of the city at a cost that was not out of proportion to the advertising secured. The theatres did not lose because the company paid for the tickets, while the patrons were entertained with an industrial film that was interesting and educational.

North Dakota Exhibitors Prepare to Fight for Repeal of Sunday Law

EXHIBITORS of North Dakota are preparing for one of the bitterest fights in the state, with the repeal of Sunday closing their goal at the referendum election to be conducted throughout the state on March 16.

Representative exhibitors from all over the state gathered at Fargo on February 4 and 5 and completed an organization known as the North Dakota Exhibitors' Association, which has as its avowed object the repeal of the state enactment against Sunday theatrical performances. Samuel P. Cornish, of Fargo, was elected president. The other officers are Gus Windgren, Philip W. Myers and Joseph Isaacs, vice-presidents; Floyd Junkin, Fargo, secretary, and Amos Tweeden, treasurer.

Among the features of the campaign to be waged by the organization are: Showing special slides and trailers in all theatres of the state advocating removal of Sunday restrictions on theatres; printing of a magazine for widespread dissemination of information on Sunday closing laws, throughout the state; distribution in all motion picture houses of the state of thousands of circulars printed by the Independent Legion explaining the injustices of Sunday closing laws; raising of a substantial fund to conduct propaganda against the law.

Independent Legion to Help.

At the meeting last week, the exhibitors made tentative plans for co-operating with the 30,000 members of the Independent Legion in the state to combat the North Dakota Ministerial Association and the Nonpartisan League, which are said to be allied in the fight. The exhibitors will distribute at their theatres all pamphlets, circulars and handbills brought out by the legion.

Many Slides and Trailers.

Hundreds of slides and trailers are now being made to send to the exhibitors over the state. These will contain the message, "Do as you please. Vote to make the state free."

Following the meeting, H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the Exhibitors' Protective League, who, with several of the directors of the league, was present at the organization of the association announced: "The North Dakota Exhibitors' Association has the backing of the Exhibitors' Protective League. We will give them our moral support in their fight against the injustices of Sunday closing and we will help them in every way possible. The two organizations are working in close harmony.

Delete Advertising in Copy.

"The Independent Legion is composed of 30,000 lovers of personal liberty. They are among the most substantial men of the state and are doing all in their power to call a halt to intolerance. The legion is preparing thousands of circulars for general distribution throughout the state. Many of these will be handed out by the exhibitors at their theatres."

Several large pictures now being marketed through the Northwest are being considered by the league officials from their advertising standpoints, Mr. Mitchell said. It is probable that in some instances the exhibitor members will be advised to eliminate part of the film and notify the advertisers that because the producers did not share part of the pay they received for the advertisements they did not appear on the exhibitors' screens, he declared. This action was considered at the last meeting of the league officials in Minneapolis on February 3. The meeting of the officials has been set for May 4, unless an emergency should necessitate a meeting before that date.

Mastbaum Circuit Books "Lone Wolf's Daughter"

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the powerful W. W. Hodkinson release, has been contracted for immediate presentation for the entire Mastbaum and Nirdlinger chain of theatres in Philadelphia under contracts made by the Stanley Booking Company.

The production will have a downtown first run in one of the organization's big Market street theatres and full weeks in its big regional first runs in the West Philadelphia, Kensington and Germantown sections of Philadelphia. The Stanley organization and its several chief executives have consistently approved the big productions released through the W. W. Hodkinson organization and have given the majority of the Hodkinson releases widespread bookings in their chain of theatres, beginning with "Sahara," Louise Glaum's first big J. Parker Read, Jr., production last summer. "Sahara" is said to have played a larger number of days in Mastbaum and Stanley-booked houses than any picture contracted for by that organization in the past two years.

Koplar's St. Louis Chain.

Another big organization which contracted for the Louise Glaum production is the Harry Koplar chain of theatres in St. Louis, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" being contracted for early presentation at eleven Koplar houses, all of which enjoyed profiable runs on "Sahara" in the early fall of 1919.

Many other important first runs elsewhere closed contracts for "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

Pretty Displays in Small Spaces Mark Brooklyn Strand Publicity

EDWARD HYMAN has not much space at his command in the Brooklyn newspapers, for even across the river they charge a heavy line rate, but this two-column display, 35 lines deep, is a very good example of what can be done with a little space and brain work. We would like more type and less lettering, but in so small a space the hand lettering does get the title over better than the average newspaper display face, as Nelson Bell, of Washington, has pointed out. Note particularly the border frame. It works unusually well.

Here's One Man Who Never Curses His Printer; Says It's Unnecessary

H. E. BOATRIGHT, of the Tabor Theatre, Tabor, Ia., says he never cusses out his printer. He says he can get what he wants by asking for it, and they usually have what is needed. That man doesn't know how fortunate he is, for a poor compositor can do a lot to spoil a good display. Mr. Boatright sends in an all-type cross page fives. He had some mats ordered, but that is all the good it did him, so he went ahead and did the best he could with type.

A Cross Page Fives in All Type That Gets the Message Over.

The layout is by no means bad, and about the only suggestion we can offer is that it might have paid to have brought up the questions to arouse curiosity. The middle bank reads "Are the Orientals more passionate lovers—more vindicative haters than those of the Occident? See the vast difference in character in the two people in "Eye for Eve'." Putting this in question form might have bought some selling curiosity, and the space was sufficiently large to permit it to be played up properly, but we think Mr. Boatright has done very well as it stands. The big lines are given the proper emphasis both through placement and typography and we agree with him that the panels "Daring in Intensity" and "Boundles in Beauty" helped to sell.

Kansas Exhibitor Paints His Own Scenery for Lobby and Features

HERBERT J. THATCHER, of the Strand, Salina, Kansas, is more fortunate than most of his brother managers in that he can paint his own scenery when he wants a special lobby or production. His latest stunt was a prologue for "Broken Blossoms," styled "The Yellow Man" in which an Oriental delivered a Confuscian sermon from a pseudo-Chinese text. It was something different and put the audience into an appreciative frame of mind since it was calculated to throw interest to the Chinaman in the story. If you have any skill at drawing, you will find painting scenery much easier than it sounds. Look into it some time.

Benday and Line Effectively Used in Combination Hippodrome Space

MOST of the space from Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, are all line work, but now and then Mr. Franklin makes good use of benday for his backgrounds. He does not employ enough to destroy the light effect, but it works well, where not too much is done it makes the space even more effective. We have shown innumerable examples of Mr. Franklin's style, but this four threes for Nazimova is so much above the average that we give it space here. Mr. Franklin has learned that poster proportions give the best layout as a rule and a four threes or a five fours will be much more conspicuous than equivalent space in a narrow measure. The cut above could never have looked so well as a two sixes, for example.

Sometimes Dignity Is Better Than Jazz in Getting Over Big Features

SOMETIMES dignity works better than jazz in getting over a subject. It does not always follow that the noisiest display is going to make the most business. C. E. Tipton, of the Orpheum, Huntington, W. Va., felt that he could do more with "The Miracle Man" if he went at it with a dignified approach and he made an appeal to Oscar A. Doob, of the Cincinnati Paramount office. Mr. Doob saw the point and he turned out a series of announcements which are classics of their kind, simple, sincere glorifications of the play which told what it was instead of how great it was supposed to be.

"Great" was the strongest adjective he employed, yet you felt, after reading, that here was a play in a million. People crowded the house in spite of storms and they were there in just the right frame of mind. They went prepared to like it. All of the underworld cuts were thrown out. The only pictorial matter used in the advertising was a set of cuts showing only the figure of the man himself and the strong face and rugged poses harmonized well with the subject matter of the spaces. That man Doob seems to be able to make all the changes from a high hat to a fright wig. He is there forty ways.

Try Your Advertising on Yourself

Some day when you can spare a few hours try your advertising out on yourself. Get a pile of your advertisements and look them over. Try to figure out if the stuff could get your money if you didn't happen to own the house. See if you are selling or merely using newspaper space. See if you think you are selling up to the limit or barely getting by. If you are honest with yourself you will improve your stuff and make more money.

"Broken Blossoms" and Slapstick Should Not Show on Same Programs

EVIDENTLY there are still some who consider that a pre-determined number of reels constitute a program, no matter what those reels may be. Here is a cross page twelves from the Modern, Providence, which would be better if less crowded. It offers "Broken Blossoms" and Fatty Arbuckle in "The Garage" on the same bill. Naturally they played to big business, but we think they will lose in the long run, for the people who came to see the Griffith play will resent the crude comedy and the comedy lovers may not have appreciated the drama.

There are some few plays so well done, so gripping and compelling that they should be regarded as in a class by themselves, and "Broken Blossoms" is one of these. It should either be run alone with or without a prologue, or it should be preceded only by carefully chosen scenics. A news reel can be tolerated, though it is out of place, but a comedy is a decidedly poor booking and the better the comedy the greater the offense. When you get a really good play, send your patrons out still thinking about that play and not about the Ford car jokes of the comedy. And from another angle the Arbuckle could have been used for a business getter another week, for it is one of the best advertised comedies Arbuckle ever did.

Forty Reasons Boom Benny Leonard in His Ascher Serial "The Evil Eye"

ASCHER'S ENTERPRISES, INC., is sending out a novel advertising stunt for Benny Leonard in Roy MacCardell's serial, "The Evil Eye." It is a mailing package printed "A Pack of Why," and below "Forty Units of Reason." Inside are forty-two slips of white paper, ¾ by 4, the forty reasons, a title and a mailing card asking for further information. Curiosity will probably carry the average recipient through the pack, and the value of the stunt lies in the fact that each argument is separately presented and holds the undivided attention for the moment. The same amount of argument in the shape of a large sheet would not be read, or, if read, would not be as thoroughly absorbed. It is just another variant of the series slide, invented years ago by Hay and Nicholas, but it gives a new twist and offers a suggestion to house advertisers.

Got Out a Special Throwaway Booming First National Lehrman Comedy Film

JOHN L. JOHNSTON, of Milwaukee and St. Paul generally, got out a special throwaway for the first First National Lehrman comedy. It was an 8½ by 11 sheet, printed on both sides, the reverse in a good open type display. The cut shows the pictorial side and the arrangement of the lines. The bulk of the space is given the comedy on the proposition that if that gets over the feature will also appeal, and apart from the flambolant top line the copy is excellently written. This line is written to match the cows and chickens, but it is a little too strong, and "most unique" would have been better than "greatest." For another house Mr. Johnson got out a fake extra for "The Third Degree."

Another Idea in Cartoon Displays Is Used to Work for Harold Lloyd

RECENTLY we showed some cartoon advertisements from S. Barret McCormick, and now comes another angle of the same idea from the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle. It is not a copy of the McCormick idea, for Dr. Clemmer has been using cartoons off and on for a number of years, but this strip for a Harold Lloyd comedy shows what can be done to make a real comedy. The space is a five fifteens, with the cartoon taking three inches at the bottom, with rhymed lines above. This works better than a non-committal sketch and sold enough tickets to more than pay for the fifteen inches of space taken.

CLIFF A. CARROLL makes one of his infrequent appearances with a batch of stuff from the New Orpheum, Utica, N. Y. He has to some degree, but he still gives too even a display for the best results, though his work does show a decided improvement. His spaces are single sevens in one paper and a double three and a half to five in another.

Three Single Sevens From Cliff Carroll.

We take it that probably one paper charges for breaking the column rule, which explains the single column space, which seldom, if ever, is as effective as the double space. It is not easy to get a long title well displayed in a single column space which, at best, is little more than two inches wide, and when he tries to get distinction with twelve point border, his type space is less than the double inch. It cannot be worked effectively.

A Double Five Advertising Two Shows.

If you will compare the double column space with the left hand display of the trio of singles, you will note that the text is practically the same, but the additional three inches and the shape of the space makes a wonderful difference in the results, even when you remember that the double column advertisement is not reduced as much as the three ones. For example, the "Harry" in "Harry Carey" is much smaller in the single, while the "Carey" is the same size in both displays. The "Harry" could have better displayed in the single had the compositor cut down that "Now 'til 11 P. M." to let it in. But Miss Barriscale's name is given a much better display and the lower panel is more than twice as conspicuous. The results are so much better that we think it would pay to break the rules even if there is a charge for this. But the great trouble with Mr. Carroll's stuff is that he is trying to do too much with the space at his command.

You cannot adequately advertise two days in a seven inch space. This is proven in the other single column displays where but a single day is handled. And here by cutting down the display for that "U-also-C" a greater space could be given the titles. Mr. Carroll is trying to make his space work far too hard. That left hand single, for example, not only carries four main titles, but it carries a six line underline for the entire week to come. The job is too big for the space. Were we in Mr. Carroll's place we would advertise but one day at a time and make that a double column, getting a distinctive signature to render unnecessary the heavy border.

Used a Bird to Build for a Run-Down House

HARRY H. WENDLAND has moved from Sacramento to Fresno where he has been building up the Strand, lately taken over by J. Walter Byrd. The Strand enjoyed a reputation none too good, and it was not easy to get the proper sort of crowd in, but strong advertising did it, and a parrot helped a lot. The parrot was not a steal from Ruffner but was suggested by the owner's surname.

For a time the Strand was closed for repairs and disinfecting and before the reopening the bird made his appearance with no supporting text. After people began to wonder who was paying space rates for the picture the teaser carried the addition of "If the old bird says it's so—it's so," and this broke over into a four fulls signed by Mr. Byrd followed by another signed by Wendland. By this time the entire town was interested and the citizens were informed that other things than murder were now barred at the house. Now the parrot is a combined trademark and mascot.

Mr. Wendland pins his faith to the framed display. For a time he did not get very good results in the papers, but he knew the way out. He found the door to the composing room and was nice to the men who actually set his displays as well as to the foreman and now he can get about what he wants. His spaces vary in size and in a threes or twos we think he uses too heavy a frame for the space, but in the larger sizes he works to better advantage, though he does not realize that his hand lettering does not look as well as all type.

This seven elevens (it sounds like the craps "gig,") is built up from a press book cut of Miss Brady, a skyline picture from an old magazine, some stock border and lettered by the house card writer. Outside of the lettering it is good, if rather too black, but Mr. Wendland should get hold of some Los Angeles Sunday papers and look at the Grauman ads, which are about the last words in type and picture combinations.

Used All-Type Displays and Put a Feature Over

ALTHOUGH there is an ample supply of excellent cut material to be had for "Blind Husbands," Frank J. Shea, of the Palace, Little Rock, Ark., used all type and got his feature over. In default of cut attractors he used the situations from the play, and got interest through appeal to the intelligence instead of through the pictorial side. The better display is a three nines shown here.

The panel at the right gives the high points briefly and directly and should get the interest. Set as some compositors might try it, with a mass of heavy type capitals, the stuff would not get over, but Mr. Shea uses rather light faces, plenty of white space for spacing, and gets a strong effect. Capitals are very sparingly used. Much of the success of the advertisement is due to this moderation. A five sixes is less successful. The shape does not give as good opportunity for display. It gets a broad line for the title, but the all capital bank in the upper left hand corner does not work as well as the upper and lower in the other display, and this spoils that portion of the space. The two, taken together, form an interesting study in space proportioning.

And before you stop looking at them, notice the rule work. This gives all of the emphasis of a twelve point solid border with a more graceful outline. In this respect it works better than the linear border most often used when lightness is sought. He likes the six line effect better than the four line, but both are good.

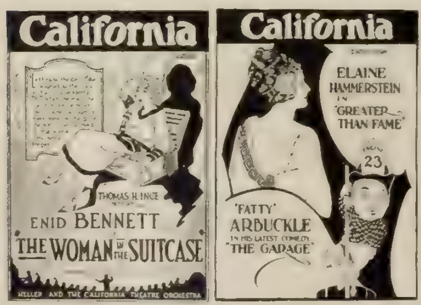
San Francisco Theatre Plays to Titles Only

LIKE most of the western exhibitors, C. M. Pincus, of the California Theatre, San Francisco, trusts largely to title to get his attractions over. The pair of three nines shown are Sunday spaces, and show up well, since the title is all he seeks to tell. The lightline paneling gives a good effect without making the display too black and helps the use of black mass, which is better handled in the Bennett announcement than in the double title, and for the Bennett story he has picked up a strong selling situation play up. He does not always use all line, for another display shows effective use of half tone for "Behind the Door"; the still of the fight scene being cut out and provided with a top drawn to suggest the locale of the story.



A Pair of Three Nines from San Francisco.

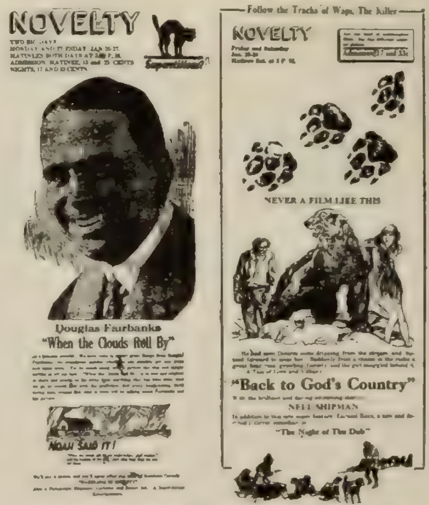
Regular Arrangement Is Against Strong Display

REGULAR arrangement of banks and cuts is almost always against the best display. Stanley Koch, manager of the Novelty, Anthony, Kansas, sends in a couple of three sixteens which would have been better with less cut material. It is seldom that more than a single cut is needed to get attention, and sometimes more will kill a display. Mr. Koch seems to use all he can get from the exchange.

Take this display for Fairbanks, for example. There are three cuts, each one good for a single advertisement, but not all are needed for a single space.



NOVELTY
Superstitious?
Douglas Fairbanks
"When the Clouds Roll By"
NOAH SAID IT!
Follow the Tracks of Wapi, The Killer
NOVELTY
NEVER A FILM LIKE THIS
"Back to God's Country"
NELL SHIPMAN
"The Night of The Dub"

A Pair of Three Sixteens With Too Many Cuts.

It resolves itself into a matter of getting all of the material into the given space. That black cat would have made an excellent foundation for an advertisement all by itself if surrounded by some of the talk from the press book on the superstition angle. It would have made a capital three six or sevens with the Fairbanks name in a better type display and without the portrait cut. Then the portait could have been used for a three twelves, or the ark could be made the basis of another three sixes.

In a country town it might even be better to split the space into two advertisements on different pages and get a double effect. We certainly would not use a cut which required the condensation of the name of so popular a star, save in a district where a majority of the patrons could not read—and then we would not use the papers at all. Too much is as bad as too little or even a bit worse than not enough. In the other display the "Follow the tracks of Wapi" should have run directly above the pad tracks, and these pads should have run down to a bank of copy with the cut below. Then the smaller cut of the dog sledge should have been omited to gain white space and the suggestion of open display. Both advertisements are too crowded, largely because there are too many cuts.

Riot of Hand Work for "Pollyanna" at Clune's

NOTHING but hand work seems to have been used by Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for "Pollyanna." Even the small spaces at the end of the run were hand lettered where type would have been more effective and in the large displays shown a spidery effect is distressing to the eye. The fact that Miss Pickford is to be seen in "Pollyanna" is apparent, but the mass will be puzzled over by few. From the fact that the four tens uses a press book original design for a basis, we infer that the original was double size, or larger. In this proportion the lettering probably showed up well, but when reduced the letters grew attenuated.

A drawn design will coarsen or reduce in proportion and stand either change, but a letter which may look all right in the original may reduce to too thin a line in the cut. This is probably the chief trouble with both of these displays, though under no circumstances is there good reason why type should not have been used for the bulk of the argument. Because the press book lettering was too small to work with the reduced window design, the name was specially drawn, though the artist might with profit have followed the press book suggestion in this instance. He would have gained a more attractive letter. The result obtained is by no means happy.
